There are many scientific reasons as to why woman rarely conceive as a result of rape. A ten-year study in Minnesota showed no pregnancies from 3,500 forcible rape cases. In Czechoslavakia a study documented that 22 abortions out of 86,000 were done for rape. A pregnancy can usually be prevented if the victim seeks hospital treatment immediately.

The editors stated that before the '73 decision most women's recourse was to "resort to having the abortion performed by a back-alley butcher armed with little more than a coathanger." I will bring to your attention that in 1972, 140 women died in the U.S. from all forms of abortion, legal, illegal, and spontaneous. In Sweden and Denmark, illicit abortions increased by 400 percent and sociologists say that according to the new law only 15 percent of these women would meet the qualifications. In 1975 four women died from illegal abortions while 27 died from legal ones in the U.S.

80 to 90 percent of all illegal abortions were performed by doctors, many of whom now perform them legally. Before 1973 a doctor was at the serious risk of losing his license to practice, his family, and his reputation if he was found guilty of performing abortions, so you can be assured that he was extremely careful — for his own sake!

I question that "permitting abortions to be performed in the relative safety of a modern well-equipped hospital or clinic proved beneficial to millions of women." Abortions — safe? Now ignorance is glaring. In 1978, three reporters from the Chicago Sun Times went undercover to the Michigan Avenue Clinic, "Special Report on Abortion Profiteers." They found the doctors and the employees had a quota to fill and that they received a bonus when going beyond the quota. When the reporters inquired about counseling the women, the employees responded that time didn't permit with so many clients coming in. Besides, if they did, the clients would become nervous and leave. They do not even have time to do the necessary tests such as the pregnancy tests.

The danger persists after the abortion due to complications such as hemorrhage, perforation of the uterus, peritonitis, uterine infection, hepatitis, prematurity in subsequent births, first trimester miscarriages double, second trimester miscarriages increase by tenfold, sterility, RH factor sensitization, uterine rupture, adherent placenta, to name a few.

Psych-harm psychiatric studies show that after an abortion women suffer from "serious self reproach and guilt," various psychosomatic symptoms, "gross psychiatric breakdowns," and even suicide.

Abortion made legal would reduce incidence of child abuse: instead it has increased 400 percent since 1973. Legalized abortion would better today's sexual morality, however teenage pregnancies have increased now that abortion has become a "back-up to contraceptive failure" for the present "do your own thing" lifestyle.

Next I question the editor as to what is wrong with requiring the clients to view photographs of a developing fetus; after all they do have the right to know what they are doing. Besides those pictures are beautiful! As for "parental consent if 18 or under," a person must have parental permission if they are 18 or under to have their ears pierced at the Piercing Pagoda. Certainly life or the taking of life is more serious than getting one's ears pierced.

Abortion is not solely a religious issue, but a moral and a social issue. Can't one see that something is seriously wrong when one hears that in 1978, 1,700,000 babies were killed by abortion and a total of 8,000,000 have never been given the chance to live since the "wise" Supreme Court ruling?

A baby unwanted, unloved? I ask, by whom? There is not a baby that is not wanted or unlovable by some person. Maybe the natural mother may not want or love the child but there are many who would be grateful to have the child.

I say that there is something wrong with a legal system that gives the fetus rights to property, and rights to inheritance, a legal system that protects a blade of grass but will not protect the life of the unborn. Maybe I'll think twice and maybe I'll change my mind if you can get the woman's and the fetus' consent to the abortion.

PAC-MANIA Is Everywhere

By MARY ANNE GRANGER

The student takes his last quarter from his pocket and pushes it in to the machine's slot. He grabs the lever below the viewing screen and is ready once again to go after the many colorful dots and monsters that flash merrily across the screen. This time, he will win. Well, maybe. He is a victim, a hopeless victim, of Pac-Man fever.

Pac-Man is everywhere. The computer video game is in bars, restaurants, mini-markets and the Connelly Center. There is a hit song featuring the lyrics, "I've got Pac-Man fever, it's driving me crazy." And Villanova students are joining this latest craze.

The Connelly Center boasts two Pac-Man games, both of which are heavily used. An afternoon visit to the games room in the Connelly Center finds both machines in use with crowds at least two deep around each one. In other words, the Pac-Man addict must wait his turn. Or her turn. Women seem to find this game preferable to several other video games available.

Why is this game so popular? "It's a challenge to try and get the high score, which is what Louie's doing now," said senior Kevin Miller, as his friend Louie Garcia prepared to play another game. Miller has scored up to 205,000 points in his Pac-Man career, and says he and a friend can play for up to an hour on the game for only 50 cents. "Most people only last five minutes," noted another Pac-Man man.

"That is the game most women seem to play," said junior Chris Heaney. "I guess they would rather run around and catch cute little fellows than save the world like you do in "Defender" and other games." And why does she play? "Every once in a while I like to try — it's something where for a while you're in a different world." she said.

The rules of the game are simple. The object is to maneuver the machine's lever around well enough to make your little muncher eat the many dots flashing across the 19-inch screen and still escape the four monsters; Shadow, Speedy, Bashful and Pokey. You can also eat the four special dots that will render the monsters helpless, for a while at least. The more you eat, the more points you score and that means you win. The idea is simple, as a recent Philadelphia Inquirer article on the game recently noted: Kill or be killed. Players are constantly searching for escape. And enough people are searching that these and other video games can take in from $300 to $1000 a week.

People who play well are often admired and envied by other would-be champions. Those who cannot play well are simply humiliated, particularly when the game is over and the machine emits a loud, unmelodious and depressing gurgle that represents a loser.

However, the etiquette of the game does not call for humiliating losers. It calls for stepping aside to let the others try. It calls for quietly and coolly lining your quarter up next to the others waiting their turn on the game. And, especially, it calls for not hitting the machine. Video games don't tilt.

1990 Cable Market: Age Of Viewers Lib

By KATHI A. IANNACONE

Within the next decade technological advances will affect many phases of people's lives. These discoveries bring about obvious changes in the way the mass media is presented to the public. Therefore the media, as a form of communication, will develop as an expression of these advances.

In 1990 the impact that cable television will have on American domestic life may involve more dangers than the promoters would have the public believe. The idea of a two-way cable system immediately implies the thought of extremely futuristic beings as well as it being an immediate threat to cable subscriber's privacy. It is important to remember, however, that the year 1990 is merely eight years away. All of the "possibilities" of communication are soon to become realities.

Some of the technological advances that are being developed are: catalogue shopping at home, banking transactions, and voting.

Cable TV, particularly pay cable, is going to change the most democratic form of American entertainment. No one will be a prisoner of what ABC, NBC, or CBS has chosen to send through the cathode-rays. This is to be the age of Viewers' Lib. It is to be a time when each American has at his fingers the engineering capacity to become a television programmer.

Each viewer will have in his power to choose what he wishes to view. Never again will a person have to consider what a network has provided for his watching pleasure.

With hundreds of cable channels, the audiences will subsequently become significantly smaller. Presumably, this narrow audience will be more selective in the shows they choose to watch. Likewise, the advertisers, realizing the specialized audiences that they are forced to appeal to, will begin to become more selective in the programs on which they chose to market their products.

While the TV networks will continue to send out free programs on one hand, they will be producing cable programs on the other; cable programs will begin to capture the technological advances that have been made in this decade.

It is important to note some of the possibilities for cable TV. An electric juke box which could deliver pop and rock music with performers seen as well as heard is one possibility which is not as far off as may be expected.

In addition, there is the possibility of an all games station with two-way selection buttons. This could provide the audience with the playing power that the shows offer. The two-way system allows the audience to actively participate in the game and actually win prizes.

Exotic shopping guides equipped with buttons to press for ordering merchandise may also be available to potential cable subscribers.

Ethnic channels and specialized programming with fire, burglar, and police protection will be provided on this two way system as well.

It is also astounding to note that news "papers" may soon become news "channels" in which printed material appears on the TV screen. With this method potential readers can, with the push of a button, see a particular news page and even zoom in on an article or particular section of the page. This new news channel can also allow history to be preserved because with the selection of another channel past newspages can be summoned out of the computers memory and on to the TV screen.

The system of electronic mail could also be seen as a soon to be reality. Letters can be computerized messages which are bounced off satelites and sent over wires to the screen instead of being carried from the sender to the receiver. Electronic mail service could also speed up the time that it would normally take for a written letter to arrive at its destination. Within minutes any message could be transmitted to any part of the world.

In the home education is yet another possibility that the cable system may have to offer. It could revolutionize the educational system of the universe.

In future years, when students wish to study the examples of industry dominating a society, they will look to the never ending saga of cable television as a classic case study.

"Hams" Offer Free Phone Service

By ANNE N. SUYDAM

It seems these days that college students have less money to spend and what little they do have goes into video games or local bars. So many times a phone call home will take back seat to a night at "Kelly's." Well, students now have the chance to speak with the homestead for free. No more waiting for a clear phone or searching for the scarce, almost non-existent dime. The solution is the Amateur Radio Club (a.k.a. ham radio).

The club was started here at Villanova in 1918. It is now composed of ten members, whose president is Andrew King, a junior physics major.

One of the services the club has offered in the past is radio communication during the Special Olympics. "It is such a large operation that the coordinators really need a form of communication during the two days of events," explained King. He further stated that their service produced a more organized system for running the activities.

The newest idea, proposed by John Nuttall and which is now in operation, is the free service for students to call home. One of the stipulations is that the student must be from Maine, Michigan or south or west of Ohio, West Virginia and Virginia. "The vast majority of Villanova students seem to be from this area or maybe three hours away. We have to put a geographical limit because otherwise we would receive too large a number of interested students. This is on a trial basis right now," said King. The phone patching service is operated in cooperation with ham operators in either the student's home town or a near-by town. The Villanova operator will contact the other operator and work out a date and time to reach the relatives. "The control operator is in complete command. The student is our guest and we are glad to help but we must ask for patience and a following of our rules," added King.

The service is also offered to students whose homes are in foreign countries, as long as their country is on a "third party" list with the United States. To find out this information, the interested party must contact one of the ham operators.

Students who are interested in this service can contact the club through the mailbox in the Student Activities office or box 171 in Tolentine. The club is located on the second floor of Tolentine. The student should include both his and his relatives' names, addresses and phone numbers.

"There are no guarantees but we want to help as many people as we can. We hope it is a success and that we can continue this in the future," commented King.

V.U. Student Goes To Court

By TERESA CHASTANET

This past semester at Villanova was different from all previous ones, for me. I interned at the Delaware County Courthouse in Media, Pennsylvania, in the office of court services, the adult probation parole division. Through the Villanova University Internship Program, I was able to witness much of what I had been taught in the classroom.

The first few days at the courthouse were mainly geared toward orienting me to the different aspects of the department in which I would be working. The department consisted of 12 probation officers, one Chief Probation Officer, and the Director of Court Services. I was assigned to work with the Chief Probation Officer and two probation officers.

My first day at work was exactly that; a day of work. I learned how to do "intakes." After an individual is sentenced to probation by a judge, he must have an initial interview with a probation officer. At this interview, personal information is related to the probation officer, and recorded on what is called an intake sheet. At the same time, the individual is informed of the rules which will regulate his period of probation. After the individual has signed these papers, stating that he fully understands what is expected of him while he is serving his probation, and once he is assigned a probation officer, the individual is required to have his fingerprints taken and a photograph taken for his file.

Every individual on probation or parole has a file with all the facts of his case, and a page in the notebook of his probation officer. Every contact made with the probationer must be logged in twice, once in his folder, and again in the notebook. Every contact made with a third party regarding the probationer must be logged in twice, once in his folder and again in the notebook.

Another important aspect of my job was letter writing. In sending inter-office correspondences to a judge, it was necessary that the letter be brief and to the point, but at the same time detailed enough so as to familiarize the judge with the facts of the particular case. The telephone played a big role in the job of the probation officer. You might even say it was his "best friend." Calling clients and patient clinics required much time and patience. At times, it became necessary to call prisons and quite frequently I called the Federal Bureau of Investigation in Washington, D.C.

But perhaps of all the tasks, duties, and work experience that accompanied my internship, the most fascinating of times were those times that I visited the prisons. For various reasons, it becomes necessary for the probation officer to visit clients who are incarcerated. The heavy metal bars banging shut behind you as you proceed from one room to another, the guards with keys for every door in sight, and the guns are all realities of the system. But most of all, those incarcerated, their faces and their overall physical appearance, have become imprinted in my mind.

A big part of my job was dealing with people. This meant not only working with my fellow workers, but also catering to the needs of strangers. A day did not go by when I did not meet new people.

The student can receive up to 15 pass/fail credits for his internship. The type of internship and the amount of credits to be received are decided upon by the student and the Coordinator of the Internship Program for the College of Arts and Sciences, Dr. Albert J. Dorley Jr., assistant professor of history. Dr. Dorley's office is located in Vasey Hall, room 206. His office phone is 645-4686.

Playing Games

By ANNE N. BOYDAM

It was just one short week ago that we all were sliding around campus, bundling up to protect ourselves against the freezing weather. The accumulation of the snow and ice was so bad that it was a challenge to go anywhere outside the safe, warm domain of our dorm rooms. Just when it seemed that we would have to endure this abominable weather for another two months, Mother Nature started playing tricks with us.

Sunday was gorgeous; a blue sky, a bright sun and temperatures in the high 40s. Birds suddenly appeared from nowhere and a premature spring fever hit the campus. All of a sudden, people discarded their down jackets, mufflers, gloves, hats and boots and doned jeans, tee-shirts and tennis shoes. People were seen around campus throwing frisbees, footballs, and believe it or not, some were attempting to catch some rays.

Of course, this was the day that everyone must also catch up on their work from the previous week and the work they blew off on Friday and Saturday nights. "Sunday is the day of rest" does not hold up around most campuses. This past Sunday, however, people just did not care. They wanted to be out in the sun.

Monday was an exact duplicate of Sunday. The "Connelly Center hangers" suddenly appeared in large numbers and cutting class was a temptation hard to refuse. What a great feeling to know that maybe we had all miscalculated about the extent and length of the bitter winter weather.

Mother Nature again waved her wand and suddenly Tuesday was a nightmare. We woke up to snow, sleet and freezing weather. A frantic search for the recently packed-away winter clothes took place and once again we were all dressed as Antartic explorers, out to brave the elements. What's happening? As a result of these weather-games, coughing, sneezing and hacking is more common than not around here and students are forced to take that unbearable trek to the infirmary to be administered some sort of pill that does not work.

Spring semester is the craziest and most exciting time of the year but how are we expected to run our lives with any sort of order if we cannot even decide what to wear from one day to the next? Well, "patience is a virtue," so they say. While we are sitting around waiting for spring, we will just have to study (ha ha) and have some fun. Happy Wintering.

You Bet Your Life

By CAROL WARKOCZEWSKI

Why is everyone now turning to exercise? The answer is that physical fitness is a way to redeem yourself from a life of fast food, beer, and indulgence and it makes you look and feel good.

Research shows that vigorous exercise helps prevent heart attacks, aids weight control, instills a feeling of well being, and enhances creativity. It has also been of help to people with diabetes, ulcers, nervous tension, high blood pressure, back pain, depression, recurrent headaches and menstrual cramps. It cures hangovers, jet lag, constipation, and insomnia.

One interesting benefit of exercise is its mood elevating effect. During exercise there is an increase in the norepinephrine levels in the brain. Norepinephrine is a hormone that is necessary for the transmission of brain messages along certain nerves in the body. People who are happy have high levels of norepinephrine in the bloodstream, while those who are depressed have low levels.

There are many other ways in which exercise may improve your mood. Exercise increases the blood and oxygen supply to the brain. There is an increase in sweat production during exercise, which lowers the amount of salt in the body. And the more you exercise, the deeper you sleep. People who are free of depression and emotional problems tend to sleep deeply. One benefit is that it gives you a feeling of accomplishment. Any good feeling about yourself increases your mood. So get out your sneakers, tennis racquet, skiis, etc., and get positively addicted . . . to exercise!

Cars' Concert Needed Tuning Up

By CHRIS SLAWECKI
DEAN BALSAMINI

The Cars rolled into the Spectrum Monday night, kicking off about six weeks worth of touring. They were supported by the pop success of their latest album, Shake It Up, about 11,000 fans, Nick Lowe and friends.

Lowe deserves at the very least a passing mention, if only because his rough-edged rockability/new wave provided such a stark contrast to the monochrome electronic onslaught which followed. Nick's band was vibrant and alive, kicking out pop-rockers like Cruel To Be Kind, and Crackin' Up as if they still enjoyed them. Paul Carrack, his rather diminutive and affable ex-Squeeze keyboardist, was highlighted during Tempted, which met a warm response. Also in the band was Martin Belmont, the shaggy behemoth ex-Rumour guitarist, who was exceptional, strangling wonderful hot licks from his guitar and wrenching his body around in a rock'n'roll frenzy. Lowe managed to include his What's So Funny (About Peace Love and Understanding?) in an all-too-short set. Like most good pop music, it was fun. Smiles radiated from both the audience and stage when the set was done.

The Cars come onstage promptly at 9:30 and played a set so tight it almost sounded programmed. They opened with Since You're Gone, a pseudo-confession in which loneliness and pop bouyancy clash to create bittersweet tension quite beyond the scope of most AM pop. This tension seems to be exactly what the Cars want to create, even onstage. Ric Ocasek, the drive behind much of their material, stalks one side of the stage in leather pants, pointed shoes and mirror shades, like some kind of alienated, brooding praying mantis, while Elliot Easton claws huge, Fripp-sounding hooks from his guitar on the opposite side. In between pranced bassist Benjamin Orr, who shares lead vocal duties with Ocasek, this evening looked like one of Adam's Ants in a pirate outfit. It may have been that he wasn't feeling well, but in more than a few places (Bye Bye Love being the most extreme) he sounded like Freddie (Queen) Mercury.

The Cars

Their material was very good, drawing heavily from the first two albums. This was all right with the crowd, which surged to its feet for party favorites Let the Good Times Roll and Let's Go, Candy-O, the title track from their second LP, was really hot this evening. It may have been the mix, but whatever the reason, the power chords came blasting through Hawkes' electronics with a fury not present on vinyl. Moving in Stereo ran in much these same lines; the album version is characterized by synthetic swirls and ripples while onstage it is brute guitar energy that dominates.

But whether or not this is a good development is a very important question, because Greg Hawkes is emerging as the most personable of the Cars, if not the most visible. There were strains of Kraftwerk (his self-professed favorite) in almost every number, old and new, strains which seemed to mesh more readily with the existential vacuum depicted in Steve Bickford's lighting and backdrops than did their pop harmonics.

The set closed with Shake It Up, a good choice. It was clear that the show had been a success and that the audience was quite prepared to (like the song says) "dance all night and play all day." The encores were perfunctory, though. One almost felt that the Cars had to return, as they played only 13 tunes (not many considering most were about four minutes long) during the set. The band chose to stop and shut out the stage lights in between such short songs was puzzling, too. There was no rising and falling action, no containment of energy for a dramatic moment of release. They would play for a powerful, short burst, then stop, and then start again, with no apparent connection between what had come before and what would follow. It was much like cutting the grass.

The Cars seem determined to affect the rock-star pose of feigned indifference that Keith Richards has made bankable with the Stones. This translates into exquisitely constructed little pop gems, with persistent hooks and ultra-crisp production, lyrics for which sardonic is too weak a word, and a stage presence that hovers much too close to boredom. The ir music is built around frustration and alientation. There is much to be frustrated and angry about, to be sure, but Ocasek seems to really have something stuck up his nose. Is it really that bleak out here, Ric? And we thought you wore the glasses just to be cool.

Fingerprintz Leaves Lasting Impression

By PAUL DURAND

If ever there was an unknown, obscure band worthy of the love of every soul, it's Fingerprintz. Monday night, Feb. 1st, they fascinated a crowd of (unfortunately) not more than forty people at the Ripley Music Hall (6th and South St.) in Philadelphia. This writer has never been more impressed by a band's concert displaying material which I was unacquainted with.

Arriving during the second song, this reviewer easily made his way through the sparse crowd to the front of the hall, noting the changes which the Ripley has made since a fantastic U2 concert in November. The stage was bigger, wider and better and there was a giant screen hovering above it. There were tables and chairs covering the entire dance floor, all the way up to the stage. What? Anyone acquainted with Fingerprintz would question that move! If God intended tables to cover a dance floor, why aren't dance concerts held in restaurants? Nevertheless, standing between the tables near the stage, one could find about eight people enjoying the show.

The first thing catching the eye was a remarkable likeness of Ringo Starr playing a guitar on the stage in the form of Cha Burnz. The first thing catching the ear was his twangy, vibrant lead on Shadowed, which, by the way, also did a lot for the feet. By the end of the set, the number of obviously ecstatic dancers had more than doubled, and they weren't just swaying either. Fingerprintz played powerful dance rock and maintained a haunting, eerie mood through provocative lyrics and style which prevented the show from getting boring.

Fingerprintz has been around for about two years, and they have just churned another fine collection of tunes on a third album called Beat Noir, which was just released in America on Stiff Records. The band apparently is the type that prefers performing recent material rather than their established hits from older albums. From their performance, one can only conclude that all their vinyl output must be terrific! The facts go like this: with the return of rock music one could dance to of a couple years back, came The Very Dab, Fingerprintz' first album, spawning two tracks which received airplay in America, Closed Circuit Connection and Beam Me Up, Scotty. The radio's romance with those two, however, was unfortunately short-lived. The band received virtually no attention from the music press, but when they were mentioned, they were acclaimed. They definitely deserved as much. A second album, Distinguishing Marks, was full of excellent pop tunes much like XTC's Black Sea, which made some marks for them, but Fingerprintz still went unnoticed. Now, Beat Noir, which woke some press, is out . . . let's hope it makes some distinguishing marks!

Changing, Catwalk and Famous Last Words, which came together in the thick of the concert, were the most impressive tunes. The latter is among the best pop songs I've heard to date in 1981. They did one song newer than Beat Noir, (the album). Underworld UK, which was great, the show's second climax! It was fresh and showcased a tight rhythym section. The band's musical prowess

Philly Bands Battle For Fame

The Hooters

By STEVEN HELMETAG and GREG MIZII

The Hooters and Jack of Diamonds invaded the Norris Theatre Friday, Jan. 29 before an enthusiastic crowd of more than 1000. The Philadelphia based band, The Hooters, played fantastic reggae/ska styled music which brought the crowd out of their seats and into the aisles. The was top-notch, and they demonstrated a good command of the stage, led by the multi-talented Jimme O'Neill (singer-songwriter-guitarist). The Best Escape ended the set well, and Echohead ended the night well, both from Beat Noir.

So if you're looking for a band to leave an indelible stamp on your brain, Fingerprintz is for you.

Hooters' members are Robbie Hyman (keyboards), Eric Bazilian (lead vocals, guitar, and saxophone), David Uosikkinen (drums), Bobby Woods (bass), and John Kuzma (guitar). The band is led by co-writers Bazilian and Hyman who have written potentially national hits such as Fightin' on the Same Side and Wireless. The Hooters, like many other Philadelphia area bands are unsigned by a major label, but they are getting an extremely large following in the Philadelphia and New York markets.

The highlight of the Hooters concert was the performance of the highly creative, All You Zombies. This is rapidly becoming the theme song of the Hooter-People. The Hooters have become the major force in the tri-state area band scene and continue to astound fans with their Bob Marley influenced music. What makes this band distinctive is that they are hometown boys performing foreign influenced music which now may be proven successful in the United States market.

The opening band, Jack of Diamonds, played material from Dodge City, their debut album. This group combines all the components that are needed in order to be flexible in today's music scene. Their flexibility ranges from funk, to new wave, to psychedelic, to heavy metal. The title cut, Dodge City contains phenominal lead keyboard and guitar playing along with a funky rhythm that makes people want to dance. Based on the performances of both of these bands, it is highly evident that dance music and rock and roll are once again on the same wavelength.

Robert Hazard and the Heroes

By PETER CAPIZZI

One of the best performances in a long time by an area band took place on Saturday, Jan. 30. The concert was billed as The A's, with special guests Robert Hazard and the Heroes; and special guests they were. The A's, supposedly the main attraction, had this spot ripped away from them. Robert Hazard and the Heroes stole the spotlight and played flawlessly. The band as a whole played perfectly in tune and no one member overshadowed the others. They played as a band that has had the experience of a national tour.

They opened with their sensational hit, Escalator of Life. The sound and the powerful lyrics of the song seemed to capture each member of the audience and brought him to a frenzied state of excitement.

The crowd's reaction throughout the concert was a clear indication that the band's support growing. This reaction, which directed toward Robert Hazard and the Heroes, rather than the A's, seemed to suggest that Heroes have become the hotte Philly band to date. Another fa tor re-emphasizing this is the va amount of air time the band is r ceiving on WMMR and WYSP. A though the Heroes have not cut album, they are frequently play on these major Philadelphia F stations and even receive air ti on several New York stations. It clear that one can expect to hea lot more fantastic music fr these musicians in the ne future. So move over Hooters, A and Schoolboys; the hottest ba around is Robert Hazard and t Heroes.

Fonda Flick Rolls Over and Dies

By DEAN BALSAMINI

Rollover, directed by Alan J. Pakula (Klute, To Kill a Mockingbird, Fear Strikes Out) and produced by Bruce Gilbert (On Golden Pond, Nine to Five), tells the story of what would happen to our economy if suddenly foreign investors started manipulating United States' banks. Rollover, starring Jane Fonda and Kris Kristofferson, is fiction based on fact, that being the oil crisis of the mid-'70s.

During those years much money flowed from the United States to the Middle East. Some money was then re-deposited back into U.S. banks in order to pull the money out whenever it was needed. The term "rollover" refers to money being re-deposited at regular intervals. If the money is not "rolled over" then the U.S. banks could face a cash crisis. If that did happen, the economy could collapse.

Rollover is the story of Lee Winters (Fonda), retired movie star whose father, the president of Winterchem Corporation, is murdered. As a result, Winters decides to become the chairman of the board. Banker Hub Smith (Kristofferson) comes onto the scene when Winters solicits his business expertise. The movie unsuccessfully tries to blend in too many subplots with the main story. These subplots only make the main theme that much harder to follow.

Watching Rollover one feels as if one must be a banker or economist in order to properly understand the language and jargon used in the dialogue. The acting leaves much to be desired as both Kristofferson and Fonda are wooden and look rather uninterested. Also, Fonda and Kristofferson are in bed so much, one could erroneously assume where the film's title comes from.

On the whole, Rollover is nothing more than a "classy" Harlequin-type romance, which becomes a fashion show for Jane Fonda. The dialogue is filled with trite cliches. For example, Fonda

Museum Exhibits New Look

By DEAN BALSAMINI

Last Friday evening, the Port of History Museum, located at Penn's Landing, held an exhibition preview of the type of art work that will be on display in the future. Mexican pottery, abstract art, and works of Josef Svoboda were featured.

The museum itself was originally located at the Civic Center, but was moved after the city acquired a one-year lease for the building at Penn's Landing. This switch in location is just the first step in the long-term project of upgrading the quality of the cultural arts in Philadelphia.

Wine and pate were served as people of all ages observed the diverse displays. Thomas Brown, the museum's curator said that the main goal of the museum was to provide the Philadelphia community with a top-notch museum. Brown also stated that in the past people just were not pleased with what Philadelphia had to offer. This caused many to look elsewhere, such as New York, in order to satisfy their cultural hunger.

From speaking with a variety of people, it seemed apparent that the exhibition was a success. Many felt that the problem with the old museum was its location. "It is much easier for people to get to the Penn's Landing location than the one at the Civic Center," added Brown. Inside, the museum is very accessible and the exhibits are all within reach. There were not any areas that were roped off. The exhibit that seemed to have been the most popular was the Josef Svoboda exhibit, which featured a combination of abstract art and cinematography. Svoboda is a world-renowned artist, but has yet to be discovered in the United States. The museum feels that exhibits of this nature will keep people from leaving Philadelphia when they desire to view great art.

The Port of History Museum at Penn's Landing is an exciting new addition to Philadelphia. One needs not be an expert in order to appreciate the various works displayed. The exhibits will change every six weeks in order to provide diversity and interest.

CULTURAL FILM SERIES

Post Enjoys Prime Time Success

By JOHN LYNCH

Mike Post, the two-time Grammy Award winner, has just released a collection of his greatest musical achievements, called Television Theme Songs. The talented songwriter and musician is an inspiration to even the most dedicated rock and roll fanatic. He is a musical wizard, yet has remained a virtual unknown despite having his music played over the television for the past ten years. His best music has served as theme songs for many popular shows and is most likely very familiar to all.

The first of Post's long list of theme songs on the album is Theme From The Rockford Files. Post feels that all of his songs should reflect the character and the mood of the show and this song masterfully accomplishes this. One can recognize and sense the wise-guy mannerisms of Rockford as one listens.

Theme From The Greatest American Hero, which is sung by Joey Scarbury, is a song not to be taken seriously. The song sets the mood for this somewhat inane and ridiculously silly show. The lyrics are rather childish, but again this is due to the nature of the show. The musical melody is a change from Post's other songs, which makes this song one of his tougher challenges.

Theme From Hill Street Blues is an excellent creation. The reflective, soft, and soothing melody of the song, which opens the critically acclaimed show, captures and re-emphasizes the show's sensitivity and emotionally-charged atmosphere. Larry Carlton adds a dynamic guitar sequence, which provides a harshness to the otherwise placid number. Post beautifully combines all of his talent on this tune and has been rewarded with commercial success. Theme From Hill Street Blues is simply a superb production.

Finally, there is Theme From Magnum P.I. This song captures the character of Thomas Magnum to a tee. As soon as the song begins, one can vision Tom chasing the setting sun along the beach with a beautiful blonde by his side. The song exemplifies how "cool" Magnum really is. The guitar in the background sets a fast-paced melody, depicting the fast-paced life of a private investigator. The album is filled out with Theme From White Shadow and School's Out.

Mike Post is a talent worth paying attention to. His name may not be widely known, but his music is the product of a true artist. The next time one needs to take a break from the everyday, often lackluster music which is so prevalent, one can turn to the innovative and refreshing music of Mike Post.

accuses Kristofferson of always looking to make shady deals. Kristofferson lectures for five minutes on how everyone makes deals and the only good deal would be for him to be with her. In order to spare one further discomfort, this writer will move on.

Rollover, in essence, is a confusing movie which is nothing more than cheap trash. One can only hope the Alan J. Pakula has learned from Rollover that big-name stars and slick costumes alone do not make for a decent movie.

E-Systems continues the tradition of the world's great problem solvers.

Even given the benefit of historical perspective, it is difficult to fully comprehend the enormous contributions to man's knowledge made by Sir Isaac Newton. His Philosopiae Naturalis Principia Mathematica is termed by many authorities to be one of the most important single works in the history of modern science. His studies of light are the foundation of physical optics and his laws of motion provided a quantitative description of all principal phenomena in our solar system.

Today, scientists and engineers at E-Systems employ Newtonian principles to develop products and systems for satellite communications, exploring space and the development of solar energy, systems which are the first-of-a-kind.

Martino Manages More Than Teams

By MARIE WOZNIAK

You won't see her running around on the court or pacing the sidelines at a Villanova women's basketball game, but Debbie Martino plays as important a part as anybody in the athletic program.

Martino has been the head student manager of the women's basketball, softball, and volleyball teams for four years and her contributions have been numerous. Her job as manager entails doing such things as confirming games and reservations, taking care of paperwork, and keeping the scorebooks.

Basketball is the longest season and according to Martino, "There is so much to do making sure that everything is okay."

On a typical game day, she will spend up to six hours at the Field House. Before the game, she has to make arrangements for the team to eat, get the uniforms ready, and take care of numerous other details. She acts as a welcoming committee for the visiting team and officials and shows them where to go. At game time she can be found at the scorer's table doing the official book.

Martino also does the same things for the volleyball and softball teams and her duties are not strictly limited to games, as she is present at every team's practice.

Martino's efforts are greatly appreciated by others. Villanova's Coordinator of Women's Athletics, Mary Anne Steenrod, comments, "What she has done is for the entire women's program, not just the three sports. She works as hard as any coach here, puts in a great amount of time, and handles so much responsibility. Debbie knows exactly how to do everything. The most important thing is that she's completely dependable. She's a wonder."

Although she is extremely busy with the teams, Martino does find time to attend classes. She is a senior majoring in sociology, with a concentration in criminal justice, and a minor in religion.

When Martino thinks back on her four year experience at Villanova, a few things stand out in her mind. "First of all, I met all kinds of people. Next, I saw how each different team handled its wins and losses. And lastly, I saw the different ways that each coach motivated his or her team. Each one had his own personality and ran the team differently."

Although she never participated in a game, Debbie Martino has left her mark on the women's athletic program by her contributions hard work and dependability.

Debbie Martino is the four year student manager of the volleyball and softball teams.

Women Cagers Post Three Wins

By BRIAN McFADDEN

Last week the Villanova women's basketball team added two victories to their record and maintained their number 13 national ranking.

Hoping the St. Joe's "shave your head" jinx would help, LaSalle's Gina Tobin and Kathy McCartney wore skin caps during pre-game warmups. It didn't work as the 15-6 Explorers fell 47-44 last Thursday in the Field House.

Both teams had trouble finding the basket. Villanova managed 33.3 percent from the floor while LaSalle connected on 32.7 percent of their shots. The Lady Cats held a six point advantage through most of the first half but the Explorers, led by senior Kathy Bess (10 pts., 10 rebs.), pulled it within one as the half ended 23-22.

In the second half the Explorers kept the pressure on and the Wildcats could not break it open. When LaSalle did have a one-point lead the Cats came right back and with 4:36 left in the game were up by six. The Explorers fought back and with 18 seconds remaining were within two points, 46-44.

Villanova inbounded the ball to junior guard Kathie Beisel who dribbled away seven seconds before being fouled. Beisel, shooting zero for ten from the field that night, went to the line as the bench urged, "Come on Kath, we could use these!" Beisel hit the first to keep the win out of LaSalle's reach. The Explorers brought the ball down court but were whistled for a traveling violation, sealing the victory for the Cats.

Co-captain Lisa Ortlip led the Cats with 17 points, nine rebounds and five blocked shots. Sophomore Nancy Bernhardt added 12 and senior Stephanie Vanderslice chipped in ten points and nine rebounds.

Villanova needs only to knock off Penn February 22 at their Field House to clinch the women's Big Five title.

The Lady Cats then traveled to South Orange, N.J. Saturday to slip by Seton Hall 57-56 in what Coach Harry Perretta described as a "physical" game.

Villanova trailed at the half by one, 30-29. In the second half the Wildcats regained the lead and with five minutes left in the game were ahead 57-52. Missing two layups and unable to make any of the five one-and-one foul shots, they held on to win their second close game.

Nancy Bernhardt led the scoring with 16 points and collected five rebounds. Senior Lisa Ortlip added 15 and with an improved shot (six for seven from the field, three for four from the line) Kathie Beisel scored 15 points along with six rebounds.

Coach Perretta commented that the problems seem to come from too many turnovers and being "mentally not aware" on the court.

The women's basketball team was back in form Tuesday night thrashing St. Peter's 61-49 at Yanitelli Center.

Behind Lisa Ortlip's 18 points, nine rebounds and the hot hand of Kathie Beisel (8 for 11 from the floor, 12 rebounds, seven assists), the Wildcats brought their record to 17-3. Senior Stephanie Vanderslice added 12 points, five rebounds and Nancy Bernhardt contributed eight points, five rebounds.

Seniors Honored in Field House Finale

By STEPHEN FALLON

Wednesday night at the Field House the Wildcats played the Seton Hall Pirates in a Big East conference game. Beyond the scope of the game was the honoring of tradition. This tradition is the annual "Senior Night" which has existed for the nine years Coach Rollie Massimino has been on the Main Line.

Senior Night is a chance for all the seniors on the team to start the last game of the year at the Field House — regardless of the game's magnitude.

"We started it as a way to honor the seniors who have worked hard for us in the past," explained Massimino. "The tradition is part of the family concept that we believe in," he added.

Massimino believes there is more to basketball than just winning. It is this attitude which he feels responsible for the success of the Villanova basketball program, on and off the court; a program which has achieved a level of national prominence without compromising its values; providing for the growth of the athlete as a man, not just another player.

For seniors John Sices and Jeff Sherry the game marked an opportunity to start for the Wildcats. Such an honor is taken very seriously by those upon which it is bestowed. "It's nice but it must be kept in perspective. The key thing is to do your best and play to win," remarked Sherry. For Sherry the game was, "a fine way to end my college experience, one which I feel is well rounded. Basketball has been a major part of that experience."

For Aaron Howard the game marks the beginning of the end. It is the end of a fine career at Villanova which has seen him score over 800 points while being a fixture in the starting line-up for four years. The last Field House game will be a rather somber occasion for the 6-7 forward from Linden, New Jersey. "I always liked playing at the Field House and the game will be a little sad, I guess." "However, Howard was quick to add, " that's the kind of thing you think about a couple of years from now; right now we're thinking about the rest of the season and playing well."

Another person honored in the pre-game ceremony was Head Manager John Varley. Varley handles all of the travel arrangements for the Wildcats, from hotel reservations to meal money. The night was a deserving honor for someone who has dedicated a lot of time to Villanova basketball.

Senior Night is a night of mixed emotions. For the fans there is excitement of the game but also the pervading sadness of saying goodbye to the seniors. For the players the night is an honor but also the end of a phase in their lives which seems as if it just began. Perhaps Trainer Jake Nevin said it best, "They're all such good kids, but you know it just don't seem like they are here that long."

Seniors Aaron Howard, John Sices and Jeff Sherry were honored Wednesday night before they played their final Field House game.

Watercats Take Two, Stranded Like 'Fish Out of Water'

By LAURA FORTUNATO

The women's swim team was slated to swim two meets this past week. The first one was away at Temple, the second was home versus LaSalle. But it wasn't as simple as all that.

Enroute to Temple, the van, in which the Watercats were travelling, went dead in the middle of the city. The biggest challenge for the women then became getting to the meet rather than the chore of bringing home a victory.

Boarding a city bus after the breakdown, the women did not get much closer to their destination. Finally, after walking several blocks, they were picked up by a police paddy wagon and driven to the meet. That was the end of the problems because they swam Temple out of the pool with a score of 72-35.

Villanova took several first places including one by Marks in the diving competition. Beth Metzger won the 200 yard backstroke and the 200 yard butterfly qualifying for the nationals in both competitions. The 200 yard medley relay of Metzger, Genny Mulderig, Mary Maier and Ann Vaughn also took a first place.

The team came back to the Villanova campus on the LaSalle team van, the very team they were anxiously waiting to swim later in the week.

This was a closer match, with Villanova coming up out of the water again victorious, 73-67. This was a fight-to-the-finish as a mistake in the Villanova line-up put all the pressure on the outcome of the final two events. The 200 yard freestyle relay team of Maier, Katherleen Rooney, Bernie McCann and Metzger secured the victory for the Cats. "The come-from-behind victory, along with the taste of revenge, made it all the greater," commented Coach Chris McKee.

Mary Maier qualified for the nationals with her first place effort in the 50 yard freestyle and Genny Mulderig also qualified, here in the 100 yard breaststroke.

The 200 yard medley relay team also won again.

Pirates Walk Villanova Plank

By JOE BAGLEY

Dan "Franchise" Callandrillo & Co. dribbled into the Field House Wednesday night with sparks in their eyes and high hopes before they (the hopes not Callandrillo) were dashed on the blue bleacher seats by the Wildcats, 66-53. The Cats exchanged wild passes with Seton Hall for the first twenty minutes before consistently exploiting the Pirates' weaknesses during the second half.

Senior Appreciation Night called for the seniors to start and two of them, Jeff Sherry and John Sices, deposited Villanova's first two baskets. Sherry, with the exception of two free throws, remained quiet the rest of the game while Sices had one of his better scoring nights, tallying up seven points.

The Cats served up a tough 2-3 defense and waited to see how Seton Hall was going to play it, leading Callandrillo to score eight of the Pirates' first twelve points. John Pinone, high scorer for the Cats, began asserting himself when Nova got its haywire passing game on track, and scored six straight points. The junior's free throws at 5:27 put Villanova on top for the rest of the night. At one point, Pinone played cornerback and perfectly picked-off a long downcourt pass, and scored the ensuing field goal. A minute and a half later, freshman Dwayne McClain broke free on his own steal, and as he approached the basket, seemed to diabolically slow up so as to turn and face his opponents as he stuffed the ball.

The Wildcat barrage was in full blast when it got an added extra boost from the sixth man, the Field House crowd. The grating special effects of the spectators, specifically targeted at No. 11, Kevin Boyle, rattled the freshman, though poised at the free throw line, into fits of unnecessary and useless passing and quite literally took him out of the game.

With Villanova's offense attacking and their point guard flustered, Seton Hall was saved by two more Callandrillo jumpers and a pair of free throws. Their offense seemed to be a stall on the surface, but it more accurately appeared that they simply didn't know what to do with the ball. Halftime spared a big Villanova push and saw the Cats ahead, 37-24.

The second half began with the fans screeching Boyle right into jitters once again. "The crowd really affected Boyle," guard Stewart Granger later said. "First, because he's a freshman, because he's young. Second, because you have to bring the ball down and apply pressure. He couldn't because he was affected."

The Cats then began to pass inside to Pinone on offense and double and triple team Callandrillo on defense. Though it didn't stop the franchise, it did slow him down. "We did a good job holding Callandrillo down (to 21 points), the best anybody could do," Granger stated. "On offense, we penetrated inside. It was wide open."

Granger took advantage of the spacious plains underneath and dumped several passes inside to Pinone who layed up, jumped and hooked his way to 21 points. "Our offense ran the best it has this year. We're starting to execute. All our hard work is finally paying off," he said.

Aaron Howard: Cats' Mr. Consistency

By BOB CONWAY

Sports, like many aspects of life, have certain inconsistencies. Homerun hitters, such as Ralph Kiner, get elected to baseball's Hall of Fame, while the slick-fielding Louis Aparicio types get passed by. No matter how many coaches harp about defense and the importance thereof, the average sports follower idolizes the players who put the points on the board.

Senior forward Aaron Howard.

The dynasties of each different sport have, as their common denominator, defense. The great Yankee teams of the 1920s played sound fundamental defense.

The last sports dynasty was the Pittsburgh Steelers of the 1970s. Sure, they had Terry Bradshaw, Franco Harris and Lynn Swann who provided a very capable offense, but the "Iron Curtain" was why the Steelers went to, and won, four Super Bowls. The Iron Curtain or lack of such, has been the reason the Steelers have not been to a Super Bowl since 1980.

With this in mind, let us consider the Villanova Wildcats during the past four years. The Hoopsters have won 73 games while losing 38, a winning percentage of .657. Of those 111 games senior Aaron Howard has started in 103. Howard, despite consistent play, was constantly overlooked.

Rory Sparrow was around Howard's freshman year. Alex Bradley and Tom Sienkiewicz, in the ensuing seasons, received much deserved recognition. This season, Howard's senior year, John Pinone and Stewart Granger are receiving most of the publicity.

None of this bothers the 6 foot 7 inch Howard. "I'm an easy-going guy. It is important to me to do what I must do in order to win. If winning means playing solid defense, I will do it," commented Howard.

"Defensive play," Howard says, "has been ingrained in my head since my high school days. Coach Imbriacco made us work hard on defense." The hard work paid off. Linden High finished runner-up in the state of New Jersey with Howard as their center in 1978.

"Coach Mass (Villanova's basketball Coach Rollie Massimino) has pressed me to work even harder on my defense," added Howard. In four years Howard has led Villanova in rebounding in 17 games. Prior to this year he has averaged over five rebounds a game.

Teammate Jeff Sherry, who is truly a student of the game, says of Howard, "He is very intelligent. He does everything that is asked of him to help us beat a team. He is the best team ball player I have ever been associated with."

Defense, however, is not the only part of Howard's game. "Ski," as he is called by his teammates, can shoot with remarkable accuracy. Statistics bear this out. Howard's career field goal percentage is above 50 percent. So why doesn't he shoot more of those patented mid-range jumpers?

"I hate to take bad shots," Ski said. "I don't force shots, almost to a fault." Yet, even with Howard's hesitation toward shooting he is about 100 points away from scoring his 1,000th point. Howard, with a smile on his face says, "I should get 1,000 points before I'm through. It would mean a lot to me, too."

Aaron Howard, who for so long has been called "our unsung hero" is ready to step out and sing a solo. Howard, being the complete ball player he is, will more than likely reach the 1,000 point milestone, while stopping an opponent from doing the same.

Maybe then he will receive the overdue accolades.

Cats Halt Losing Skein Against Maine
Capture 300th Field House Win

By TOM REUSCHE

Before a sold-out but unusually subdued Field House crowd, the Villanova Wildcats ended their two game losing skid Saturday afternoon by defeating the Black Bears of Maine, 81-65.

Coming into the game with a 6-14 record, Maine did not present a major threat to the Cats, but Villanova Head Coach Rollie Massimino was taking nothing for granted. "It wasn't hard getting up for this game," said Massimino, as he unwrapped his victory cigar," Not when you've lost four of your last five."

Facing a Maine zone, the Cats' offense started slowly, leading only 8-5 at 15:42 of the first half, but opened the game up by outscoring Maine 16-4 over the next eight minutes.

Eleven Wildcats saw action in the first half, which ended 41-27, as Massimino experimented with new plays and different lineups. John Pinone led all first half scorers with 12 of his 14 points.

The first seven minutes after intermission were devoted to an exciting Wildcat exhibition of running and flying dunks. In that stretch, Stewart Granger poured in 9 of his game-high 21 points on outside jumpers, driving layups and free throws.

The crowd came to their feet when Aaron Howard stole an errant Maine pass and soared to the hoop for a dunk at 13:17, which was followed by Dwayne McClain's flying left-handed jam off a steal and beautiful outlet pass from John Sices, giving the Cats their biggest margin at 64-38.

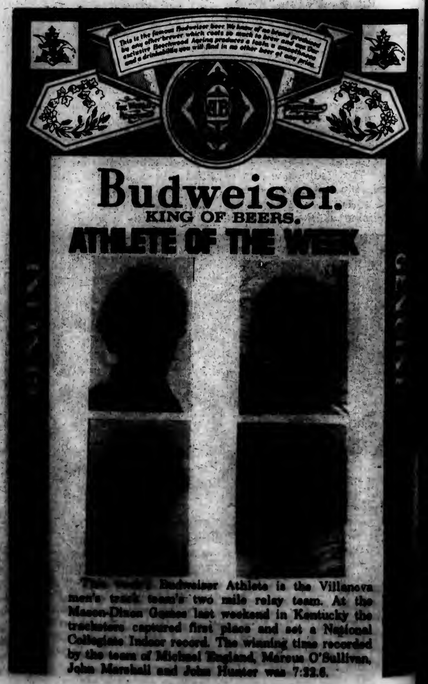
The Black Bears cut the Cat's lead to 71-59 with 3:02 left, but by then it was practice time for the Main Liners.

"We tried to run plays for future games and work on our execution," said Granger. "We ran a few good plays, but execution is the key to scoring and winning."

Granger feels his recent but brief playing "slump" is over. "I think I've got my game on track now, but we need a team effort to win. You can't think of yourself," he explained, "because you will only hurt yourself and the team."

Other Wildcats in double figures were Ed Pinckney (10 points) and Dwayne McClain (14 points on 7 for 8 shooting). Clay Pickering led Maine with 16 points and 10 rebounds.

On the negative side, forward Mike Mulquin sat out the game while recovering from oral surgery for root canal work. Guard Frank "Happy" Dobbs rested the second half after re-injuring his left thumb in a scramble for a loose ball. Post-game x-rays showed no serious damage. Center John Pinone was limited to 23 minutes of action due to the flu which depleted his strength and stamina.



This week's Budweiser Athlete is the Villanova men's track team's two mile relay team. At the Mason-Dixon Games last weekend in Kentucky the trackstars captured first place and set a Regional Collegiate Indoor record. The winning time recorded by the team of Michael England, Marcus O'Sullivan, John Marshall and John Hunter was 7:22.6.

Driscoll Joins in Budget Protest

By KIM RUSHTON

Father President John Driscoll [illegible] among 13 area college presidents who met Monday at a press conference to announce the start of a unified campaign against President Reagan's proposed budget cuts for higher education.

Sheldon Hackney, president of the University of Pennsylvania, had invited the presidents of other colleges in the area to join him in seeking public support for a reversal of the proposed budget cuts.

The presidents, he said, came together "to alert the community to the national and local disaster that would occur if Congress were to accept the President's proposals on student aid."

Driscoll was joined at the conference by the presidents of Temple University, University of Pennsylvania, Drexel University, LaSalle College, Bryn Mawr College, Swarthmore College, Rosemont College, Widener University, Lincoln University, Haverford College, the Community College of Philadelphia, and the Philadelphia College of Art and by the dean of the Rutger's University Law School.

All the college leaders expressed concern about the various aspects of the proposed budget cuts, which would slash funds for four primary programs of federal aid to students: Pell Grants (PELL), Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants (SEOG), National Direct Student Loans (NDSL), and College Work Study programs (CWS).

In terms of how the budget cuts would affect Villanova, the proposals would cut PELL from $960,000 to $681,000 for the 1982-83 academic year. SEOG would be cut to $253,000 from $386,000. NDSL would drop to $.392M from $394,000, while CWS would be cut from $508,000 to $334,000.

"In addition to the impact on the students in this area, some colleges will also be in dire trouble," said Driscoll. "More than likely, these federal financial-aid reductions will cause enrollment drops at some institutions and many institutions could very well be in dire trouble within a year or two."

"Our whole economy depends on regular production of qualified people to sustain it. This will mean a long range weakening of this stable core," continued Driscoll.

Driscoll stated that the action of himself and the other college leaders was "precisely for the student, who is the focal point."

Eugene J. Ruane, director University public relations, said that representatives of Villanova, Haverford and Bryn Mawr have been designated to prepare a case statement. He said the purpose of the statement will be to express the concern of the Philadelphia Villanova will be represented by a group of area college representatives who will go to Washington, D.C. on March 3 to see local congressmen and members of key committees in Congress.

"We will make every effort to explain our problem to our constituents," commented Driscoll. area colleges concerning the proposed education cuts. The statement will be sent to congressmen, and possibly to President Reagan.

V.U. Cars Towed, Fined

By LEONARD J. LaBARTH with JIM DeLORENZO

Resident students at Good Counsel and Stanford Halls awoke Tuesday morning to find tow trucks removing their cars from the parking lot in front of the dormitories.

Officially, Radnor Garage towed eight Villanova cars without parking stickers from the parking lots.

The sight of tow trucks at 7:30 a.m. prompted another 24-30 students without proper parking authorization to remove their vehicles to side roads and the SEPTA parking lot, creating yet another parking problem.

"It was really pretty funny," said Paul Tufano, a Stanford resident. "There were maids yelling out the windows, 'don't tow their cars, they're coming right down.' "

According to Captain Joseph Cunnane, head of Villanova security, those parked illegally deserved to be towed. "I get a charge from those students without a sticker who get towed and then complain," said Cunnane. "What we have mostly is freshmen and sophomores; obviously they haven't read the rule book."

Cunnane said it is the students with stickers who cannot find a place to park that do most of the complaining to the security office about the students who park in the lots illegally.

"No one worries about us," remarked Cunnane. "The fire marshal is one of those who is always after us. I don't like to tow but we get complaints from students."

According to Tufano, the parking lot was full Monday afternoon. "When I came out Tuesday morning, there must have been 25-30 open parking spaces where kids left to park their cars elsewhere."

One Stanford resident said it seemed like the towing was well-planned. "A friend of mine told me about it around 8:30 in the morning; I had heard people yelling. I drove my car down to Rosemont Mall but the oops were giving tickets on the side street. I drove down to Bryn Mawr and left it. I didn't like walking back from Bryn Mawr."

Cunnane said that the students who insist on parking on the side streets would be ticketed by Radnor Police.

Jim Queenan, a Stanford resident, had his car towed and had to pay a $40 fine. Queenan proceeded to call the Radnor legal justice department.

"The rules are supposed to be posted and a warning given," according to Queenan's information. "They haven't towed here in two years and it's been two years since the sign was posted. I asked a guard why they were towing. He said that the president ordered all cars without stickers to be towed."

Another Stanford resident said he was glad that the cars were towed. "It's only justice," said the student, who asked not to be identified. "There are no free handouts in this world.

Since 1979, the amounts [illegible] Rosengarth

[illegible]oney that the candidates were [illegible]itted to spend on the cam[illegible]n were limited to $100 for [illegible]idential candidates, and $40 [illegible] candidates for senator. This [illegible] the amount of money that [illegible] candidates for student governm[illegible] will be permitted to spend [illegible]be the same as in the past four [illegible]. Considering an annual in[illegible]n rate of at least ten percent [illegible]1979, this year's candidates will be spending 40 percent less than the actual amount of money that was spent on the campaign in 1979.

Bob Rosengarth, student body president, and elections commission chairman, cited several reasons why the amount of money allowed for campaign funds will not be adjusted in 1982. "This will make the candidates use more innovative means, rather than bombarding the buildings with an overabundance of posters, which may result in disciplinary actions. The lower budget will force candidates to find other means (of campaigning) which will not put the campus into shambles."

Another small change that will affect the candidates' campaign strategies will be a loosening of the restrictions of where a SGA candidate can have his or her materials printed. In past years, the candidates were allowed to have their materials printed only at designated print shops. This year, they will be allowed to have their materials printed anywhere. Rosengarth explained that this decision to lessen the restrictions on print shops was based on the concern that many local print shops are over-priced.

The watchdog that monitors the campaign and elections of Villanova's student government is the elections commission. The elections commission consists of the student body president, who acts as the chairman, Lucyna J. Gorski, the director of student life, and nine second-semester seniors.

Senate Meeting Today

By LEONARD J. LaBARTH

The University Senate meets today for the first time in 1982 to discuss and vote on several university matters.

One issue that will not be decided today is whether the Senate will approve the proposed 1982-83 budget that includes 12.5 — 14 percent tuition increases.

The Senate will review the budget proposal at the March 19 meeting.

The key issue to be discussed is a motion from the Social Action Committee to be presented by Dr. Joseph Betz.

Following the approval of the minutes from the last Senate meeting and announcements and correspondence, Senator Alvin Clay, Chairman of the Senate Budget Committee, will present an interim committee report.

Next on the agenda will be the consideration of recommendations contained in the Athletic Advisory Committee report on an inclusive intramural athletic program.

Senator Bob Rosengarth will be next on the dais to present a motion from the Student Life Committee recommending that all non-commuting freshmen be given the opportunity to reside on campus.

Rosengarth has suggested in the past that freshmen should come first in housing, with a lower cut-off point for juniors and seniors, and even possibly, no seniors at all on campus in order to prepare them for outside life.

The Social Action Committee is seeking the restoration of its original charter. Section 10, Article VIII of the Constitution of the Villanova University Senate reads:

"The Social Action Committee shall be charged with responsibility for recommending to the Senate changes in University policy in areas of social concern and sensitivity. It shall be engaged in an educational process to alert the Villanova community to opportunities and problems in areas of social action and community relations."

The rationale charges that a 1980 Senate resolution to change the charter of the committee was an attempt to strip the Social Action Committee of its educational function as well as to limit it to internal campus issues.

Library Replacing Books

By BETH BONINA

During the six month period from June 1981 to December 1981, the Falvey Memorial Library has found that books missing from the library will cost six thousand dollars to replace, according to Mary J. Kuhn, head librarian.

"When the acquisitions department attempts to replace these missing books, most are found to be out of print," said Kuhn. "When we are able to replace the books that are missing, we must use money from the annual budget, and consequently are unable to obtain new material for the library because we are busy replacing material that was either lost, misplaced, or stolen."

The 1981-82 school year book budget for the library is $467,000. The allotment for periodicals and films is also included in this budget.

It is difficult to determine whether a book has been lost or misplaced. "A book can be missing for a long period of time and we may not realize it," said Kathleen O'Connor, circulation librarian. She continued, "Most times we discover the book missing when a person asks for it. We cannot always pinpoint exactly how long it has been missing, either."

Kuhn feels that the security system at the library is adequate. She commented, "Our present book-check system is efficient, and we are not contemplating an electronic surveillance system in the future."

Kuhn further explained that, "Should a person damage materials from the library, he is hurting himself and other students as well because we cannot replace some out-of-print books and the quality of the library is adversely affected by this."

"We have a number of rare books in the library, but they are kept locked up. If someone wishes to use them, they can do so in the reserve room. We cannot risk losing these particular books because of their value," explained Kuhn.

There has been only one complete inventory in the library since the 1973-74 school year. The library installed an automated system to keep track of books, with a computer print-out list of the books checked out. "Even though a book is not on the print-out list, and cannot be found on the shelves either, it is not necessarily missing. It takes the computer about two days to register a book on the checked-out list," said O'Connor.

When an overdue book is not returned after a period of 30 days, the student is fined $15 and it comes out of his or her breakage fee, if he or she is a full-time day student or a law student. The library directly bills University College and graduate students. This money is then transferred directly to the library account.

"Many students feel that $15 is a large amount of money to replace a book. Actually, most often it costs the library much more than that to replace a book, and the balance comes out of the annual budget," remarked O'Connor.

If books are missing over a period of many years, the titles are withdrawn from the card catalogue. For the 1980-81 school year, 7,876 titles could neither be found nor replaced and had to be removed from the card catalogue, according to Kuhn.

The nine seniors are picked by Rosengarth. Usually, the nine seniors are selected from the presidents of the various student organizations. This year, however, there are only five seniors who are eligible, because many of the student organization leaders are juniors, according to Rosengarth.

All of the members of the election committee must sign a document that pledges that they are unbiased. The elections commission can enforce all election rules and also implement sanctions against candidates, including disqualification.

This year, the elections for student government will take place on Thursday, April 1.

Students who are interested in running for office will meet on March 18 in the SGA office. There, each potential candidate will be given a list of official rules and guidelines. On March 19, the candidates will receive their petition sheets. In order to get their name on the ballot, each candidate for senator must get the signatures of at least ten percent of the voters of the school which they seek to represent. Candidates for president must get the signatures of at least ten percent of the entire university.

Tollefson Shares Experiences

By SHARON WINTERS

Don Tollefson, sports director for WPVI-TV in Philadelphia, is currently teaching a broadcast media course at Villanova.

Tollefson views his course as a bridge between academic theory and professional experience. His eight years of practical knowledge in the field of broadcast communications have given him insights that are helpful to beginners. Further, his experience in media has allowed him to view broadcast developments and changes.

"Cable is obviously more and more of a factor," Tollefson noted. Television viewers are happier with the greater selection, he said. Cable will undoubtably change commercial television; pay channels appear to excel in films, variety and talk shows, he cited.

Yet, Tollefson believes that commercial television will prosper in two major areas: sports and local news. Sports, especially the major events, will remain on free television, he feels. If necessary, Congress would step in to keep the big athletic competitions on network channels so that the average sports fan will be able to see the games, he opined.

The other area that will continue to be a boom on commercial television will be the local news. "Local TV will continue to prosper," Tollefson said, "A cable station can open and broadcast locally with a staff of five people." "A show like Action News, on the other hand, requires about 100 people as well as a tremendous capital investment," he explained. "Local news will be all right for a long time," he believes.

Another media concern involves legal matters. "More and more stations will need full-time staff lawyers," Tollefson related, with legal complexities in the field growing by "leaps and bounds."

Tollefson feels that many problems in broadcasting are created by the media itself. "The biggest danger to the media is irresponsible reporting," he said. "The demand for news has increased tremendously. There is a mad dash by journalists to fill the demand. As a result, some professionals are careless or irresponsible. A reporter should check and double check information," commented Tollefson. Further, the journalist should have sufficient sources, he said.

"Watergate encouraged too much over-zealous reporting," Tollefson explained. "Woodward and Bernstein, the Washington Post reporters that covered the story, were so acclaimed that many others aspired to be like them. "However, investigative reporting is the pinnacle of achievement in the media. This is not a task for the novice."

Another problem with over enthusiastic media professionals is the desire to gain recognition and awards. The desire for prestige can lead to such situations as character assassination or trying people in the press, Tollefson explained.

The media as a whole needs to exercise self-restraint, Tollefson noted. Sometimes, individual privacy is invaded unnecessarily, he believes. "The media should not be a public-relations arm for anyone; yet, negative news seems to a point of concentration, especially with some of the larger newspapers," he said. The media should not ignore the good news, he added.

Tollefson feels that with principles and responsibility, journalists and the media will be fine. With proper ethics, professionals have no need to be threatened by the legal aspects of the field.

A good reporter should be able to cover anything, according to the Philadelphia sportscaster. In college, Tollefson was the editor of his school's paper. His experiences in journalism both academically and practically, have given him a multi-faceted perspective. For example, some people look at sports too narrowly, he said. Sports can be seen as just entertainment, but, Tollefson credits athletics with more than this.

"People from diverse backgrounds are able to come together and cooperate towards a common goal," Tollefson observed. "Team members can work with each other despite their separate ambitions."

The violence in sports has been cited by some as a negative aspect of athletics. Tollefson does not feel that "violence" on the field is a problem. He is bothered more by the violence of the fans; bottle throwing and fights in the stands are dangerous to everyone, he said.

Only a handful of professional athletes would purposefully hurt another player, he continued. Although hockey has been noted for violence, for example, the Flyers are known as the "Broad Street Brawlers," Tollefson has a different perspective on the physical nature of this sport." The fights that occur during games should not be banned. "Hockey is unique," according to Tollefson. "Players carry a stick that could be used as a weapon. The fights during the game are spontaneous; they allow players to release frustration. If the fist fights are eliminated, the hockey stick might be used instead," he said. "That would be more harmful than a fist fight."

Tollefson is involved in "Ropes not Bars" in New Jersey. This is a program for juvenile offenders, many of whom were involved with drugs, he related. The program teaches boxing as a positive physical activity, he said. Further, the sport gives the youthful offenders confidence, he added.

Another involvement of Tollefson's is teaching. Last year, he taught at William Penn High School. The course was a federally-funded communications program. Tollefson found the experience motivating and said that the feeling carried over to this year at Villanova.

The sportscaster became aquainted with the University through Raymond G. Wilke, associate professor of speech communication. Wilke invited the Action News personality to guest lecture at Villanova. Since that initial association, Tollefson decided to teach here, although he received offers from other colleges.

"People have been good to me (at Villanova)," Tollefson said. Sometimes there can be resentment; but, "I haven't felt that here," he added.

Recruitment of Minorities Lacking

Starting this past Wednesday, Villanova's Black Cultural Society began a series of activities to celebrate Black History Month, an annual recognition of blacks and their achievements. The society, organized to enhance student life and provide a sense of unity among its members, is a necessary part of any university, particularly one where minority enrollment is barely above two percent.

One must wonder, though, why a university of Villanova's size and reputation has such a dismal record when it comes to recruiting and enrolling minority students.

Certainly the location of the school is not a valid explanation. Though situated in the middle of the Main Line, the school is well-served by various means of public transportation, and is easily accessible from anywhere in the Philadelphia area. If anything, minority recruitment should be facilitated, not retarded, by a school's proximity to a major metropolitan area.

The higher cost of attending a private as opposed to a public university should not be a major hindrance, either. Granted, spiraling tuition costs and severe cuts in federal funding for education make it a little more difficult for all of us to afford to attend, but the University surely has the resources to at least pick up the slack for minority students, the ones most hurt by it all.

The final myth which needs to be dispelled is that the University's academic standards are so rigorous that minorities are somehow unable to compete effectively. It is unfortunate that many hold the fallacious belief that minority students are academically disadvantaged. This is most definitely untrue and unfounded, evidenced by the fact that what few minority students Villanova does have attain as much academic success as anyone else.

Why, then, aren't there more minorities at Villanova?

Perhaps the fact that there are less than ten blacks on the faculty and in administrative positions is a deterrent to minority enrollment. At any rate, this figure cannot be viewed as encouraging. But perhaps even worse is that there seems to be administrative indifference, the most subtle form of institutionalized racism, to increasing minority attendance. Very little real effort is made on the part of the Admissions Office to enhance and diversify the student body, and this doesn't appear likely to change in the future. We contend, though, that if Villanova is intent upon upholding and sustaining its academic mission to stimulate and promote intellectual, social, and ethical growth, then this sad situation must be rectified.

Space Invaders Deserve Zapping

No one can possibly deny that empty parking spaces at Villanova get more scarce every year, while the price for a sticker that can guarantee absolutely nothing keeps going up and up. Anyone who looks in any of the lots during the day will see a jammed, convoluted mess. It's bad enough that people who have paid $35 for a sticker often can't find a single space; it is even worse when many of the spaces are taken by vehicles without the stickers.

We're glad to see that Security is finally attempting to do something about it. This past week, many stickerless cars were towed from the Stanford Hall lot. However, these represent only a small portion of the huge number which are illegally parked on campus every day.

If some of the parking jumble is to be alleviated, Security must keep making a concerted effort to remedy the situation. Continued towing of cars without stickers would appear to be the best way to deal with the problem because it causes the most inconvenience for the students, thereby making them more aware and possibly more responsible. If people want to park their cars here at Villanova, they must be willing to accept and abide by the rules of the University.

Letters to the Editor

Alumni Letter

Editor's note: The following is a copy of a letter sent to Rev. George Riley, O.S.A., vice-president for development, and the Board of Trustees.

Dear Father Riley:

Enclosed please find my check for $1,000 which has been the amount of my giving to the alumni program for the past few years. You will note that the check is unsigned. I am also enclosing a copy of my October 13, 1981 letter to Rev. John Driscoll, O.S.A.

I have felt since the spring of 1981 that Reverend Father Driscoll did a tremendous disfavor to the University in the way he unilaterally abolished football through his actions at the spring meeting of the Board of Trustees. I had written previous letters to the Board of Trustees stating that the action taken by them, especially the manner in which they took that action, was extremely detrimental to the school. I pointed out in my letter of October 13, 1981 that Reverend Father Driscoll's financial reasons for abolishing football in his "Fall 1981" letter to alumni, parents and friends of Villanova did not coincide with the Trustees Committee's figures published in the October 9, 1981 Villanovan. No further explanation has been made to my knowledge to the General Alumni Association.

I have tried to be loyal to Villanova University since I graduated in 1954. Presently I do not feel that the University through Father Driscoll's actions has been loyal to the alumni. I have enclosed the unsigned check for $1,000 and hereby promise to sign that check once an acceptable intercollegiate football program has been reestablished at the University. You have my permission to hold the check and return it to me upon completion of that condition.

S.G.A. 'Futility'

To the Editor,

The headline in last week's Villanovan caught my attention and I, along with most of my fellow students I presume, anxiously raced through the article to assess the damage. Just how much would tuition go up? Finishing the article I was disgusted. The proposed tuition increase sadly was not the source of my extreme displeasure; I was merely dismayed at the hike that experience had told me to expect.

The unexpected comment by S.G.A. president Bob Rosengarth that his disapproval, as student representative, would go totally unheeded by the Trustees left me seething. What kind of student government president would let himself be quoted in the campus publication on the absolute futility of his organization? Only one at Villanova where his comment would probably go totally unnoticed. Until now. The apathy and no-responsibility circle of student government at Villanova is complete. Student rights rest in peace.

Tution Increases

Dear Editor,

When will it ever end? For the past years the administration has had the unchecked authority to increase our tuition at phenomenal rates. In the past, the increases were justified to the students and parents as necessary to meet ever rising energy costs. But, during a time of a world oil glut the University has still increased tuition, at a rate greater than inflation.

Where is our money going? This question has never been answered. Are the professors, the backbone of the University, receiving a 14 percent pay increase, or is the increase going to support our sports program, or will it be used for snow removal? The administration claims that it will be used to meet needed repairs on campus. Why should the administration be able to pass on their inability to maintain the University in the past to the student population of the present? Claims are that the buildings have been neglected for 15 years, if this is so, then where has the money collected 15 years ago gone?

Therefore, I urge that the student body insist on the right to inspect the University's expenditures and should also insist on being an active part of the major decision making body on campus. The Board of Trustees should have a student representative, not only to allow students the opportunity to voice their opinions but also to aid the trustees in making rational decisions for the future. Villanova is like any corporation and if it fails to meet the needs of its public, Villanova like so many other universities will be facing serious problems in the future.

The administration will argue that students are not responsible enough to sit on the Board of Trustees, but my response is that if we are responsible enough to provide 95 percent of the University's revenue, then we are therefore capable of having a student on the Board.

Accident

Dear Editor,

As a close friend of Deirdre Attridge and Cathy Mulvaney, the two freshmen Rosemont students involved in the car accident early Sunday, January 31, in front of the Villanova Field House, I feel it necessary to dispute the recent article in the February 5, 1982 edition of the Villanovan.

I am greatly disturbed by certain unsubstantiated facts that were printed, as well as by quotes attributed to "sources close" to and certain unnamed acquaintances of the two students. No attempt was made by the Villanovan to contact reliable sources, as is apparent by the blatantly incorrect information printed concerning the accident and its aftermath. When accurate information was brought to the attention of the Villanovan editor by Deirdre Attridge herself, no retraction or apology was offered for misleading, inaccurate information.

If the proper people had been contacted, such as the Public Relations Director, Dean of Students, or any other designated representative of Rosemont College, more reliable information could have been obtained by members of the Villanovan staff.

I am particularly concerned at the distress caused to Deirdre by the implication in the article that she did not "suffer", either physically or psychologically. The Villanovan had no knowledge of her physical injuries and certainly appeared insensitive to the tremendous loss she sustained as driver of the car in which a close friend was killed. The paper inaccurately reported that Deirdre had returned to classes by the following Tuesday, February 2, when in fact, she did not return until Monday, February 8. She and her close friends were and are deeply involved in supporting the Mulvaney family and the distressed Rosemont community over the tragic loss of Cathy.

A number of Villanova students have been supportive and helpful to us throughout the ordeal, and I would like to express deep appreciation to them. Furthermore, many of these students, those who know what actually happened, agree that Deirdre is owed an apology by the Villanovan and its editors for its inaccurate, and insensitive treatment of her.

...And More Responses

Dear Editor,

Not having read your original editorial, I do not feel I can responsibly write a letter to the editor. However, I was incensed after having read the Letters to the Editor, in the Feb. 5 edition of the Villanovan. I perceive of myself as a moral person, and I am pro-choice; I am not pro-abortion as the "Right to Lifers" might like to believe. As to whether or not abortion is a religious issue, how can one deny the fact that different religions profess the human life begins at various stages of development.

I want to support you in your effort to share a conflictual issue with the population of Villanova. What else is a university for if not to encourage people to think and grow through exploration?

Shelley Miller
Graduate School of Counseling in Human Relations

Dear Editor:

I was profoundly distressed to read the pro-abortion editorial appearing in the January 29, 1982 issue of the Villanovan. Distressed mainly because Villanova has evidently failed to transmit to its student editors those basic Christian values on whose behalf it was founded. And it clearly demonstrated the failure of the university in another area, that of training its students in logical thinking.

Villanova is, at least officially, a Catholic institution. Its fundamental purpose is to support and to promulgate the teaching of the Catholic Church. To maintain its credibility it simply cannot permit an official university organization, in this case the student newspaper, to oppose and to attack basic teachings and basic morality of the Catholic Church. If these student editors do not feel they can accept the truths of the Church, they are quite free to remove themselves elsewhere. For them to remain and to attempt to destroy the institution that shelters them and provides them with a platform is surely the rankest sort of dishonesty.

As far as the arguments given in the editorial in support of the killing of unborn children are concerned, they are simply a dreary rehash of the clap-trap used by the abortionists in their propaganda aimed at the semi-literate. They would not dare use this nonsense in controversy with informed pro-life opponents. That the authors of this editorial accepted and repeated it is a sad indication of the level of their intellectual development.

They say the state cannot impose morality on those who do not accept it. I suggest they try telling that to the next state trooper who stops them for speeding on the turnpike and see how far it will get them! Of course the state can impose morality. That's the purpose of laws; of every law.

It is clear that the student editors know nothing about abortion, from either the theoretical or practical standpoints. If they think this is some sort of ivory tower word game —playing with ideas — that has no significance in the real world, then they should come along with us on some Saturday morning to an abortion mill as many of us have done for years to attempt to dissuade the children — 14, 15, 16-year-olds — entering these places from killing their children. They might then gain some sort of insight into the horror, the degradation, the despair that is a part of this loathsome practice.

I suppose the excuse that will be given us for permitting this abomination to be printed is "academic freedom," that ever-useful apologia for covering a multitude of sins. One wonders what the reaction would be if the student editors raised the defense of "academic freedom" on behalf of an editorial advocating a renewal of another form of genocide to destroy the remaining Jewish population. Or perhaps one calling for the return of slavery for blacks. I doubt they would remain student editors — or even students — for long.

Dear Editor,

"With friends like you, who needs enemies?" I am presently enrolled at Villanova, matriculating for the third time and working full-time in the Respect Life program of the Archdiocese. To say I am outraged at your undersigning an editorial such as the one on abortion on Jan. 29 would be an understatement. To have advertised such an embarrassing want in a letter would have been one thing. To have made it the lead editorial in a newspaper which has always been held in high regard by those of us who subscribe to the God-centered philosophy of our Church and our alma mater is to say the least appalling.

The institutional church of which Villanova University has always been unswervingly representative is proudly one of the few united fronts against the slaughter of the preborn and I recommend that if you believe "religious beliefs are being imposed" that you get hold of "The Dynamics of the Abortion Debate" in America (2/13/82) and reconsider both your stance and your editorial position.

Op-ed Criticized

Dear Editor:

We are writing in response to an op-ed published last week entitled "Professor Criticizes University Lecture Policy." In this op-ed, Dr. DesJardins states his objection to a University policy requiring the presence of a member of the religion department at a lecture on abortion. We must admit that we are puzzled as to why this writer would find this improper. We see a number of advantages to having a representative of Villanova's religious department present at such a lecture: (1) To observe whether the position being expounded on (an important religious and moral issue) is contrary to the stated purposes of the University and fundamental Catholic beliefs; (2) To be in a position to state the University's views and to preclude any impression of tacit or implicit approval by the University of positions that may be contrary to such University purposes and fundamental beliefs. After all, an "expert" on moral philosophy would not necessarily be completely familiar with or believe in Catholic moral teachings.

Dear Editor:

In his last letter to the Villanovan (Feb. 12), Professor DesJardin's reliance upon Papal authority in order to take a quick slap at capitalism is somewhat odd in the context of that letter. Amid the pleasant morass of mothers and apple-pies, Professor DesJardins appoints Mill and Jefferson to be the ideological gurus of our "Catholic university" — "We ought to have at least a strong prima facie obligation to follow the principles of a Jefferson or Mill since these principles of free expression seem to be the best means available for fulfilling our function as a university." Hey, doesn't everyone know that the work of Mill was placed upon the Catholic Church's Index of Forbidden Books? And doesn't everyone know that Jefferson was a deist whose principle cure for social and individual evils was to rid the world of "bigotry and priest-craft?" Whatever happened to reliance upon Papal authority in the choice of educational mentors? What of the many Papal encyclicals regarding Catholic education? It seems that a pious reliance upon Papal views only arises when it might be turned against the guys in the black hats, i.e., capitalists.

Nova Speaks On 'Old' Berlin

By DIANA MURRAY

Dr. Fritz Nova of the political science department discussed the history of the German city of Berlin, Monday, February 15 in the Connelly Center.

Nova, a Villanova professor for 29 years, traced the historical development of the city from the reign of the Hohenzollern family to the present.

Born and educated in Berlin, Nova lived in the city during the period of the Weimar Republic, beginning in 1918 and ending when Adolph Hitler came to power in 1933.

According to Nova, Berlin was originally a 'fisherman's village transformed into the capital city by the Hohenzollern family. The Weimar Republic abolished the Hohenzollern monarchy and established the Social Democratic government. During Nova's duration of time in the city, Berlin was the size of Washington, D.C., with four million inhabitants. Nevertheless, "There were no slums or ethnic ghettos," commented Nova. "The only minority was the German Jews."

Dr. Fritz Nova Charles Guida Photo

"After World War I, there was a great influx of Easterners," Nova continued. "These people voluntarily lived in certain quarters. Berlin, as well as London and Paris, became the headquarters of many refugees. Berlin was no longer a 'German' city."

According to Nova, Berlin was a great cultural center during his childhood. The city boasted three major graduate schools and as many theatres. It was also a city of enormous cleanliness, with a number of monuments.

"The people were very history-minded," said Nova. "The streets were beautifully arranged. Although there were no automobiles, Berlin was one of the first cities to have Unterbahnen — subways. These subways were well-organized and very efficient," claimed Nova. Nova said that red cars were used by the upper class and yellow cars by the lower class.

Nova is one of many native Germans who believe Hitler did the German people a great injustice. Hitler's headquarters was on Wilhelmsstrasse in Berlin, although he spent little of his time there. "Hitler was afraid of the Berliners because he knew he was not well-liked there," said Nova.

Nova concluded his lecture by explaining Berlin's conditions today. The Chancellor of Germany, the President and Vice-President, as well as numerous embassies and workers are housed there.

Nova said that today's divided Berlin is not what he remembers it as, nor does he like it. "I don't see the re-unification of Germany in the future," he said. "On the contrary, the East and West Germans will grow farther apart each year."

PA. State Colleges Sued

By LEONARD J. LaBARTH

Villanova students will not be alone in paying more for their college education next semester.

Tuition for the Ivy League schools will increase 14-15 percent. Two local colleges, Bryn Mawr and Rosemont are also planning significant cost increases.

Pennsylvania state colleges, long regarded as a less expensive way of obtaining a college education, have increased tuition by 12 percent, effective the current semester.

However, a class-action suit protesting the $75 per semester increase was filed earlier this month by the Commonwealth Association of Students (CAS) challenging the 12 percent hike.

The CAS, a lobbying group representing about 76,000 state college students, filed the suit in Commonwealth Court. The suit alleged that the state violated its "contract" with the students by imposing the fee.

The fee was approved by the State College and University Directors (SCUD) Board.

The dispute between the state and the students centers on the timing and the fairness of the tuition increase.

Education Secretary Robert Scanlon said the increase was needed to pay for a $6.3 million salary settlement with the faculty of the state schools.

The settlement was awarded in 1977 but the subsequent state appeal stalled the finalization of the contract. The case ended November 9 when the state Supreme Court upheld the panel's salary award.

Scanlon said that the only alternative to increasing tuitions was to drastically curtail spending of state schools. The presidents of the state schools opposed cuts in spending, the secretary said, because the cuts would have an adverse effect on education at their schools.

The viewpoint of the CAS other dissenters is that the tui increase will have an wh elming effect on students, m of whom face a drastic los funding because of Reagan's ministration cuts.

The CAS suit said that the violated its contract with students by increasing the tui fees. The CAS said in the suit the students already had cepted the offers of a $625 fee" before the semester be

Judicial Affairs

Burke Changes Rules

By TOM DUNN

Villanova's campus judicial system has been consolidated this year with changes that include the addition of Judicial Affairs Officer Joseph Burke.

Burke played an integral role in the reorganization of the adjudication process implemented last September.

Dividing jurisdiction between three review boards has been discarded, and initial discretion has been delegated to the Judicial Affairs Officer. Appeals no longer need administrative authorization from the Dean of Students.

In the past, appeals were reviewed only by the Vice-President of Student Life. They are now re-evaluated by a three-member board composed of one administrator, one faculty member and one student. "The system is now more of a centrally run process," said Burke.

Under the new process, alleg violators of the student code dealt with by area coordinators Residence Life or the Judicial A fairs Officer, depending on severity of the infraction. If nature of the violation warra suspension or expulsion, the p petrator can choose betwe review by the University Judic Board or the Judicial Affairs O ficer.

The Judicial Affairs Officer vestigates and resolves incide of alleged violations and impo sanctions on guilty parties. also serves as the non-vo chairperson on the Judicial fairs Board.

Appeals are reviewed by University Judicial Appe Board. Under extremely unus circumstances, the Vice-Presid for Student Life will hear a sec appeal.

Belmont Chosen Union Pres.

By KATHI A. IANNACONE

At this time of year, most campus organizations are beginning to select new officers in order to infuse new personalities and new ideas into their programs.

The Villanova Union is no exception to this rule. On Monday evening, after a complicated application and interviewing process, Tom Belmont was named as president of the Union. Belmont is presently a sophomore honors/English major. He will be succeeding Irene Smith.

Although Belmont is a sophomore, he is not a rookie in the Union or with leadership roles. As a freshman, Belmont became actively involved in Union work in the publicity committee where he acted as calendar chairperson. In the past year, Belmont made yet another step up the leadership ladder when he was selected as the coordinator of the entire publicity committee.

Now as the president, it is his job to make changes in and improve upon what the Union has previously accomplished.

"Right now the Union has a pretty bad image," Belmont commented, "I just want to improve that image and try to change people's attitudes toward the Union."

Some of Belmont's immediate plans for this change are to begin working with other campus organizations. Belmont believes that since most groups will have budget problems in the next year, a "united" programming may be beneficial for all.

Also selected to serve on the Union board was Tom Keebler. Keebler, a sophomore business major, was chosen as secretary/treasurer.

About this choice Belmont stated, "We'll work well together. Tom and I are going to have a great time working with all of the other good co-ordinators coming in."

All other Union appointments will be announced on Thursday, February 25.

Thrilled at the job ahead Belmont said, "I'm just extremely happy. It's so hard to believe I'm in, but I'm so excited."

LXA Grows With A New Little Brother

By KATHI A. IANNACONE

One mother, one father, a few sisters and some brothers are the usual ingredients for what makes up a family. But how does one little Mexican boy combined with about 60 or more college guys create a family? When it's love and concern that brings them together, that's what makes them a family.

This situation is not a common one, but here at Villanova this type family has become a reality with the Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity.

Enrique Verde Granados is the adopted 11-year-old Mexican boy of the fraternity. "A few of the brothers saw the article about adoption and they really wanted to follow up on it," commented Jim Crotty, vice president of LXA.

The Christian Children's Fund is the group that the fraternity is working through. A donation of $18 per month is sent to the Meyelhualco Center located on the southeastern edge of Mexico City. The project serves both boys and girls, ages 3 to 17 years.

LXA is a social and service oriented fraternity, yet the monthly donation is not funded through the brothers' dues. "A collection is taken up at the meetings. It's just something that the guys wanted to do," Crotty explained.

Project Meyelhualco was started in 1960 to help children who live in their own homes. The money provided a kindergarten program, a daily meal, medical attention, religious training, recreational opportunities, vocational classes for parents and older children and the services of social workers.

The children are in need of help because their community is in a fairly new section that has grown rapidly within the past years. Since many of the people are migratory workers who have come to the city from rural village in search of jobs, the parents of the children are generally too poor to provide adequate food and care. Many of the children are malnourished and in poor health.

In other cases, some children come from homes disrupted by death or desertion. Also, in their overcrowded, dusty part of town there are no wholesome recreation areas for ths children to play. And without assistance, the youngsters would receive little encouragement to attend school.

With project support, the new facilities are brightly painted, airy and equipped with screens. They include classrooms, an office, medical examining room, combination library-writing room, dining hall, kitchen and patio. Through this funding, social workers assist the families in all aspects of getting children enrolled in schools, checking the children's homes, and keeping children with their progress and needs.

"We've already been in touch with our little boy," Crotty stated. "He knows who we are and he has been in contact. He sent us a picture of himself which we put near our awards in a house where a few of the brothers live. He also told us about some of his hobbies, soccer and math."

Crotty further commented, "Soon we'll be sending him a fraternity picture of all the brothers in the LXA t-shirts. We really want to keep in touch with him."

The fraternity is very enthused about this special project. Crotty admitted, "the nice part about it is that now all the brothers have a 'little brother' to share."

"Death" Defies The Ordinary

By ALICE FISHER

It has come to this reviewer's attention that Villanova University students do not voluntarily attend many of the fine productions that Vasey Theatre has to offer. Why is it that when a student announces that he is going to see a performance over at Vasey Theatre, it is only because an English professor insisted that he do so? Why is it that people who supposedly come here to learn shy away from something as poignant, humorous and heartbreaking as "Death of a Salesman," by Arthur Miller, Vasey's latest production, directed by Lon Winston? One would think that anyone majoring in any field would want to discover what this play has to offer for it is very relevant to the student of the Eighties. The play is simple to follow, yet it has a complex web of themes which makes one wonder about what one is up against in the world of reality.

The characters in "Death of a Salesman" are not unlike those people we meet everyday and are certainly not unlike ourselves. Willy Loman is a travelling salesman, aged 60, with a wife and two sons. He believes in paying his bills on time, meeting his insurance payments, and is striving to attain the "American Dream." He looks forward to the day when he can put his feet up and enjoy the comforts of family and friends. But Willy has no friends, he's getting tired and the money isn't coming in. His sons, whom he has brought up to be "real men," are barely eking a living, and the "American Dream" which he has taught his sons to pursue is dead. His wife, Linda, is his support, and when the "Dream" begins to slip through his fingers she props him up so he can keep on reaching. The Lomans with their ideals can be found next door, among the Villanova faculty, and in our own homes. The play may have been written in 1959, but in these times it appears that our own parents will also be struggling to maintain their dignity.

John Lloyd, Richard Lolla, George Spillane, and Maggie Flynn in "Death of a Salesman."

Are we so certain that we want that nine-to-five job so we can wear alligators on our clothes or be like Biff who roams the country, uncertain of what he is, but content to be a "loser"? We too are on a threshold of a dream, but do we have the guts to realize the dream may not be what we want?

If one is not content just to learn from an American classic, then perhaps the re-creation of the post-war period which is duplicated by the likes of "Happy Days" and "American Graffiti" would interest you. The grim reality of the average American urban home is a slap in the face compared with what the Cunninghams have.

If nostalgia doesn't turn you on, maybe good acting and creative direction will. George Spillane, who plays Willy, has more to offer than any actor on prime-time television. He has powerful projection and he demands that the audience give him the attention he deserves. He gives his role the dignity it needs to carry off the tragic concept of a middle-class American. Maggie Flynn, as Linda, also lends respect to her character so that Linda is not just a housewife used by her family, but a woman who can demand what she wants and give what she can.

Both John Lloyd and Richard T. Lolla, Biff and Happy, overcome the difficulty of jumping back and forth in time. They act the age of high-school seniors as gracefully as they portray two bachelors up against society.

Lon Winston did not overlook the importance of the supporting cast. Every character was made essential to the American tragedy, and each actor gave his or her role an individual style which made the play quite enjoyable.

To a student, "Death of a Salesman" is an enjoyable means of education; and the Villanova Theatre is an aspect of entertainment just as worthy of supporting as football and beer parties on campus. "Death of a Salesman" will run tonight and Saturday at 8 p.m. Tickets are available at the Vasey Theatre box office.

Album Review:

Kane Is More Than Able

By SHARON WINTERS

Kieran Kane is a country artist who recently released an album called, oddly enough, Kieran Kane. Kane's namesake effort is his first album for Electra/Asylum, distributed on the heels of two hit singles on the country charts.

The album, on the first play, as expected, sounds like middle-of-the-road-mellow country: a pleasant vocal, MOR stance and a country twang. The record exhibits a low-key style that could easily cross-over to the easy listening category. For example, EASY 101 or MGK might program some of this album.

However, despite Kane's mellow first stance, rock and Top 40 fans would be unwise to forget the name Kieran Kane. First, the artist has the ability to sing a crisp vocal, if he wishes. I'll Be Your Man Around the House is the kind of Kane material that could easily sneak into the Top 40, displacing lesser singles of the pop-rock genre, such as those from Lindsay Buckingham or Rick Springfield.

Kane has a second, and perhaps more important, attribute worth noting. He can write. Further, he can write without using over-worn cliches and odious sing-song rhymes noticeable in some first efforts.

The talent for writing good songs could place Kane on a list with Elvis Costello, Karla Bonoff, Warren Zevon and Lowell George. Yes, all of those are talents covered and popularized by Linda Ronstadt. Ronstadt has a habit of amassing and recording good material, material often overlooked by others in the mainstream of rock-n-roll.

If Ronstadt hears of Kane, As Long As I'm Rockin' With You could be a prime cut on her next LP. One can almost hear her singing now: "I may never have much silver and gold, I've got somethin' more precious and warmer to hold. That old rockin' chair don't scare me like it used to . . . long as I'm rocking with you." The song intermingles country with blues, a mixture that Ronstadt exhibits a fondness for. Further, this is the kind of material that she performs best; perhaps that is why this song brings her to mind.

She's Looking For Something New, is another bluesy number that seems to have Ronstadt stamped all over it. It sounds like the sequel to Hasten Down the Wind, albeit with irony; "She's got a two-room flat on a street downtown, a full-time job at the lost and found." Another song that recalls Ronstadt is I Feel It With You: predominantly a rocker that could merit airplay for the original version on Kane.

Kane has an apt talent for writing potential hit songs, a talent that should not go unnoticed. The knack for this sort of writing, also, should not be scorned. Top 40 need not be a wasteland or a teen-idol showcase.

This new artist has the ability to write with originality and wit. Both Rockin' With You and Something New exhibit his low-key humor. In a word, the lyrics are refreshing. The words are coupled with tunes that are hummable and catchy. Add to this the fact that Kane can sing a style range from country to moderate rock-n-roll. In short, If Electra/Asylum notes the abilities of this artist and promotes him accordingly, Kane could become substantially more than a country singer, and have influence beyond the confines of the country charts.

After all, when an album is labelled "country" it tends to sound country. On the first listen, this record fit that mold. The songs were interesting enough, though, to prompt a few more plays. Kane, thus, may have his heart in country; he may intend to write country songs and Electra/Asylum may wish to promote him in that context. But, Kane's abilities transcend the confines of singular expression.

'Freeze-Frame' Fever At Spectrum

By PETER CAPIZZI

For the second time in less than a week, a New England-based band has come to the Spectrum. The Cars arrived Monday night drawing only 11,000 fans. However, on Saturday night, the J. Geils Band stormed the Spectrum and drew a sold-out crowd. For those who like to move and get involved in their music this was the concert to see. The J. Geils Band, with the support of their new album Freeze-Frame and a fine warm-up group, John Butcher Axis, kept their momentum gathered from previous concerts going full steam ahead. The Friday before, The J. Geils Band played before an ecstatic Lehigh University audience.

To kick their concert tour off they performed to a sold-out crowd at University of Maine at Orono. Furthermore, The J. Geils Band is the only band ever to sell out the Boston Garden three nights in a row. The definite increase in popularity will make this tour for J. Geils their most successful. The show began with the heavy sounding guitar from John Butcher Axis. His musical style is laced with heavy bass overtones that set the beat to powerful songs that made the crowd want to move. The name of the band was not familiar to most J. Geils fans, however, when It Takes a New Man was played, the crowd reacted as if they had been following the band for years. The John ButcherAxis Band was a fine warm-up band for J. Geils because of their two contrasting styles of music.

J. Geils opened with Twist and Shout which preceeded the hit Just Can't Wait. Both these songs raised the crowds expectations for a great concert. The band cranked out these two hits with such vibrance and feeling that never stopped once throughout the night. The energetic lead singer, Peter Wolf, kept the crowd on its feet. Wolf's vocals were superb throughout the show, even while he was being mobbed with girls. At one point in the show six ecstatic girls jumped on stage and grabbed at Wolf. The stage crew tried quickly to cure the problem, but as soon as one girl was led off another seemed to appear on stage.

During the third song of the concert, Comeback, strobe-lights were used in the instrumental. These were used so effectively as to make the jumping, acrobatic Peter Wolf look as if he was in slow-motion. Wolf's actions and gestures give him a pseudo-Jagger style of singing.

Probably the most surprising event of the night was the movement from J. Geils himself. Usually he prefers to remain in the background with his mirrored sunglasses, blasting out guitar riffs; however, neither of these two were seen. He jumped up center stage with Wolf and showed the crowd how well J. Geils really does support his band.

Other songs that were performed were Sanctuary, When the Walls Come Tumblin' Down, Nighttime, and, I Must Have Got Lost to bring the total to sixteen songs plus four encores.

The crowd contributed greatly to the success of the concert. Over a thousand flashes went off as J. Geils began their title track to their new album, Freeze-Frame. The resounding keyboards from keyboardist, vocalist, co-composer Seth Justman were comparable to that of Dan Federici's for the E-Street Band. The multi-talented key-boardist co-wrote most of the songs on Freeze-Frame with Peter Wolf. If asked what is the most distinguishing characteristic of the Geils Band, one would have to say the harmonica playing from Magic Dick. No other harmonica from any band, including that of Mark Wenner's of the Nighthawks, is comparable to this sound. However, the J. Geils Band would not exist if Daniel Klein and his bass and the powerful drumming from Stephen Bladd were absent. Both these men create that moving beat that energizes audiences.

The set closed with Ain't Nothin' But A Party, which could have gone without saying. Wherever J. Geils plays it is in a party atmosphere, whether they are in Cumberland County Civic Center for the annual New Year's bash or the Spectrum. Having seen J. Geils before, I knew this was not the end. Sure enough, they were back out in a flash to play their version of Where's All Our Love Gone. This song seemed to emphasize the professionalism of this group. They played rowdy songs all night, but when a familiar song is done in their own version and done superbly — this alone shows that they are truly a great band. However, one encore was not enough to satisfy the crowd. J. Geils followed with two more quick encores, playing Centerfold and Chesapeakee Bay. Then the curtains began to close, the lights went up, and the exit music began (it happened to be the Doors), but suddenly the exit music stopped, the curtain flew up, and J. Geils ehded the house party with a little nostalgia, Love-itis. As Satisfaction was the old stand-by used to end the Stone's concert, Love-itis is used in the same manner by J. Geils. Perhaps the J. Geils Band can indeed be called the American Rolling Stones.

NOW PLAYING AT A THEATRE NEAR YOU

Perfection: Not Much To Ask For

By GREG ANTON

"Evita," the Tony Award winning play based on Eva Peron's rise to power, opened in Philadelphia at the Forrest Theatre on Thursday, Feb. 11. The lavish production has brought an aura of excitement to the often deprived Philadelphia theatre goer. The arrival of this critically acclaimed play brings with it the masterful direction of Harold Prince, the beautiful music of Andrew Lloyd Webber, and the intelligent and witty lyrics of Tim Rice.

Although "Evita" contains the necessary elements which make a musical great, they never seem to blend together in this production to create an exceptionally excellent performance. Perhaps, though, this may not be directly attributable to the company, for the audience anticipates and demands stupendous and flawless performances. Everyone knows "Evita" swept the 1980 Tony Awards and is enjoying long-running success throughout the world. Also, each member of the audience brings with him his own preconceived notions of Eva Peron. The combination of the two elevate "Evita" to such a high plateau that any performance, no matter how good, cannot possibly satisfy the insatiable expectations of the audience.

Valerie Perri, as Eva Peron, gives a convincing and energetic performance. There can be no denying that the role of Eva is extremely demanding and draining; however, Perri seems to lack that extra bit of charisma which makes a performance mesmerizing. Again, perhaps one expects too much. Perri does have a powerful and beautiful voice and her performance borders on excellence, yet needs to exude a more captivating stage presence in order to better represent the highly intensive Eva.

The contempt and dislike many had for Eva Peron is masterfully expressed by Anthony Crivello as Che, the Argentinean peasant worker. Throughout the play, he stirs dissent amongst the masses, hobnobs with the affluent and elite, and confronts Eva. Crivello's mannerisms, whether sincere or mocking, perfectly depict and express Che's cynicism and bitterness. Crivello resentlessly gives his all and successfully conveys a great diversity of emotions. His overwhelmingly powerful voice fills the theatre with raw energy, exuberance, and excitement.

The part of Juan Peron is neutralized by the emphasis given to Eva. The part of Juan, had it been developed a bit more, would have allowed one to get a better feel for this wild political figure. It also would have allowed Robb Alton, who portrays Juan, to exhibit more of his artistic talent. However, the Juan in "Evita" seems to be too lackluster, languid, and lethargic. Alton gives a fine performance; yet his vitality and dynamism are stifled by the role.

The remaining members of the company enliven the stage with their singing and their far too infrequent dancing. The sets and the stage direction employ many innovative devices which add a unique flare to the show. Occasionally, the play utilizes a slide projector to present actual shots of the Perons and the Argentinean people. Instead of being trivial and amateurish, the slides succeed in bringing authenticity and an additional touch of realism to the play.

Once one begins to isolate and evaluate separately the various elements in "Evita," one can appreciate the individual artistic achievements. "Evita" is an entertaining show and the company currently in Philadelphia gives a fine performance. But as Eva Peron herself once did, "Evita" suffers because it is forced to live up to its glorified reputation.

Valerie Perri, as Eva Peron.

Big East Battles Beckon

Editor's Note: The following article presents a purely subjective view of the Big East Tournament, based upon the opinions of the authors. The editorializing which takes place within the article is not to be mistaken for an exclusively factual account. The Big East Tournament will take place from March 4 until March 6, in Hartford, Connecticut. The format of the tournament is as follows: the regular season first-place finisher will face the last place team, the second-place finisher will meet the seventh-place team, the third and sixth teams will play each other, and the fourth and fifth-place finishers will round out the first day's competition. All winners will advance until only two teams are left, one of which will emerge as the Big East Champion. This team will be awarded an automatic bid in the NCAA post season tournament, the format of which we will not attempt to explain here.

(8-3 BIG EAST)

Entering the final 10 days of the Big East regular season in a deadlock with Georgetown for first place, the Wildcats must be touted as a pre-tournament favorite along with the Hoyas. Veterans Aaron Howard, Stewart Granger and John Pinone have combined with freshman Ed Pinckney and Dwayne McClain to produce a chemistry which has proven fatal to most of Villanova's opponents this season. Also enhancing the formula is the steady play of Mike Mulquin, Frank Dobbs, and Gary McLain off the bench, something which the Cats were short on last season.

Except for a dismal 11-day span during which, Villanova dropped four of five games (including three Big East contests), the team has been playing consistently good basketball. Once again Coach Massimino appears to have his team ready to peak at tournament time. Last year the Cats reeled off four straight wins to close out the regular season. If the Villanova blend of talent and coaching continues to produce as it has, the Cats may very well emerge as the top team in the Big East.

(8-3 BIG EAST)

Georgetown can be considered the Big East's most potent war machine. They have more weapons than any other squad. If one soldier goes down, the Hoyas come back with a fresh troop, and therein lies the secret to their success: depth.

Coach John Thompson, the commanding general, has stockpiled an impressive arsenal of guns in his army. The sharpshooter, senior Sleepy Floyd, hits deep jumpers with amazing proficiency. Floyd is beyond a doubt the key cog in Georgetown's well-oiled machine. But not the only cog.

Anchoring the middle is the big howitzer, 7' Patrick Ewing. Ewing's specialty is intimidation spelled in the form of blocked shots and slam dunks. His mere presence in the lane strikes fear (or hatred) in the hearts of all enemies.

Seniors Mike Hancock and Eric Smith provide steady leadership, as well as extra firepower. Hancock is the savvy 6-7 forward who can bang the boards and also hit the outside jump shot. Smith, a 1980-81 Big East second team selection, is the defensive workhorse who usually draws the assignment of shutting down the opposition's big gun.

ST. JOHN'S (17-6)
(7-4 BIG EAST)

The Redmen of St. John's are enjoying another fine season under the guidance of Head Coach Lou Carnesecca. After knocking off Kansas in the opening round of the ECAC Holiday Festival, the Redmen were able to stave off a late Villanova rally to win the tournament title. Freshmen Chris Mullins and Bill Wennington have combined with the consistent play of forward David Russel to give St. John's a potent attack. A pair of transfer players, Jeff Allen (Rutgers) and Bob Kelly (Holy Cross) have also stepped in this season to improve Carnesecca's squad.

Four losses mar the Redmen's Big East record as a result of series sweeps by Georgetown and Villanova; the latter being a reversal of last year's outcome. St. John's still has a shot at the regular season title but the tournament will most likely tell the tale of this season for the Redmen. If Carnesecca can continue to orchestrate a balanced attack from his combination of freshmen and veterans, the Redmen may add greatly to their scalp collection at the Big East Tournament.

UNIVERSITY OF CONNECTICUT (16-6)
(6-4 BIG EAST)

That UConn has exceptional talent has never been doubted. What has been suspect, however, in the Huskies' tenacity and drive. They are a team which seems to lack the "killer instinct" when they are ahead in a game.

With a front line which ranks among the best around, Connecticut can surely put points on the board. Dom Perno's senior threesome of 6-8 Corny Thompson, 6-11 Chuck Aleksinas, and 6-5 Mike McKay will give any opposing coach fits.

Coming into the 1981-82 season, the big question mark for the Huskies was the backcourt, but that enigma was quickly resolved. The "short and tall" tandem of 5-8 Karl Hobbs and 6-5 Norman Bailey have gelled into an efficient combination.

The Huskies have also proved this year that they can eke out close ones, as a 53-51 win over Nova and a 45-43 win over a game Providence will attest. They are certainly a team to be contended with. And let's not forget that the Tournament is being played in scenic Hartford, sometimes home of UConn. That alone should be enough inspiration for Corny and Co.

BOSTON COLLEGE (13-8)
(4-6 BIG EAST)

1980 was a banner year for Boston College. The Eagles never enjoyed a more successful season, as they captured the Music City Invitational Christmas Tourney, the Big East regular season title, and then marched all the way to the final 16 in the NCAA's before being bumped by St. Joe's. How times change.

While B.C. isn't exactly toiling in anonymity, rewards have been fewer and further in between this year. Dr. Tom Davis still receives 25 points per game in the form of Mr. John Bagley, but beyond that, the Eagles are questionable. The fact that they've won as many games as they have is as much of a tribute to the genius of Davis than anything else.

The Eagles run a full court pressure defense the entire game and with Davis' shuttle system, fresh players come in off the bench in waves.

SYRACUSE (14-8)
(6-4 BIG EAST)

Jim Boeheim has a solid team this year, one which has as its nucleus a trio of juniors: Erich Santifer, Tony Bruin, and Leo Rautins. The team's main weakness is its lack of bench strength, a factor which has forced Boeheim to push his starters to their limit. Except for a knee injury which sidelined Rautins for two weeks, the Orangemen juniors have been giving all that could be asked of them and then some. Freshman center Andre Hawkins has also supplied a much needed boost for Syracuse, especially on the boards, where he has had to combat Big East muscle men such as Georgetown's Pat Ewing and Villanova's John Pinone.

Although Syracuse does not boast a gaudy record, their 14-8 mark is not truly indicative of what a Boeheim-coached team can do in post-season play. Last year the Orangemen dropped four of their last five regular season games before marching to the Big East Tournament Championship with a thrilling 83-80 triple overtime triumph against Villanova in the finale. If the Syracuse corp of juniors can click the way Boeheim expects them to, the Orangemen may find themselves walking off with yet another Big East title.

PROVIDENCE COLLEGE
(2-9 BIG EAST)

Providence College has been the conference doormat since the Big East's inception, but as usual, their record is very deceptive. P.C. has lost three overtime games this year, two to conference opponents (Connecticut and St. John's), and one thrilling five-overtime loss to Dayton. Couple that with narrow losses to Syracuse, B.C., and Seton Hall and reverse the decisions and you may have an N.I.T. bound team.

Coach Joe Mullaney has Providence players believing in themselves. The franchise is basically two-fold: junior swingman Ron Jackson and Otis Thorpe, the sophomore center. One strong Friar asset is Mullaney's active match-up zone defense which is fairly tough to penetrate. If P.C. does get ahead in a game, it could be a curtain call for the opponents because of the "D."

Another thing going for Providence is that they seem to peak around tournament time, which could spell disaster for a first round draw. Merely consider last year's OT win versus B.C. in the first round at Syracuse.

SETON HALL (9-12)
(1-9 BIG EAST)

If Seton Hall's Hoddy Mahon were to write a book about his first season as the Pirate's head coach, perhaps an appropriate title would be My Journey From Rags to Riches — And Back to Rags. Predicted by many to be a mediocre team at best, the Pirates sailed out to an impressive 9-1 start this year. Unfortunately for Mahon, the Pirates' ship soon sprung numerous leaks as three senior starters were declared academically ineligible for the second semester, and the team fell into an 11-game losing skid which has yet to come to a halt.

The only bright spot for Coach Mahon this season has been the outstanding play of senior Dan Callandrillo who has been carrying the brunt of the team's scoring load. Callandrillo is among the NCAA's top five scorers this season and is a strong candidate for Big East Player-of-the-Year honors. His non-supportive teammates aren't doing much in the way of helping, however, as they are making a strong bid for Spectators-of-the-Year, all of which should add up to a quick tournament exit for the Pirates.

Athletes Sparkle at Millrose

By MIKE HEALEY

It has been said that outstanding athletes save their best performances for the big games. Well, if the 1982 Wanamaker-Millrose Games serve as an example, that statement is uncontestably true.

The night was destined to be special when performers began breaking Millrose Games and Madison Square Garden records in the qualifying heats. Indeed, records fell like the 1929 Dow Jones Industrial. The crowd watched in utter amazement as competitor after competitor would turn on the after-burners and shatter a previous best.

It is not easy to appreciate just how much talent was on hand for the 75th Anniversary of the Millrose Games. Names like Renaldo "Skeets" Nehemiah, Stanley Floyd, Evelyn Ashford, Carl Lewis, Don Paige, and Mary Decker-Tabb stand out for certain, but quality dominated from top to bottom in every qualifying trial of every event.

The first of many highlights of the evening began with Renaldo Nehemiah burying all competition in his trial heat, and then the finals of the 60-yard hurdles with a Millrose Games record of 6.84 seconds. That is the second fastest time in that event in history. ("Skeets" also possesses the fastest).

Villanova's Rodney Wilson finished third in his heat of the same event but unfortunately, only the top two qualifiers of each trial reach the finals.

The women's dash and hurdle events were, to say the very least, close. Chandra Cheeseborough of Tennessee State established Millrose Games and MSG records in the 60-yard dash trials and then broke her own record in the finals with a clocking of 6.61 seconds. Jeannette Bolden, the second-place finisher, came in at 6.62.

In the women's 60-yard hurdles, Candy Young and Stephanie Hightower broke the tape in a photo-finish at 7.38 seconds each.

Stanley Floyd copped the men's 60-yard dash, and in the long jump there were no surprises as leaping Carl Lewis checked in at 27' 3-3/4". Carl had a rough week — he only defeated his nearest competitor by one and a half feet. "I was tentative in my first couple of jumps," he says. "But I was happy winning and going over 27 feet."

Villanova received a strong performance from junior Carlton Young in the 500-yard run as he hustled his way to a second place finish. And freshman John Marshall didn't fare too badly. Marshall broke Millrose, MSG, and American records in the 600-meter run and get this, finished second. The winner, James Robinson, also broke records as he nipped Marshall at the tape with an American mark of 1:47.51. Marshall's time of 1:47.84 set a new American collegiate mark, and it is the fifth fastest time ever posted by an American.

"It's not hard getting psyched up for the Millrose Games," says Marshall, explaining his exceptional performance. "I had a pretty good feeling after running that race," he adds.

Former Nova great and crowd favorite Don Paige won the 1000-meter run in a record time of 2:20.42. Paige toyed with the field until about one and a half laps remained, and then relied on his famed kick to earn the gold.

The featured event of the games, the "Wanamaker Mile," brought the Garden crowd of 18,293 to its feet, as Steve Scott beat out Tom Byers by 4/100 of a second. Sydney Maree turned in a strong performance, as he broke the four minute mark for the first time of the year in 3:59.50.

"If I could take it out," Scott later said, "I knew I could control the race. The race went exactly as I had planned it."

According to crowd response, the most exciting event of the competition had to be the women's mile, with Mary Decker-Tabb shattering her own record by three seconds at 4:21.47. "The crowd really helped," says Decker-Tabb. "The race felt easy," she continues" and I am looking forward to 4:20."

Villanova's world record holding two-mile relay team of Ross Donoghue, Marcus O'Sullivan, John Hunter, and Mike England turned in a gutty showing to finish second to Richmond. In the mile relay, Marshall turned in a sterling effort in the anchor leg to earn the Cats a second place to Fairleigh Dickinson. Despite placing second in both of those races, Nova's times were faster than previous Millrose Games records.

Set World Mark

HUSKER INVITATIONAL

Following the Millrose Games, the Wildcats ventured 2000 miles westward to the plains of Nebraska to continue their success in th Husker Invitational.

In a field which boasted the nation's top collegiate competitors, several Nova tracksters turned in personal beats and one relay team even walked, or rather, ran away with a world record. To be precise, the distance medley relay team set a new world indoor record with a time of 9:35.37.

The quartet of John Marshall (1:52.6), Carlton Young (47.1), John Hunter (2:57.3), and Ross Donoghue (3:58.4) smashed the old mark, which Villanova had possessed, by a full three seconds. Donoghue's mile split was a personal best and aided the team in defeating their nearest rival, Wisconsin, by seven seconds.

"We could have broken it by six or seven seconds if we were pushed by another team," says assistant track coach Jack Pyrah, "but still, it was a great performance and I'm very pleased."

Other strong performances by the Wildcats were Rodney Wilson, who captured a first in the 60-yard high hurdles; Craig Morris, first in the 600; Mike England, first in the 880; and Marcus O'Sullivan, first in the International Mile.

Rookies On To Track Tradition

By JOE MARUSAK

Don Paige once ruled the collegiate field. So did Marty Liquori, Sidney Maree and a host of other Villanova University track runners.

Today, the tradition continues. Villanova is once again near the top of the collegiate indoor track competition. Much of the success goes to such veterans as Ross Donoghue and Rodney Wilson, but the work of two newcomers has been most instrumental.

They certainly are fresh on the scene — one just out of high school in New Jersey and the other just off the Paoli from Hagerstown J.C. Yet, they have already displayed signs of maintaining the rich tradition which surrounds this Main Line campus.

John Marshall and Craig Morris are products of the Garden State. As prep phenoms, they used to battle it out against each other right to the finish. Recalling his most memorable high school race, Morris said it took place, "when I ran against John Marshall in the New Jersey State Relay Championships." Marshall's Plainfield High foursome was victorious.

Don Paige, an established hero, has praise for Morris and Marshall, two budding heroes. "Both are running very well. Academically they are doing very well also," recalled the 1000-meter champion, now an assistant to Dr. Charles Jenkins at Villanova.

"We have 15 strong athletes on the team. The whole team helps each other. Both fit in (to the team concept) extremely well," continued Paige in an interview last week.

On February 6, Villanova participated in the Mason-Dixon Games at Louisville, Ky. Marshall ran a 1:48.6 in his leg of the two-mile relay. Not only did that time pace the Wildcats to a first place finish, it also helped set a new national collegiate indoor record.

Choosing a school wasn't easy for Craig Morris and John Marshall, as over 100 institutions had their eyes on the pair. Morris though, had his mind made up early. He said recently, "I wanted to come here." The final reason, he stated, was academics. According to Paige, "We were optimistic about Craig the whole time."

Marshall had a tougher time deciding. "John, being one of the top 2-milers (relay) in the nation, had already signed a . . . letter of intent with Houston. We tried to offer him a better education, and a better track team," remarked Paige, who won the 1000-meter at Millrose.

It worked. Marshall, the 400m and 800m master, chose Villanova because, "It is better in the long ran as far as academics are concerned. Also, it's closer to home."

When asked whether there is more pressure now than last year, Marshall replied, "Yes and no. In college, every weekend there's someone just as good or better. More concentration is necessary." Morris agreed, adding that this year there are, "bigger stakes."

Helping to take some of the pressure off are Paige and fellow assistant Maree. "Just being around them" has been important to Morris, whose idols growing up were Paige and intermediate hurdler Edwin Moses.

John Hunter, Carlton Young, Wilson and Donoghue are just a few of the established stars on the Villanova men's indoor track team. They are the veterans who can carry their school to the national crown.

John Marshall and Craig Morris are not established veterans. They are collegiate rookies. Yet, just as are the more seasoned runners, they are vital ingredients to the success of the program.

Hoopsters Take Contest

By MARIE WOZNIAK

The women's basketball team slipped by Pittsburgh, 72-67, Monday night as senior Stephanie Vanderslice scored her 1000th career point.

Vanderslice had 18 points on the night and scored number 1000 in the second half. This milestone is an accumulation of the points she has scored in her three years at Villanova, and one year at Delaware, where she played freshman year.

"I had no idea how close I was and I didn't know when I scored it. I was totally oblivious to it," commented Vanderslice. "I feel good about it. I did it in high school, and it was a big accomplishment, but now, being faced with more talent and by different universities, not just in the same state, makes it more special. The best thing is that we won."

And the Wildcats certainly did that. According to Coach Perretta, "It was one of the best games we've played all season. In the past five games we haven't played as well as we should have. We executed our offense and passed well."

Nancy Bernhardt led the Wildcats with 26 points. Her stats also included 10 rebounds, 6 assists, and 7 steals. Kathie Beisel scored 10 and dished out 7 assists.

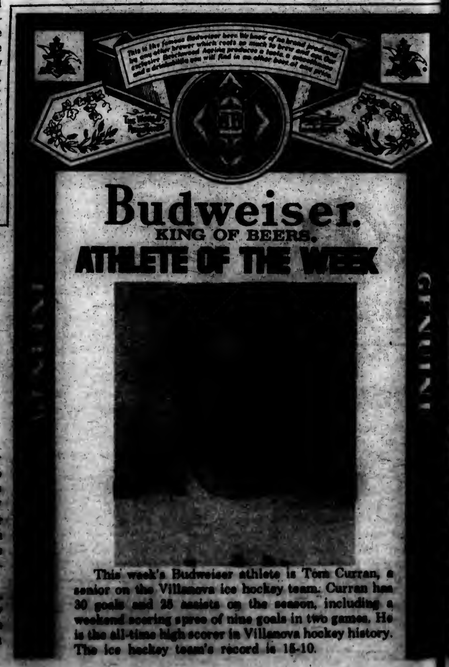
Swimmers Sink

By N. JOHN CAVUTO

Villanova's men's swimming team went through a tough week as they lost their final two meets of the season to Navy and Army.

On Wednesday, the Wildcat swimmers traveled to Navy only to wind up on the losing end of a 64-48 score. The Wildcats have not beaten Navy since 1971 and are overall 4-15 against them. Leading Villanova with two first-place finishes was senior tri-captain Darrell Linder. Linder won both the 400-meter and 800-meter freestyle events. Dan Nies also captured two first place finishes as he won the 200-meter butterfly. Freshman Paul Staley and Senior tri-captain Dan Ahern also won events as they finished first in the 200-meter breastroke and 200-meter backstroke, respectively.

Then, Villanova returned home and on Friday, was defeated by Army 76-37. Darrell Linder won the 1000-yard freestyle event with a time of 9:51.8.



This week's Budweiser athlete is Tom Curran, a senior on the Villanova ice hockey team. Curran has 30 goals and 35 assists on the season, including a weekend scoring spree of nine goals in two games. He is the all-time high scorer in Villanova hockey history. The ice hockey team's record is 15-10.

Senate Committee Rejects Budget

By LEONARD J. La BARTH

In an unexpected move, the University Senate Budget Committee at its Feb. 16 meeting voted 5-4-1 against recommending that the full Senate approve the University's proposed budget for the 1982-83 academic year.

Highlights of the budget include increases in tuition, room and board, and salaries, including merit and equity adjustments for union personnel and faculty.

The central argument offered by the majority for rejecting the budget was that the tuition hike is not warranted by the Senate's approved university priorities.

At the Feb. 16 meeting, the committee first examined the priorities and approved the considerations that covered the areas of financial aid, field house lighting, maintenance and renovations and academics.

What followed the approval of the priorities, according to Paul Tufano, secretary for the budget committee, was a "heated debate." "The administration assured that since the committee approved the priorities, we would also approve the budget," said Tufano. "But the figures are way out of line. There is not enough belt-tightening."

According to Tufano, answers to questions about certain increases were not provided by the administration. "In light of the Reagan federal cuts and Thornburgh's state cuts, college costs will skyrocket and financial aid will diminish. The administration does not recognize that the increases could be met more easily if certain budget items were reduced."

Committee members Charles Zech of the economics department said that while the increase in tuition is 13.9%, the expected inflation rate is estimated at only 7-8%. Zech recommended an in-depth analysis of the discrepancy.

— Paul Tufano

According to the budget committee's report to the senate, "Villanova's tuition and fees can be expected to continue to rise in response to inflationary forces, particularly in food, energy, and labor costs."

The budget committee agreed 7-1 that the financial aid priority has been met by the budget. The committee also recommended a more equitable distribution of the increase in student aid would have been to apply it "uniformly across the board resulting in a decrease in all tuition."

According to Tufano, the administration offered "all increases but no answers." "Those upset by the budget were most concerned with the percentage increases allotted to the Connelly Center, Musical Arts, Athletics Telephone and Academic Support Programs," reported Tufano.

It was the first time in several years that the budget committee rejected the proposed budget.

Senate Budget Committee Chairman Alvin Clay emphasized that the budget committee did approve all the priorities, and that the recommendation not to approve the budget was decided by a close vote. "I voted for the budget," said Clay. "It was not an overwhelmingly vote against it. It's not out of proportion with other schools."

According to Clay, the responsibility of the committee is not to examine line-by-line the expenses and deficits. "We are to approve the priorities and see that the budget is in balance. It is not the committee's responsibility to audit the budget."

In figures obtained by the Villanovan, the highest percentage increase has been allotted to Athletics Telephone, an increase not explained by the administration. The proposal calls for almost $20,000 more to be allocated in 1983 than in 1982, an increase of 784 percent.

For Musical Arts, the 1982 budget was $22,000; the 1983 budget calls for an increase to Syracuse Players Charged In Assault of V.U. Coed

By JERRY ARTH

Two Syracuse University basketball players were arrested Friday, Feb. 5 in Hartford, Conn. and charged with sexually assaulting a Villanova coed.

Andre Hawkins, 18, a 6-8 freshman center from Malverne, N.Y., and Ronald Payton, 22, a 6-5 senior forward, were arrested and charged with first-degree sexual assault, according to Lt. John Telesky of the Hartford police department. The incident reportedly occurred early Friday morning in Hawkins' room at the Parkview Hilton Hotel, where the Syracuse team had been staying while playing in the Big East Conference championship tournament.

According to police, the Villanova student alleged that she had been invited into the room and then raped by the two players.

The woman, in Hartford for the Big East tournament, was treated at St. Francis Hospital and Medical Center and later released.

Hawkins, a highly-recruited player who last year was chosen as New York State's outstanding high school basketball player, was arrested shortly after the incident was reported to the police at 1:55 a.m. Payton was arrested Friday afternoon after the woman viewed pictures of the Syracuse basketball team and identified him, police said. Both were arraigned later in the day before Superior Court Judge Sabino P. Tamborra, who set the next court appearance for March 23. Hawkins and Payton both were freed on $25,000 bonds, and were given permission to leave the state, authorities said. According to the woman, whose identify is being withheld and who asked not to be quoted directly, the incident occurred after she had left her room on the sixth floor of the hotel and had gone down to the lobby to buy a package of cigarettes.

She said that four Syracuse basketball players, Hawkins and Payton among them, were on the elevator she took to return to her room. When the elevator reached the sixth floor, Hawkins followed her to her room while the others waited by the elevator, she said.

The woman reported a few minutes later Hawkins and the others followed her back on to the elevator as she was going to visit friends on the eighth floor. Inside the elevator, she alleged, Hawkins and Payton began to make improper advances, and refused to allow her to get off at the eighth floor. Instead, she said, they forced her to ride with them to the Student Killed by Train

By KIM RUSHTON

A 27-year-old Villanova law student was killed Wednesday, March 3 when struck by a Paoli Local as he crossed the railroad tracks near the Villanova train station.

The victim was identified by Radnor Township police as Eugene V. DeLuca Jr. of Marple Road, Haverford.

Lt. Henry Jansen of the Radnor police department said they received the report of someone being struck by a train at 10:39 p.m.

"We walked the tracks and found the body about 200 yards east of the Villanova station," he said.

Jansen said the engineer of the train reported he saw someone on the tracks and told the police the person appeared to hesitate. The driver of the train — not identified by police — said he tried to stop the train but was unable to avoid striking the victim. The train's personnel contacted the railroad, which in turn called the police.

Conrail officials would not comment on any possible causes of the accident, and said that an investigation was being conducted.

The victim was pronounced dead at the scene by Dr. John O'Neill of Radnor. According to a spokesman at the University, DeLuca was a second-year law student. He was not married and lived with his parents in Haverford.

The death is the first since Dorothy Zimmerman, 19, a Villanova freshman, was struck by a train on Oct. 1, 1979. Zimmerman died Oct. 16, 1979. She was either struck by an express train or thrown off-balance by the wind suction it created.

Alcohol at Villanova: the Past

By JEFFREY PAGE

September 14, 1978: Students started gathering in the Day Hop. It was a Thursday night, the night for the traditional "Cat's Eye." Within an hour, many students would be talking with friends, dancing, and having a few beers — but not this Thursday.

Minutes after the doors opened, three Liquor Control Board (LCB) agents asked that the music be turned off, the lights be turned on, and the students leave. They then confiscated four kegs of beer — and things at Villanova were never the same.

Almost every student is aware that the alcohol policy is a controversial issue at Villanova. But, many students are not aware of the events that have shaped the present policy.

In 1978, the alcohol policy was reviewed by the administration. In an interview in the Sept. 15, 1978 issue of the Villanovan, then Assistant Dean of Men Anthony Martin stated, "We do tolerate individual students, and a few friends drinking in moderate amounts. But, for larger parties, the students should make a request to the dean's office."

In Feb. 1978, LCB agents visited University officials to advise them of apparent discrepancies with state liquor laws and the traditional Cat's Eyes.

Some changes in the existing policy were made, and in the fall of 1978, the Villanova Union sponsored the first — and last — Cat's Eye of the semester.

Students Charged

A week after the "four-minute Cat's Eye," four Villanova students were charged with the sale of alcoholic beverages without a license.

Fr. Robert Martin, O.S.A. then the dean of student activities, said at the time, "We will work with the students charged and go to court and defend them . . . (We) are behind the students one-hundred percent. In addition, the University will ask to have a motion drawn up to have the charges placed against the University rather than the students. We still believe that we were all operating in good faith."

Protest

A week later, approximately 150 Villanova students assembled at the intersection of Lancaster and Ithan Avenues to protest the actions of the LCB.

The demonstrators blocked Lancaster Avenue for several minutes. Signs were carried with slogans such as: "Never Fear, We'll Get Beer," and "LCB Go Home."

CATCH-19

The following week, on Oct. 11, 1978, student leaders and administrators met to decide whether to hold a liquor law forum at the fieldhouse. The group agreed to postpone the forum. However, the meeting was the beginning of a committee called CATCH-19 (Cats Assembled To Change Harrisburg), whose purpose was to try to change the drinking age in Pennsylvania to 19.

Fr. John Deegan, O.S.A., (then vice-president for student life), pledged full University support to either lower the drinking age to 19 or to lower the drinking age at the University level.

This group of administrators and students called CATCH-19 planned alcohol education seminars, state-wide communication between colleges and a trip to Harrisburg for a proposed demonstration.

In a letter to Pennsylvania colleges asking support, Martin wrote, "We are attempting to deal very positively with an area of acute importance to our students."

Charges Dismissed

Meanwhile, the charges against the four Villanova students were dismissed at the Oct. 19 preliminary hearing.

During the cross-examination of the three LCB agents who conducted the raid, Villanova University attorney John Phelan (representing the students) posed the following questions to the officers: "Do you know if any of the money gained from the ($2.00) admission fees was used to defray the cost of the beer?"; and, "Do you know who actually paid for the beer?" All three officers answered "I don't know" to both questions.

Phelan asked for dismissal of the charges. "I submit to the Court that the Commonwealth can't . . . (prove) that any sale of beer was made. They can't establish that any money taken in at this event was used to pay for the cost of beer."

The judge dismissed the case on the grounds that no proof had been presented that the persons involved did not have a liquor license. The LCB chose not to file for re-arrest.

Rally Fails

In November, when the CATCH-19 committee held a widely publicized rally, only two people showed up. According to a Villanovan editorial, "When CATCH-19 was originally born . . . it spread a fervor of hope . . . talk of a day off from school to lobby in Harrisburg, of a $2000 budget, and of the possibility of a late November vote on the bill, which would put the 19-year age limit into effect in January. But, the majority of Villanova students have apparently accepted the current situation as given."

According to a late November Catch-19 newsletter, "What has happened is that the bill to lower the drinking age to 19 has died in committee over this election year . . . The bill will be reintroduced next semester and should pass the Senate as easily as it has in the past. It will then go to the House of Representatives for a vote — which is where our efforts will be at their greatest."

B.Y.O.B.

In a letter to Phelan, Deegan asked the University attorney to review a list of alternatives for social events. "There must be something we can do for the 21-year-olds that is legal." Deegan also wrote, "I believe it is essential that we begin the process of obtaining a club license for our new University Center."

Phelan responded, "It is our opinion that the BYOB party would be the only proposal acceptable to the LCB." He also informed Deegan on the procedure for obtaining a club license.

CATCH-19 Fades

When CATCH-19 was formed, four nearby states (Mass., Conn., N.J., and N.Y.) all had a drinking age of 18. But, in 1979 things were different. In the last CATCH-19 newsletter (Feb. 21, 1979), it was stated that "most states are raising their drinking ages to 21 or 19. We might want to think about possibly moving toward 'college exceptions.' "

According to Martin, "The mood of the country changed." The bill to lower the drinking age in Pennsylvania never got to the floor of the legislature.

320 Bridge Ordered

By BETH BONINA

A PennDOT study recommends a new bridge over the railroad tracks on Rt. 320, rather the construction of a pedestrian walkway, to alleviate the traffic congestion on the bridge.

The study, ordered by Pennsylvania Utility Commission Judge Martin Fountain, recommends construction of a new bridge with sidewalks, according to PennDOT engineer Ron Flagel. Flagel added that the bridge is "way overdue to be replaced." The present bridge has no sidewalks.

Dr. Richard Neville, vice-president for student life, agrees with the PennDOT recommendation, stating that "not only is the bridge unsafe for students, but also for the general public who use the bridge. There is an urgent need in Radnor township as well as Villanova, for a safe solution."

PennDOT considers the construction of a new bridge, estimated to cost $645,000, a long-range solution, however. Short-range options include the installation of a traffic light between County Line Rd. and the bridge. According to Neville, Radnor township promised this by spring.

Brian Russionello, a PennDOT public information officer, feels that Villanova should be more responsible for the bridge because the north part of campus was built after the railroad was there. He stated, "in my opinion, they (Villanova) are looking for someone else to pay."

Neville commented, "Because we developed that section of the campus after the railroad was built doesn't mean that we are the only ones who use the bridge and the tunnel. Certainly the public uses the trains and wants to cross from one side of the tracks to the other as well. The area should be safe for everyone."

Infirmary Evaluated

By JACK McHUGH

Dr. Denis Boyle is the physician in charge of the campus infirmary located in Middleton Hall. His office hours are from 8 a.m. until "the last student leaves," although he is available at any time, seven days a week, to see patients if necessary.

The amazing quality about Boyle is not his devotion to medicine or his patients, but rather, his life-long affair with Villanova University.

Boyle is a 1943 graduate of Villanova with a B.S. in chemical engineering. He went on to get his M.D. at Jefferson Medical College, where he graduated in 1948. He has been resident physician at Villanova for 25 years and has lived in the area since 1930.

According to Boyle, his role is more than that of just a docto: "I think I am a combination family doctor and father to the patients. I think it is my responsibility to see a patient get total and thorough care since neither the parents nor the family doctor is here to guide the student to proper care."

Boyle works "hand-in-glove" with the parents of the students and will notify them if he feels the injury or affliction warrants it. For example, if a student requires hospitalization, he would probably notify the parents. He keeps a list of twenty specialists on hand in case their services are needed.

Boyle oversees a small staff in the infirmary: 6 registered nurses, a secretary and two cleaning women. A gynecologist keeps office hours Tuesday nights. Boyle supplies students with the names of specialists for specific problems, such as a dermatologist. It is a non-student staff, said Boyle, because the infirmary is small.

The infirmary contains 12 beds. If needed, more beds can be spread out among the four rooms. The infirmary is equipped to deal with the most common student complaints: upper respiratory problems and sprains. The infirmary budget for this year was allocated for $150,000.

The infirmary stocks the basic types of medication: antibiotics, cough suppressants and aspirin.

"If a student requires more care than is available at the infirmary, he goes to Bryn Mawr Hospital," said Boyle. "It's the infirmary backup. Most students never get beyond the infirmary point though."

Ninety percent of all treatments are minor," estimated Boyle. Students normally stay for one or two days although there is no time limit. There is no charge for the student's stay but expensive drugs and rental equipment (such as crutches) are billed to the student.

"I would like to enlarge the hypotherma area," said Boyle. "It is extremely useful. Another whirlpool and more hypotherma packs would really upgrade the area."

The 1982 budget for the Connelly Center was estimated at $764,097 with an expected loss of $70,000. The 1983 budget calls for a 150 percent increase in miscellaneous, from $10,000 to $25,645, and a 155.56 percent increase in equipment, $7,667 up from $3,000.

Total Connelly Center revenue for 1983 is expected to be $929,400 and expenses, $1,073,232, resulting in a loss of $143,832.

Academic Support Programs — termed "other academic support," show an average increase of 63 percent. The Theology Institute will command the greatest increase, $17,285 for 1983 as compared to $9,960 for 1982, a 73.54 percent increase.

By contrast, Career Development is receiving only a 9 percent increase, $91,731 up from $84,084.

Undergraduate room and board will rise 11.93 percent, from $7,505,900 to $8,401,400.

Clay said he really doesn't know what to expect from the full Senate at its meeting. "I don't like to speak for other members. I expect to be given reports by those who voted against the budget detailing what their reasons were."

This year is the first time that the Senate will not see the complete budget. The budget has been separated into operating and capital expenditures. Only the operating budget has been seen by the committee.

"If we waited for the complete budget, the Senate would not get to vote on it on time," said Clay.

Players Charged

12th floor, where Hawkins, Payton, and the others took her to room 1208, and attempted to force alcohol upon her.

When the woman refused, she said that Hawkins and Payton made her come with them to room 1206, where they then proceeded to rape her.

She said that when she was able to break away, she went to the eighth floor where she reported the assault to two friends, who in turn reported it to members of the Villanova basketball team, which was also staying at the hotel for the tournament. She said that she did not know who called the police.

Ronald Payton.

In an article published in the Hartford Courant, Calvin Perry, another Syracuse basketball player and roommate of Payton's at the hotel, was reported to have given a different account of the incident to police.

According to Perry, after meeting the complainant in the lobby, the players entered the elevator with her, and as she got off on the sixth floor, she invited Hawkins and Payton to her room. Perry continued on the elevator to his room, 1208, he said.

A few minutes later, he said, Hawkins and Payton returned to the room with the woman, who was carrying a bottle of whiskey. The four talked in the room until Hawkins and Payton left with the woman at about 1 a.m. Perry reportedly told police that he did not see them again.

Jim Boeheim, head coach of the Syracuse basketball team, said that neither the status of Watkins nor Payton as basketball players or students would be affected by the assault allegations until they are proven either guilty or innocent. Both players are scheduled to play for the team against St. Peter's tonight in an opening round of the National Invitational Tournament. Boeheim also denied that bail for the players was posted by the university.

Student Discounts

By MARY ANNE GRANGER

Discount cards entitling Villanova students to discount prices at local stores are currently being issued by Student Government.

The plastic cards, called "National Student Savings Cards" list names and locations of 22 stores in the area offering some kind of savings to students, faculty and staff. The cards are good until Jan. 1, 1984.

According to Student Government President Bob Rosengarth, a representative from University Press, Inc. in Atlanta, GA contacted the student government office about the cards. "He got all the discounts," said Rosengarth. "The stores pay an advertising fee to have their names on the back of the card."

Rosengarth indicated that "a lot" of schools throughout the nation have these cards and, he said, "they are transferrable."

"I think all the stores on the card realize the value of Villanova University to their businesses, and they are all basically friends of the University," he commented.

Black Cultural Week Held

By CHARLES MOLINEAUX

As part of National Black History Month, the Villanova Black Cultural Society sponsored its annual Black History Week between Feb. 13 and 20.

The exhibits, in the library and in Dougherty Hall, and events for Black History Week were geared around presentation and examination of the black experience through American history and to the future in various vocations and areas of society.

Richard Bailey, vice-president of the Black Cultural Society, characterized the week as "a celebration and a chance to come together, recognize our origins and keep in contact with our culture."

"Its purpose was to take some time to recognize the achievements of blacks in history and share that recognition with Villanova as a whole," said Dr. Teresa Nance, moderator of the Black Cultural Society.

The week's events began on Wednesday, Feb. 17 with the "Black History Week Professional Forum." A panel of four black Villanova alumni currently in the business world addressed on and discussed the topic of "Black Professionalism In American Society."

"Each year the focus of the forum changes," said Nance. "This year, the focus was mostly on how to get a job and how well Villanova prepares you to be effective as a black in the business world."

According to Nance, it is important that black students prepare properly to enter the business community and expect to meet special problems as blacks, minorities in most professional fields. This particularly applies to those students who have lived in predominantly black environments for most of their lives. "We live in a very interracial world and we must prepare to move into an environment that is not monoracial," she said.

Bailey commented, "In order for us to be motivated, it helps to know that there are blacks out there. The forum was to tell us what we need to succeed and show us that it is possible."

On February 18 a film, To Be Young, Gifted and Black, was shown and followed by a discussion on that topic.

Nance said that the discussion allowed the participants to express their perceptions and feelings as black Villanova students. "A lot of students said they hadn't run into direct confrontations but that they felt a persistent awkwardness.

"People choose not to deal with your differences. It's as if recognition of blacks seems to mean recognizing a long history of problems.

"The most satisfied black students were the ones who got involved in their majors and in activities," Nance stated.

The third event of the week was "Fun Night: A showcase of talent." This talent show included singing, poetry readings, comedy sketches, dancing and an original one-act play, We're on The Move, by Janet Kelly.

Bailey called the event "a celebration of our culture." He added "It gave us a chance to show a serious side of black culture. We don't just dance and play basketball. There is writing and poetry and intelligence there."

Black History Week concluded on Saturday, Feb. 20 at the Black Cultural Society second annual awards luncheon with the theme "Black History: A Record of Excellence."

Awards were given for outstanding contributions in the categories of excellence in service, academic achievement, sportsmanship and contribution to black pride.

Two awards were also presented to distinguished black alumni of Villanova. Pennsylvania State Supreme Court Justice Robert N.C. Nix, the first black Pennsylvania Supreme Court Justice, and Brig. Gen. Hazel Johnson, the first black nurse in her division of the Army, accepted these awards. Nix was also a guest speaker at the luncheon.

Nance said that a feeling that black events are only for blacks has persisted for some time. "I'm a little disappointed that that perception hasn't changed. We want to share those things of which we are most proud with the entire school."

Senate

At its Feb. 19 meeting, the University Senate voted in favor of the resolution that all non-commuting freshmen be given the opportunity to reside on campus.

The recommendation, proposed by the Student Life Committee, was accompanied by supporting letters from Dean of Admissions Rev. Harry J. Erdlen, and Director of Resident Life Christopher M. Janosik.

During the debate on the issue, Bob Rosengarth, student body president, cited that freshmen who lived off-campus "were at a disadvantage, and it would be easier for upperclassmen to adapt to off-campus living."

During the discussion, several senators, including Alvin Clay, said that if more freshmen were allowed to live on campus, it would mean a significant number of upperclassmen would be forced to move off.

In other business, the Senate also voted in favor of the Athletic Advisory Committee's recommendation to build an indoor intramural facility.

Maintenance

The basketball and tennis courts located behind Falvey Library and Kennedy Hall and those at Stanford Hall have fallen into disrepair. It was brought to Tufano's attention by students who anticipate using the facilities this spring. Following the recommendation by Tufano, the maintenance crews have been working on repairing the areas for the past three weeks.

Tufano first surveyed the damage himself and recorded his observation, which he presented to Dean of Students Rev. Robert Martin, O.S.A. Together, Tufano and Martin drafted a memo to Dr. Ted Aceto, athletic director, and Thomas Trucks, head of maintenance. The memo requested a number of changes, including the replacement of tennis nets and the basketball nets and rims and the anchoring of the chain-link fence surrounding the Stanford Hall courts.

"I just think it is a good example of cooperation," said Tufano. "Maintenance has come under a lot of fire lately because of the winter problems. Here, they listened and worked on it."

VFL

The Villanovans For Life sponsored a debate on abortion Thursday, February 25, in the Villanova Center in the Connelly Center.

Representing the pro-choice side were Anna Forbes, a Planned Parenthood counselor, and Barbara Kritchezski, an attorney.

Representing the anti-abortion side were Molly Kelly, president of Pennsylvanians for Human Life (PHL), and Anne McDevitt, a member of PHL.

Forbes began the debate by stating that she was very concerned about saving the lives of many women who die each year because of abortions performed improperly.

Kritchezski stated that the pro-choice side was not an advocating of abortion, but rather the right for each person to do what their conscience says is right for them.

Kelly stated that there are always other alternatives to abortion, and that it is most important that women know of these alternatives before they make a decision.

Budget Committee's Refusal Applauded

The University Senate Budget Committee, in a move that took more than a bit of courage and common sense, voted at its Feb. 16 meeting to recommend that the full Senate reject the proposed University budget for the fiscal year 1982-83. The Senate is scheduled to consider the budget at its March 19 meeting, and it would be wise for its members to carefully consider the reasons for the Budget Committee's rejection.

In its report to the full Senate, the committee states that it chose to not approve the nearly $58 million budget because the slated average tuition hikes of 13.6 percent are not warranted by the University priorities, the increase in faculty salaries, or by needed maintenance and renovation. Furthermore, the report goes on to say that the budget was not acceptable because "increases in many non-academic areas substantially exceeded the (projected) increase in the cost of living" and that some "belt tightening" should be considered.

The last point is one which is especially deserving of the full Senate's attention.

In some of the non-academic areas, the proposed increases are so ridiculously high as to be absurd. For instance, in the student services area, the office of the Dean of Students is to receive a 61.5 percent increase for salaries and an 84 percent increase for expenses. Under the heading of "academic support programs," the Theology Institute is in line for a 73.5 percent increase in its budget. And at the Connelly Center, among other things, "miscellaneous expenses" are scheduled to rise by 150 percent at the same time the Center's losses, according to reports, are expected to double in the coming year.

These are only a few examples of the many seemingly bloated programs contained in the proposed budget. By contrast, an absolutely vital and necessary service, the Career Development Center, is slated to get only a paltry nine percent increment for 1982-83.

It was for valid reasons such as this that the Budget Committee declined to approve the proposed budget. We hope that the full Senate will take a long, hard look at the reasons for the committee's refusal to approve the budget, and seriously consider rejecting it, too.

While the ultimate authority for approving the budget is held by the Board of Trustees, Senate rejection would be a strong signal to the Trustees that there are major flaws that ought to be rectified in the 1982-83 University budget.

Basketball Team Congratulated

Over Spring Break, the Villanova basketball team travelled to Hartford, Connecticut to participate in the annual Big East Tournament. Ranked first in regular-season Big East play, with a 20-6 record, the Wildcats emerged from the tournament in second place behind a tough Georgetown team.

As evidenced by their past season and the tournament play, the Wildcats are keeping the tradition of strong Villanova basketball alive. For the past six years the team has had winning seasons and shows no sign of veering from this path; the prospects for next year look even better.

Guided by Coach Rollie Massimino, voted Coach of the Year by his Big East colleagues, this group of 14 players gives the Villanova Community something to be very proud of.

In closing, good luck in upcoming NCAA tournament play.

Housing Lottery

Dear Editor:

The Housing Lottery "game" continues. But this year there is an interesting new twist designed to penalize certain students: those uncertain about their futures. As a prospective transfer student I will not know until early summer if I have been accepted or not. Because I am trying to leave, Villanova has no concern for me. So if I put my John Hancock on their nifty little contract and then get accepted to transfer to the other institution and therefore leave — voila! I owe Villanova $300 . . . my penalty for having the audacity to want to transfer. It has been said that, if I leave Villanova, I am occupying a room that would have been taken by a student whom the lottery leaves out. Therefore I am being "unthoughtful." Yet I have given this issue a good deal of thought.

Yes Villanova, you have succeeded. I will sign your contract because I genuinely intend to use my room if I am not accepted by the other university — and if I leave you've got $300 extra! (This may not seem like an exorbitant fee to the administrators who believe "all Villanova students are rich," but to me it is a lot of extra money.) However, isn't it strange that the object of this new-fangled rule — the person whom I might place out of the lottery — derives no benefit from this policy. The rule has backfired in its original 'design' as explained by the Resident Life office. The person the rule was designed to help will still not have campus housing . . . but Villanova will have raked in some extra cash . . . In essence I am being penalized to the tune of $300 for trying to transfer — and I resent it!

I am not alone in this mess either. People who must leave for financial and other equally acceptable reasons must also throw their cash in the bin. Congratulations to the Resident Life office for another unequal footnote to the joke of a fair and equitable lottery system.

Response to Alumnus

Editors Note: The following is a copy of a letter sent to Daniel Leahy.

Dear Mr. Leahy:

Thank you for your response to our alumni giving campaign and for your correspondence regarding the football program at Villanova. It is regrettable that the demise of football has alienated an otherwise loyal alumnus.

As one who obviously had a keen interest in the football program, you probably realize that the University tried for many years to find its place in intercollegiate football competition. Long after other colleges dropped the sport, Villanova continued to play despite losing seasons, limited resources, unavailability of league affiliation; poor attendance and, in recent years, costs that forced the University to subsidize football more than any other program. Faced with this hard evidence, the Board, in a nearly unanimous decision, voted to discontinue the football program.

In concluding, let me refer to something Father Driscoll mentioned in that Fall, 1981 memo. He said, in expressing his sorrow at the loss of football, "Its departure from the scene, not necessarily forever, may temporarily sadden us . . ." While I am pleased to conclude on this optimistic note, I must hasten to add that this is not likely to occur in the immediate future. Accordingly, I must return your $1,000 check as it becomes void automatically after a six month period.

Hopefully, in time you will be able to remember things that will prompt more positive feelings about your Alma Mater. In the meantime, I thank you for your continuing interest in the issues that concern Villanova.

Black History

Dear Editor:

Black Cultural Society

Dear Editors:

On Friday night, Feb. 19, a marvelous celebration of black history by the Black Cultural Society took place in St. Mary's auditorium. The celebration was in the form of a variety show filled with original skits and lively artistry.

I hope that the Black Cultural Society plans to make their fun night an annual affair and to stage it in a more central location, like the theater in the Connelly Center. I cannot help but think that anyone who heard the music would be attracted to attend.

I wish to compliment all of the participants as it was quite apparent that they spent several hours of work preparing their skits. In addition, I wish to give special compliments to the director of the show, Ms. Sonia Strickland.

Budget Cuts

Dear Colleague:

By the greeting of "colleague" I want to reach out not only to fellow faculty members but to students, parents, administrators, trustees, alumni/ae, and all friends of Villanova, for we are all colleagues in the value we place on higher education, and in particular, higher education at Villanova.

We believe in the values Villanova represents and the service those values bring to our local, national, and world community. I write because some of our colleagues are being deprived of access to these values and the future and service that goes with them.

The estimated number of Villanova students losing financial assistance benefits as a result of the proposed federal budget would be 934. Students and families who have worked and saved for years because of the value they place on a Villanova education may now find it beyond their reach.

The national office of the AAUP is lobbying vigorously against these cuts. Father Driscoll has taken a clear stand against them in his joint press conference with other area college presidents. What is needed now, however, is for all of us at the local level to tell our representatives that we do not want these cuts made. Please write your representative and tell how you feel about this issue. Do it because you care about your fellow Villanovans and all who value higher education.

Sincerely yours,

More on Abortion

Dear Editor:

Since you apparently never grow tired of printing responses to your abortion editorial, here's one more with a slightly different view of the situation.

Essentially, abortion is the killing of an unborn child, and as of late has become a very popular practice, even among Catholics. This is and should be extremely upsetting to any and every Christian. But what should be equally upsetting is that so many people have not only accepted abortion but have found it "necessary." The opinion of the overwhelming majority of the prolifers seems to be that by passing a constitutional amendment and other legal steps the problem will be eradicated. Realistically, however, if the causes that made abortion "necessary" and acceptable for so many are not in some way dealt with, there is no reason to believe that abortion will be stopped.

The apparent contemporary reality that we must change is that no feasible alternative exists to abortion. Abortion is seen as the only solution that will allow the mother to continue living her own life. An unwanted pregnancy can be quickly and quietly "taken care of" by a "simple medical procedure." Giving birth, however, involves at least nine months of uncertainty and almost always having some sort of public humiliation. Also, it can mean having to leave work or school and thus severly jeopardizing one's future career. In effect, there appears to be far less material suffering for a woman if she has an abortion.

Another cause that must be dealt with is that society tells us that "life ain't fair and ya gotta look out for number one." This can be an especially powerful image of the world to the pregnant woman who didn't plan on being that way. It is unfair that she is pregnant and the father is relatively uneffected. This idea is exacerbated when she realizes how coldly society will treat her. From that point of reference, it is very simple to rationalize an abortion as an act of self-defense — similar to the use of nuclear weapons as a means of defending the American life style.

Anyway, the point that I'm trying to make is that if abortion is to be stopped, those committed to the sanctity of life have to set their aims on more than merely installing legal barriers to abortion. Those who are really sensitive to the tragedy of abortion must work for a solution that will correct its root causes. Inevitably, we will have to start acting compassionately to one another, especially towards those pregnant women who might be considering abortion.

We must see to it that pregnancy no longer remains a liability. Pregnancy must no longer be a cause for public disgrace and humiliation. Nor, with the huge sum of money that is being spent by anti-abortionists, is there any reason why there should be a lack of funds for social services that try to minimize the sufferings of those who do give birth. We must realize that women who give birth are really heroes who have spent nine months of their live in safe-guarding the life of an infant. At the very least they should be compensated for, if not rewarded beyond, their own personal losses.

Finally, as Christians who supposedly fight evil with good and hatred with loving, we can not fight abortion with litigation or blistering attacks in letters of condemnation for everyone from women who have abortions to the college philosophy department of our old alma maters. Its time we stopped hating one another long enough to realize that we all share this common problem that can only be solved by working compassionately with one another.

And More on Abortion

Dear Editor:

The Villanova Chapter of the National Lawyers Guild is concerned about the integrity of students' right to free speech on this campus.

On January 29, the Villanovan published an editorial concerning abortion. Two weeks later, referring to the controversy generated, the student editors published an apology. The policy pledged an "attempt to adhere to the provisions of the 'Guidelines for University-Supported Publications'."

The Guild believes that the distinction between a university publication and a student newspaper's editorial forum must be recognized. As the prime outlet for student views, the Villanovan's editorial policy should be respected by the University administration.

While the editors did not say under what circumstances the apology decision was made, we find the reference to "Guidelines for University-Supported Publications" ominous. Students do not check at the door of the University their rights to speak, question and learn.

We also criticize the Villanovan for its failure to cover as news this series of events in the last month. The dearth of objective, critical reporting does as much to stifle the informed exchange of ideas as does the University's censorial response. The Villanova community is entitled to know of, and the Villanovan has a duty to report significant newsworthy events.

Significant by their absence from the pages of the Villanovan were texts of the "Guidelines for University-Supported Publications." Far and accurate charges require critical analysis of the Guidelines and specific application to the text of the controversial editorial. The Villanova community was not afforded the opportunity to make fair and accurate assesments of adherence to the Guidelines.

The Guidelines themselves support the student editors and their right to dissent. The Preamble to the Guidlines admirably states that "University support of student publications does not limit freedom of speech."

The Guidlines further provide that "(d)issent, questioning, and examination of religious truth are appropriate in student publications. However, material which . . . contributes to a pattern of subversion of the accepted teachings of the Catholic Church, should not appear in University-supported publications."

Thus the Guidelines distinguish between dissent and subversion of Catholic teaching. This distinction has not held up in the widespread outcry following publication of the editorial. We fear that the University administration has also disregarded the point of its Guidelines. The protection of "dissent, questioning and examination" is critical to Villanova's participation in the enterprise of collegiate education.

Villanova University tackles a noble task in publishing these Guidelines, and should be commended. Accommodation of the dual ends of religious purpose and intellectual discourse demands such guidance and direction. But the effort is neither honest nor complete if the full breadth of the Guidelines is not applied.

The Guild recognizes that Villanova is a private, Catholic institution entitled to disseminate its philosophy to its students. However, neither subscription to those beliefs nor the forfeiture of the right to express alternative beliefs was a condition of enrollment at Villanova.

The Guild believes that any attempt to stifle students' free speech will inevitably result in a lack of respect for the administration and will have a counterproductive effect regarding the acceptance of any philosophy espoused by the University.

The American university traditionally has been a place where controversial views are not merely tolerated but actually encouraged. The exchange of ideas — through discourse and debate — is the essence of academic and moral growth.

To the Editor:

With fully one-third of the oncoming generation being killed before birth, abortion has rightly become the number 1 issue in our country today.

Speaking in Washington, D.C., Pope John Paul II reaffirmed the long-held position of the Church when he said, "When the sacredness of life before birth is attacked, we will stand up and proclaim that no one ever has the right or authority to destroy human life."

We expect to find this teaching upheld in a Catholic University but the recent pro-abortion editorial in the Villanovan has given us cause to wonder if our trust is misplaced. Many questions have been raised by this editorial and now is an appropriate time for the University administration to address them.

Some of the questions in the minds of parents are, were the writers of the editorial aware that the Church attaches the penalty of excommunication to anyone performing or promoting abortions? What has the University done to arm the young people entrusted to its care against the abortion ethic which seems to be, the more abortions the better? Has Dr. Koop or any pro-lifers been invited to speak on the campus? What has been done to inform the students of the efforts in our nation's Capitol to reverse the 1973 Supreme Court decision which legalized abortion? What part did Villanova play in the debate on the Friend-Cunningham Pro-Life Bill in 1981?

There is always a danger that the salt will lose its flavor. A Catholic University that will not take a stand on an issue which involves life or death for millions may soon become irrelevant.

To the Editor:

As a representative of Main Line-Life Line, a recently formed pro-life organization covering the Main Line from Wynnewood to Exton, I am voicing my shock and dismay at the abortion editorial that recently appeared in the paper.

There are only two questions involved in the abortion issue. The scientific question is when does human life begin? Human life in its scientific biological form occurs at the moment of conception. Even the most ardent pro-abortion physicians would not deny that fact from a purely scientific standpoint.

The second question is the value that we place on that life, and when we place value on that life, and who is to make the determination on the value to be placed on that life.

The analogy between the right to have an abortion, slavery, and the Holocaust is frightening.

The United States declared over 100 years ago that black people were property, not human beings. It took a civil war to overturn that decision of the Supreme Court.

Nazi Germany decided that Jews and other minorities were to be killed because they were superior to these human beings.

As with slavery and facism, the pro-life movement cannot sit by and watch human life destroyed. It must be a single issue movement, and it must not rest until abortion is outlawed. The matter of choice or one's own preference is irrelevant when we are speaking of destroying human life.

Academic freedom necessarily presupposes academic responsibility, and the letter to the editor following the week of the editorial from the Campus Ministry fully deals with that issue.

Cordially,
Patrick C. Campbell

To the Editor:

The recent criticism leveled against the staff of the Villanovan for publishing an article in favor of abortion is wrong. It is wrong because they have a right to publish "editorials" on any subject, and it is wrong because the good fathers are, once again, trying to dictate to the student body what and how they should think.

The primary argument that Tolentine hall is using to justify its criticism is that such articles do not "conform to the mission of the University." Bull. The mission of the University is to foster and encourage thought, of any kind, and bring topics like abortion out for discussion. Threats to purge the staff of the Villanovan are not encouraging either, and indeed, only confirm for all students the general opinion that the clerics at Villanova are no more socially advanced than their peers in Iran. (How can the good fathers be against abortion, and also for the left in Salvador?)

I am not in favor of abortion, but I will not prohibit anyone from taking issue with my stance, regardless of the names I call them. The essence of this issue is the same which caused myself and others to found the Free Press last year: this school is not interested in promoting learning, only in promoting what they believe is correct. If the Villanovan cannot air the views of all students, regardless of the view of the administration, then this is not a university in the ideal sense, and you, the student, are being cheated.

As an alumni I cannot help but watch the actions of the administration with some concern. They have loosened the policy on alcohol, but not on learning, on thought. Good fathers, do not forget that alumni raise money, some more than others. I believe that if the staff of the Villanovan is censored for their beliefs, then it may be time to make some phone calls.

R. Christopher Whalen

To the Editor:

I have been waiting for a response to your "abortion editorial" which speaks to the science of the matter. Since none has been forthcoming, I shall offer a few thoughts.

The fertilized egg is certainly alive, since it is growing and can be killed.

The product of a human sperm and a human egg is certainly human, since it cannot grow up to be a petunia or an armadillo.

The fetus is certainly not just another part of the female's body (like a fingernail or a tumor) since, in at least half of the cases, it is not even the same sex!

Thus, purely from science, we can say that pro-abortionists are talking about ending human life. (Whether or not that life is a person is for the law or politics to decide).

Now there certainly are cases where a human life can or must be taken to save the life of others: an ectopic pregnancy, a maniac with a gun, a killer of prison guards, perhaps wars.

There are other cases where it is frowned upon to end human life: rich but senile Uncle Charlie, being an example of someone who is both imcompetent to live on his own, and inconvenient.

Let us upgrade the discussion by avoiding the blanketing of reality with emotion or euphemism. If you can make a good case for ending a human life, do so, and don't be mealy-mouthed about it, but don't kid yourself about the target of your discussion.

Dear Editors:

At the conclusion of the first semester of my freshman year at Villanova I recall very timidly approaching a professor at the end of the final class. "Pardon me," I said (having never spoken to a professor before), "but I was just wondering, if I put all you have taught these past months into one sentence is it correct to say you have just informed us that: 'The study of your subject will make clear to us that man is nothing more than a sadistical, land-hungry animal who desires to have sex with anyone or anything he can get his hands on?' The professor smiled and answered, 'Yes.' My 'rebuttal' . . . 'I though so . . . Thank you for blowing my mind . . . I'll prove you wrong someday."

The professor laughed and the laughter stung (not to mention the information I had just acquired) but with that confrontation of a "spokesman of the University," a very confused, overwhelmed and naive freshman began someone's education, and it is an education I value.

I write to the editors of the Villanovan, therefore, because of your open letter in the Feb. 12 edition of the newspaper. "Unfortunately, we did not appreciate how deeply this position would offend the Catholic community. Had we realized this beforehand, we would not have printed the editorial." Editors, you have offended me. True, "you can not please all the people all of the time." You have most likely considered this statement more than once these past few weeks. I sympathize, but I also ask you, your supporters and opponents to consider the consequences of the consequences which your original "Abortion: A Woman's Decision" editorial have brought to light.

The editorial of Jan. 29 I found weak. Your "critical analysis" of the issue merely skimmed the surface of the true complexity of the abortion question. I was somewhat disappointed in your journalistic professionalism, but not offended by the position you took on your topic — as much as I very deeply disagree with you.

But now you apologize for our disagreement. You say if you had known how deeply you would have offended the Catholic community of which I am a part you would not have printed.

Editors, you did not print lies, call names or threaten the community — you disagreed. I was not offended. I was glad for the chance to disagree, to reflect once more, to weigh again the issues and to continue to "prove you, my opponent, wrong," or at least not so absolutely right. I've been doing it since freshman year. I learned then that I had the strength and intelligence as a human being to listen, consider and decide.

I do not always "win" of course. On occasion I change my mind, to change it again. The blacks and whites of my high school graduation turned to grey upon my commencement from Villanova. The change is not without its pain and danger, but I do not begrudge giving up my childhood for another to enjoy. At the age of 19, 20, 21 one should be responsible for saying more than "yes" — or "no."

I would hope that your paper and the University it in many ways reflects would remain Christian in its form, but not become absolutist in its content. Christ, it was taught, allowed for a doubting Thomas. I believe He would have accepted you, editors, as He did the loving John, desperate Mary, head-strong Peter and all the rest.

I ask you to print controversy, editors, intelligently and honestly. Print also the Church's stand as coherently and completely as possible for the people of Villanova, as a Catholic university, implicitly ask to remain informed and reminded of who they claim to be.

Only by doing both these things editors — and administrators — in both your paper and your lecture halls will you allow for mature Catholic growth which is informed, not naive, challenged not protected.

I do not know what the provisions of the "Guidelines for University-Supported Publications" are (if possible please send or print them) but I would hope the provisions give the undergraduate the chance to be more than another indoctrinated Catholic cassette, able to parrot but not defend, able to agree, but not to freely choose.

The complexity of our culture with its conflicting and numerous ideologies demands that the Catholic universities help us to see all the issues as clearly as possible and our Catholic tradition in perspective with our surroundings.

To do otherwise is to isolate, timidate, and fail to give responsibility to Catholic graduates. This is something, I believe, which will greatly harm the Church, as well as those it sincerely hopes to serve.

Nichols Sees Unique Angle

By BILL CLARK

While most Villanova basketball fans will be trekking to the Nassau Coliseum this weekend to watch Villanova play in the NCAA basketball tournament, Dr. Henry Nichols, chairman of Villanova's education department, will be travelling to Nashville, Tennesee.

Unlike most of us, though, Nichols will not be going as a spectator. Instead, he will be refereeing for another year in the NCAA tournament.

Nichols has refereed in the NCAA for the last 12 years, mainly in games from the East Coast Athletic Conference (ECAC) and the Atlantic Coast Conference (ACC). In his 12 years, Nichols has gained the respect of basketball officials throughout the world.

"To me, he is the best referee in the United States," said Rollie Massamino, Villanova's basketball coach. "He is very good with the mechanics of refereeing, and he is honest, fair, and knows how to handle the coaches and players."

The respect for Nichols is also exemplified by the fact that he has refereed in three NCAA final games, in 1975, 1979, and 1980. In the NCAA tournament, referees are evaluated at the end of each round, and only the best referees continue in the tournament.

Hank Nichols

In addition to his NCAA tournament appearances, Nichols has refereed in the National Invitation Tournament (NIT), as well as being selected to referee in the 1976 Olympic Games in Montreal.

Basketball referees quite often receive pressure from losing fans and coaches. "The toughest part of refereeing college basketball is getting to the point where you can disregard the criticism you get from the losing team," said Nichols. "You occasionally get praise from the losing team, but it's extremely rare."

Nichols was quick to point out, though, that this criticism is of little use for coaches. "On good officials, a coach's complaints have no impact. Sometimes they think they do, but they don't," he said.

"Our policy is to neither seek nor avoid coaches and players. We like to keep our professional distance in most cases," he added.

After 12 years in the NCAA, Nichols said he can expect from whom he will receive the most pressure. "I think if the referees made a list of who they felt were the worst coaches toward referees, the same five or ten would probably be on most of the lists," he said. "But don't let that fool you; every coach has his day."

While Nichols has refereed in many games throughout his career, several stand out in his mind. "Of course, refereeing in John Wooden's last game in 1975 was a big thrill. Probably the best game I ever did was the 1974 ACC final game between Maryland and North Carolina State which went into triple overtime."

Nichols referees approximately 35 basketball games a year, not counting tournament games. He said that the heavy travel doesn't impact his life too much, because he can choose his schedule in the beginning of the year.

"A lot of games are on weekends or during spring break," Nichols added. "The hustle and bustle comes in during the six weeks between January 15 and the end of February."

Even though the referee is an integral part of any game, Nichols sees his role as limited as a referee. "Our job is to enforce the rules. We have very little impact on rules changes, even though I think we should. And I don't think we will in the foreseeable future," said Nichols.

Nichols said that his refereeing was a natural extension of his involvement in basketball as a player. After coaching in New York State at the high school level, he began to referee some games.

"I progressed into junior college ball eventually, and then into college. To get into college ball, I had to be screened by a college group that rates officials. I was picked, and started with freshman ball. Then I was rated again, and advanced to the varsity level," said Nichols.

Dance For Them

Have you ever been surprised to see young children running around the Villanova Campus on any number of Sundays? These children are involved in campus ministry's Big Brother/Big Sister program and enjoy the company and care shown to them by many Villanova students.

On a one-to-one basis, the goal of the program is to show the less fortunate children from Northern Philadelphia that people care about them. Their Sunday excursions include roller skating, movies, trips to the zoo, or just a simple day roaming Villanova's campus.

The Big Brother/Big Sister program has proven to be a learning experience for all involved. One freshman expressed, "Some of my most enjoyable days at Villanova have been those which I've spent with my little brother."

For the program to expand to include more children, Michael Nolan and Jane Dee of Big Brothers/Big Sisters have organized a 12-hour dance marathon to raise the necessary funds. The dance marathon is scheduled for this Saturday, March 13 from 8 p.m. to 8 p.m. in the Alumni Gymn. The WKVU radio station here at Villanova has offered to disc jockey the event and the rock group "Three Way Street" will be donating their musical talents. Villanova students are invited to dance but must be sponsored by at least five people. Sponsor sheets may be obtained in the Campus Ministry office at the Connelly Center desk. Students are also invited to dance with the "Marathoners" from 8 p.m. to 12 a.m. for a $2.00 admission fee. Prizes will be awarded to best dancers in various categories.

Concentration Approved

Dr. Murphy Charles Guida Photo

The coming of St. Patrick's Day brings with it a special joy this year with the announcement of approval for an undergraduate concentration in Irish Studies. The concentration, open to students in all degree programs, allows the student to structure and focus various electives into a unified program of study within one's overall degree goals.

The program explores the history and culture of the Irish people from different perspectives — literature, history, art, politics, and folklore. Through such a multi-disciplined approach, one can best appreciate the influence, range, and richness of the Irish experience. This culture traces itself back to the dawn of Western civilization. The earliest Celts were known to the Greeks, challenged by the Romans, and left a legacy of art forms which significantly influenced the emerging art and thought of early Christians. In the ensuing centuries, this tradition has continued to reach out as a profound influence on the life of Europe, and at the same time to grow in its own unique directions. At the beginning of this century, a renewed awareness of the historic and mythic past led to the Irish literary revival and contributed to those political upheavals in modern Irish life which continue to reverberate through our consciousness.

The Concentration allows the student to see the literature and history of modern Ireland from this perspective of the continuum of the culture. Fifteen credits are required to complete the concentration, of which six credits are core requirements.

Core Courses: Eng. 2500 — The Irish Renaissance; His. 4521 — Topics in History: Ireland Since 1800; Elective — (choose any three — History of Irish Art, Seminar: Irish Literature to 1880, Topics in History: Ireland to 1800, Seminar in James Joyce, Irish and Irish-American Folk and Popular Culture, Travel-study in Ireland, Topics in Political Science: Contemporary Ireland.

Depending on a student's curriculum, the above courses might fit into a range of required elective slots, e.g. humanities, social sciences, major elective, free elective. In the fall, 1982 semester, two of the program's courses will be offered, each for the first time at Villanova. Eng. 2620-02, Irish Literature to 1880, will be offered on Thursdays from 10:30-12:20 (J. Murphy), and Hon 5600-01, Irish and Irish-American Folk Culture, offered on Mondays from 1:30-3:20. The latter course will be taught by Mick Moloney, a visiting professor from the folklore department at the University of Pennsylvania. Both are limited enrollment courses.

Students interested in pursuing the concentration should declare that intention to the coordinator, Dr. James Murphy of the English Department (201 Vasey Hall, ext. 4647).

A "Break" To The Needy

Sunny resorts may attract most college students on spring break, but 60 Villanova University students spent February 28 through March 7 in two of the most impoverished areas of the United States.

Groups of 20 students each traveled to New York City's Lower East Side and two towns in Appalachia to work in various programs to help underprivileged people. The trips were sponsored by Villanova's office of campus ministry.

Students going to New York City lived in a multiethnic area plagued by poverty, crime, heavy drug trade and a high percentage of unemployment. They resided at a Redemptorist Catholic parish house.

There, the students provided "extra hands" in parish projects to help troubled youths, men of the Bowery, "bag" ladies, elderly shut-ins, and other needy persons. Rev. Shawn Tracy, O.S.A., Villanova's director of campus ministry, and Sister Beth Hassel, B.V.M., associate director of campus ministry, accompanied the students.

Other student groups also traveled to the Appalachian towns of Princeton, West Virginia and Hot Springs, North Carolina. They entered a region of the United States rich in culture and natural beauty, but desperately poor in material goods.

In West Virginia, the Villanova students worked primarily in a government program to weatherproof homes of the poor. They installed plexiglas windows and insulation, supplying many of the materials from their own funds.

They stayed at a Protestant community house in Princeton and were accompanied by John Lozano, associate director of campus ministry.

Students traveling to North Carolina also worked in and help funded home improvement projects. Nursing students in the group participated in home care health programs.

A Jesuit center in Hot Springs housed the students, along with Barbara Haenn, associate director of campus ministry.

To fund the trips, the students worked since early in the academic year to raise the necessary $4,000 by holding a volleyball marathon and pretzel sales, and by collecting donations on a fast day at Villanova and at Masses.

Voters will be invited to choose any three full-time faculty members who are not previous winners. The five candidates receiving the highest number of votes will be the official nominees for the Lindback awards. The Father President John Driscoll will select two names from the list of five and designate them as winners of the 1982 Lindback awards, and present them with checks of $1000 each at commencement exercises in May. About 20 other faculty members receiving the highest number of votes will be designated as honorable mention, and their names will appear in a subsequent issue of the Villanovan.

A Down To Earth "Shoot the Moon"

By LINDA BOND

Shoot the Moon, crafted in perception, simplicity, and moving realism, can be added to a growing number of new movies focusing on divorce, keenly reflecting the times. Albert Finney and Diane Keaton portray a husband and wife who separate from one another, angry, bitter and confused. Their children, with whom much of the movie's power rests, are spontaneous keys in unlocking a great deal of internal story for the viewers. Shoot the Moon was filmed in rural California, at Hollywood's backdoor. As a result, the family's life-style carries a distinctly progressive and liberal flavor not altogether typical of the average American family. But, part of the message of this movie that may be that divorce, the master complicator and bearer of pain, transcends all types of people and paints only one portrait. As a work of art, Shoot the Moon enters and lingers in one's mind.

Diane Keaton is excellent. Albert Finney gives a monotone performance and pales in comparison. The real show-stopper, however, is Dana Hill who plays the oldest daughter. Hill upstages both Finney and Keaton in quite a few scenes, adding a special urgency and vitality to Shoot the Moon. Her electric presence engages the other children, enabling them to harmonize very stirringly as the disaffected third party, significantly strengthening a potentially sluggish plot.

Faith Dunlap, portrayed by Diane Keaton, experiences the anger and pain of divorce in MGM's new movie, "Shoot the Moon."

The movie starts off rather slowly, wandering a bit, but quickly catches up to itself, and in the last scene, goes beyond itself. The shots of the California countryside are lovely and they help court the audience. Characterization is also very strong.

Early on in the movie, Faith, the wife, reveals to George, her husband, that she knows of his extra-marital affair. She is bitter and wants a divorce. George isn't sure he wants to leave Faith. But, she has packed his bags the night before and is, herself, quite certain he is leaving. After a dish-breaking scene, George storms out and is gone. From this point, the movie is launched. Obviously, there exists between them a marked lack of communication.

Faith, played by Keaton, is the source of an elusive strength to her husband and children. Her name is symbolic; the story lives in the woman. Shoot the Moon has a statement to make about innate styles of commitment and love. Its final scene stays in one's memory as a testimoney to the ultimate nature of love and "faith." The ultimate nature is hope.

Requiem for a Comedian

By DEAN C. BALSAMINI

This is one article that this writer wishes he didn't have to write. But it just would not be fair to let the passing of John Belushi go by without mention.

Last Friday, in a bungalow of West Hollywood's Hotel Chateau Marmont, John Belushi's physical trainer found him lying nude on the bed. Mouth-to-mouth was tried, but it was too late. John Belushi was dead at the age of 33.

At this writing, there has been no "official" word on the cause of death. But doctors are hinting that Belushi died of a heart attack caused by excessive narcotics.

Born in 1949, Belushi was the eldest son of an Albanian immigrant who became a restauranteur in Chicago. As a youngster, Belushi was quite athletic, participating in both football and track. In fact, in his senior year at Wheaton Central High, Belushi was crowned homecoming king! In 1967 Belushi married his school sweetheart, Judith Jacklin.

Several years later, Belushi got involved in improvisational comedy. After joining Chicago's famed Second City troupe, his career took off. In 1972, a National Lampoon editor took notice and invited Belushi to perform with The National Lampoon Lemmings Revue. From there Belushi was discovered by Saturday Night producer Lorne Michaels.

The original Saturday Night was a show that will always be important to television. If you remember (in 1975) Saturday nights at 11:30 p.m. usually meant Johnny Carson re-runs. But Saturday Night offered humor the likes not seen since Laugh-In left the air. The humor was quite sophisticated, risque and at times even tasteless. But they took chances. And for God's sake', it was live!

Bluto, in "Animal House"

John Belushi: 1949-1982

Also, John Belushi was Saturday Night. Ask someone with whom they identify Saturday Night with; chances are the response will be John Belushi. Whether it was the Killer Bee, Joliet Jake, the Samurai Warrior, Joe Cocker, Marlon Brando, Beaver Cleaver or the Greek short-order cook yelling, "Cheeseburger! Cheeseburger!", one was always bursting at the seams.

In 1979 Belushi left Saturday Night to become, in his own words, "a movie star." If John Belushi had done nothing else besides Animal House, he would still hold a place in celluloid history. The film grossed more money than any comedy film ever, and his Bluto Blutarsky became a cult hero. The words "food fight" were shouted across college campuses everywhere.

Samurai Warrior, from Saturday Night

In all, Belushi starred in six other movies besides Animal House: Old Boyfriends, Goin' South, 1941, The Blues Brothers, Continental Divide and Neighbors.

In the last two films Belushi played normal people and was not cast as the "manic slob." In his last interview, which appeared in Rolling Stone Magazine, Belushi said he was tired of playing the role of a pig. "I'm a human being in this one (Continental Divide) who can read and write and relate to people, as opposed to some bigger-than-life cartoon character. And I think maybe my life is going in that direction, too," commented Belushi in the interview.

Unfortunately, we will never know what direction John Belushi's career and life would have taken. Some people will assume that since his career was brief, John Belushi will not be remembered. But nooooo. John Belushi will be remembered as a very funny man who did not compromise in anything he ever did in life.

Stewart: Getting Back to Basics

By CHRIS SLAWECKI

The current Rod Stewart tour is as highly publicized as anything in recent memory. It is sponsored by Sony. There was a simulcast of one Saturday evening West Coast show. His Philadelphia concert was postponed for two weeks and he even hit the stage 45 minutes late. Rod Stewart is big time now.It's tough to believe that this was the man who was tangled in leopard skin and disco just a few years back. He ran around the Spectrum stage like a little red rooster, spraying soccer balls and champagne into the packed house. He and his band set the place on fire with hot, ripping rock and roll. The music occasionally staggered into blues so tense they cut like a buzzsaw: the pseudo-'50s Dance With Me surged into Little Queenie, and the band transformed the guitar riff of I'm Losing You into the one from Layla. A tea party it wasn't.

The most refreshing thing about the show was that Rod knew it was supposed to be fun. When the house lights went down, the stage radiated hot pink while the p.a. system played The Stripper. What followed was equally as bawdy, flashy, lubricated by alcohol and driven by sweat. Rowdy? Yeah. Sensual? Indeed. Rock and roll? You betcha!

It wasn't the Faces, but it was close. Stewart has come full circle, back into the gutbucket, raspy blues in which he began.

After opening with the title track from his new LP, Tonight I'm Yours, they pumped the crowd up with rollicking renditions of Sweet Little Rock'n'Roller and then Hot Legs. On the more romantic side, Stewart demonstrated he is still a fine balladeer through an emotional If Loving You is Wrong (I Don't Want To Be Right). You're in My Heart was another high point, and ended with the crowd and Stewart singing the chorus to each other. At the end, closing with I Was Only Joking, he sang, "The Principal has to leave the stage," a young lady ran onstage and hugged him, and he was gone.

The finale was Stay With Me, the last of four older songs they performed. You Wear It Well, Gasoline Alley and Maggie May all frollicked and swaggered true to their R'n'B roots. It was rhythmic and muscular and they just kept pumping them out.

It wasn't the Faces, but it was close. Stewart has come full circle, back into the gutbucket, raspy blues in which he began. It is what he does the best. There was very little of the primping and posing that made Rod wonder if we thought he was sexy; instead of feinting and dancing, he delivered. It was a knockout.

But still, don't ya think he's sexy?

Cookin's Good at Olga's

By MARY ANNE GRANGER

A quaint and inexpensive eating establishment that is a step above fast-food restaurants can be found in the Court at King of Prussia. Olga's Kitchen, on the upper level of the Court, has the appearance of an outdoor cafe, without the exorbitant prices. Everything here indeed reflects the restaurant's name, because everything here is an "Olga."

The menu at Olga's says that "When Olga (yes there really is an Olga) opened her first restaurant in 1970, she wanted it to be a place where everyone would feel at home." And one does feel as at home here as it is possible in a vast and impersonal mall. The food, however, is not the variety one would find at home.

Almost everything on the menu arrives on the table wrapped in a thick pancake-like bread tasting similar to pizza dough. It looks unusual, but the bread is actually very good.

The "Original Olga" is "what started it all," and is made of slices of beef and lamb topped with "Olga sauce," onion and tomato, then wrapped in the bread. The beef and lamb were spicy, but not overpowering and the sauce is a dairy-based concoction tasting slightly like sour cream. Cheese can be ordered, but its taste seemed to disappear under all the other ingredients. As for Olga's crowning glory, the "Olga bread," it was thick and very filling. The "Original Olga" is the most expensive of the dishes, costing $2.50.

My companion was less enthusiastic about her "Olga dog," a 1/2 lb. of hot dog encased in the same sauce and bread. She pronounced it satisfying but unspectacular.

Many other "Olgas" are offered, such as "Olga burgers," "vegetarian Olgas" and "Oriental Olgas," all $1.95 each and wrapped in the "Olga" sauce and bread. A small rack of spices is available at each table for the customer's discretion.

Side-orders of "Olga's Fresh Fries" were curly strips of fresh-cut and fried potatoes and were delicious, much better than fast-food fries. Other side-orders include spinach pie and Olga's salad, almost the only food not wrapped in bread.

Dessert offerings, should one still be hungry after consuming all the other "Olga" food, include fresh pie and frozen "Olgurt," a frozen yogurt dessert, each under $1.00.

Everything on the menu is available for take-out. The decor at Olga's Kitchen is casual and attractive, with lattice-work wall coverings, lots of greenery above the wood table and earthen tiles.

The service is excellent and our waitress was very friendly and cordial. Olga's can be described as having "neat" food, as one patron put it, and will probably satisfy anyone who wants to go a step above fast food outlets, likes pizza dough and doesn't want to spend a lot of money.

Raitt Enjoys Unheralded Success

By SHARON WINTERS

Bonnie Raitt is a seasoned, gifted blues veteran, yet she has not tasted the fame of some of her contemporaries. Despite her talents as a singer and musician, Raitt just does not get the air play and acclaim lavished on other female artists. She remains a unique favorite, an almost super star.

Green Light, Raitt's latest album effort, provides ample evidence of talent and expertise. Yet, despite the familiar displays of bluesy rock, the record lacks the punch and panache for Raitt to win a wider audience.

Raitt's classic blues vocals, and her bottle-neck slide, have faded into a mellow rock and roll, with some tracks bordering on easy listening. Keep This Heart in Mind, the single from the LP, starts the record with a pop: a love song with a hook. Admittedly, the song could rise on the charts. In fact, Dick Clark, of "Bandstand" fame, has featured the song on his weekly radio broadcast.

For sheer success, Light has a few possibilities. Me and the Boys is a rousing rocker. Raitt weaves a lovely vocal; the song has a happy, breezy quality. I Can't Help Myself conjures images of innocent infatuation augmented by a clean vocal and buoyant instrumentals.

Raitt's handicap, in her latest work, is the absence of brute force currently in vogue. Pat Benatar has it. So does Joan Jett. But, Raitt is not a power singer; she was never in that category. The closest she comes to something Magic Dick would be proud of is the title cut, Green Light. The song hammers away.

Yet, in the long run, Raitt remains a blues singer. Even with the knife-edged quality mellowed on this record, Raitt still retains her ability to wail at will. River of Tears showcases her ability to glean a melodic, although enticing brittle-edged, vocal. Raitt wafts through Can't Get Through and Willya Wontcha with such ease that she makes it look and sound effortless, second nature.

Let's Keep It Between Us is the sort of strong, sure, earthy blues that was always part of the Raitt experience. Her voice supplies both the wound and the salve to heal it simultaneously.

Raitt has a forceful vocal, but it is not the screaming pain of a Janis Joplin. Nor, is Raitt the rock-blues belter as is Ronstadt or Benatar. Raitt's strength is embodied in her control. She masters the gloom; she overcomes the misery. Her potency rests her certain, natural, deliberate stance. Raitt is not a nightingale, crying, trapped in a cage. She is, rather, a free sailing spirit looking back at a trap that no longer threatens.

Perhaps, the main problem with Raitt's "saleability" is the type of blues that she espouses. One of the most famous females with a low-key pose is Christine McVie, a British artist and member of Fleetwood Mac. McVie, in a similar manner to Raitt, had a limited audience prior to Mac. McVie was a cult celebrity singing her own brand of "The Blues."

The history of Mac clearly tells when the group became box office. Vocalist Nicks provided the verve and elan missing in the controlled tones of McVie. This example, and others, seem to indicate the necessity of style and the disposability of so-called mature vocals.

For Raitt, the word "style" has definite meaning to all her followers. Yet, for many music lovers, Raitt's persona is too subtle, too obscure. In the long run, everybody loses.

Bonnie Raitt, seasoned, skilled, and talented, yet still seeking fame and notoriety.

Ragtime, directed by Miloš Forman, is a [illegible] that portrays New York City life in the early 1900s.

The story switches back and forth to the lives of a middle-class family, several socialites and a black couple. Ragtime begins its story on the Lower East Side of New York City in 1906. From here the film moves on to follow the life of Evelyn Nesbit (McGovern). After she leaves her husband Harry K. Thaw (who is on trial for murder), Nesbit encounters immigrant Baron Ashkenazy, played brilliantly by Mandy Patinkin (Evita). Later on they once again find one another and Ashkenazy is now a silent movie director and Nesbit a movie star.

The rest of the movie centers on Coalhouse Walker, a black piano player who fights for his rights and ends up becoming a terrorist. Walker is in love with Sarah (Debbie Allen), who is the housekeeper for Mother and Father.

Tracksters Post Second at IC4A's

By KERRY LYNCH

The IC4A meet was expected to be a close one from the opening gun and Villanova was in contention. But so were Fairleigh Dickinson and Maryland. The Wildcats, with a few stellar performances and a valiant attempt to rise above several key injuries, took the runner-up position at the IC4A Championships last weekend at Princeton University, to Fairleigh Dickinson 56-47. Maryland placed third.

The Cats were led by senior John Hunter, who won the 1,000-meter run, and junior Rodney Wilson, who took his third consecutive IC4A high-hurdle victory. Hunter won his race over Jama Aden from Fairleigh Dickinson with a league record 2:22.27. Wilson also set a league record with his victory.

Assistant Track Coach Jack Pyrah said the meet was "A typical, dog-fight, IC4A meet."

Ross Donoghue's race was evidence of that dog-fight quality. The miler led through most of the 1500-meter run and came down the back stretch assured of a victory. He was unaware that Sosthenes Bitok of Richmond was gaining on him. Bitok edged Donoghue at the line by only one one-hundredth of a second. Sophomore Marcus O'Sullivan placed third in the same race.

Donoghue's time was equivalent to a four-minute mile.

Pyrah pointed out that Donoghue came back one half-hour later to run a 4:09 anchor leg on the distance medley relay team which finished second to Georgetown. Pyrah called Donoghue's effort, "An iron-man feat, incredible. We've never asked anyone to double like that before."

While some runners were injured going into the meet, other first-place hopefuls were injured in the early trial heats of their events. Pyrah said this affected Villanova's chance of victory, "Considering the people who were injured, we did as well as we could. We just didn't have enough healthy people."

Carlton Young, who holds the fastest time in the world in the 400-meters, which he ran earlier in the season, was injured in the semi-final heat but didn't tell coaches. He competed in the fi despite his strained muscle finished sixth. Mike England was injured in his race managed a fourth place in the meter run.

The 1982 Champonships had an ending of their wn and that ending kept the rophy in syracuse.

Villanova Coach Ed Geisz said, "They beat us in the water, we hang tough everyday and they touched us out in the relay."

The freestyle team of Bruce Baltere, Jack Hallahan, Bob Ackerman and Mike Gallagher swam to win the meet but were touched out by the Orange in little more than a second. Syracuse's winning time was 3:08.9 and Villanova's runner-up was 3:10.1.

This was a high-pressured, three-day meet throughout which Villanova and Syracuse battled stroke by stroke. The first day of competition saw Syracuse up by one at the close of the day's events.

"We did our very best, I'm extremely proud of all my swimmers," said Geisz, "I've never had a team work more like a unit than this one; everyone had a super meet."

At the end of the second day of competition Syracuse again led by one 291-290. School and personal records were falling like flies on the side of the Villanova contingent. Tri-captain Dan Ahern broke his own school record in the 100-yard backstroke with a time of 53.8 and the 200-yard backstroke in which he posted a 1:58.5 time. Coach Geisz was proud of everyone's effort, "Everyone did their best times in their whole lives. It was just excellent that they swam so well." Freshmen Dan Nies, Bill Slamkowski, Jose Alvarez all broke records in their events. Paul Staley, also a freshman, broke two breaststroke records. In the 100-yard breaststroke he posted a time of 1:00.2.

The championships, which ended with the score Syracuse 470, Villanova 458 included all the Big East teams except Providence.

Cats Nip P.C. to Snare Title

By JOE MARUSAK

By dunking the ball into the basket and making the ensuing foul shot with only five seconds remaining in Villanova's final regular-season contest, Ed Pinckney did more than win a game. Pinckney gave the Wildcats their first Big East regular-season championship and a top seed in the post-season league tournament.

Pinckney also gave his team its 20th victory and an almost assured bid to the NCAA's.

The freshman forward's slam and free throw, which lefted Nova to a 54-53 victory, was the climax to a stunning final 60 seconds of play between the Wildcats and the Providence College Friars at the Providence Civic Center, Feb. 27. With only :57 remaining, Ricky Tucker, the spirited Providence guard from Overbrook, put his team ahead with a driving layup. Gary McLain fouled him and PC suddenly led, 53-51.

Twenty-five seconds later, Dwayne McClain missed a short jumper. The Friars grabbed the rebound and their guard, Jim Panaggio, was fouled. Only 32 seconds remained. Time-out, Villanova.

Incredibly, Panaggio missed the one-and-one, and Villanova had the ball with a chance to tie. But John Pinone's shot missed, PC snared the rebound, and VU immediately fouled Providence's center, Otis Thorpe.

Thorpe went to the line and also failed to put the Cats away. Seventeen seconds remained and the Main Liners were still alive. They took the ball upcourt, and with five seconds left, Stewart Granger shuffled the ball to Pinckney, who proceeded to silence the crowd of 8,219. Thorpe fouled him on the jam and Pinckney calmly made the free throw.

At the buzzer, PC's Ron Jackson launched a 30-footer, but it bounced off the front rim. Villanova's followers came streaming onto the court to raise Head Coach Rollie Massimino in triumph.

Later, Massimino remarked, "I'm very proud of my team. They're great kids. This is what we were striving for — 20 wins."

He added, "The kids' not cracking showed character . . . That's what it's all about."

Villanova led throughout most of the game, and with nine minutes remaining had built up their biggest lead, 45-32.

Then things turned around. Tucker's steal after a Providence timeout sparked a comeback which set up the dramatic final minute of play.

The Wildcats were able to survive that PC onslaught thanks to the missed one-and-ones. "Dwayne missed an easy one and we had to foul," observed Massimino. "Last year Panaggio did not miss down the stretch. Tonight (he) missed."

REBOUNDS: Pinckney, the star of the game, ended up with a game-high 18 points and eight rebounds . . . Aaron Howard, playing his final regular-season collegiate game, had a great first half, producing 10 points, three rebounds and three assists.

Women Ranked, Host Tournament

By MARIE WOZNIAK

The important "second season" has begun for the women's basketball team and they started it off well by beating Seton Hall, 67-66, to advance to the semi-finals of the AIAW Regional Tournament.

In the last week of the regular season the Wildcats beat Penn and the University of Connecticut to finish with a 23-3 record. Villanova won its third straight Big Five championship with a 68-59 win over Penn. Lisa Ortlip was the high scorer with 24 points. Ortlip and Kathie Beisel were named to the All-Big Five team and Nancy Bernhardt and Stephanie Vanderslice made the second team.

The Wildcats then crushed Connecticut 88-58 as Nancy Bernhardt scored 26 before leaving the game with a sprained ankle.

Bernhardt recuperated in time to score 20 points in the next game; the win over Seton Hall. Beisel added 15 points and 16 rebounds and Ortlip netted 11.

Villanova is the host team for the Division I Eastern Basketball Championships and will meet St. Johns in the first game at 7:00 on Friday night. Rutgers will play Northeastern in the second game. The winners will meet in the championship game Saturday night at 9:00, with the consolation game beginning at 7:00.

The winner of the tournament receives an automatic bid to the nationals, where the top 16 teams in the country will meet.

On his team's chances this weekend, Coach Harry Perretta commented, "We have a good chance of winning; if we play well. We'd like to play Rutgers again but first we have to worry about St. Johns. We beat them once (75-46) but they were missing their leading scorer that game."

Perretta does not feel that Villanova has an advantage by being the host team because, as he states, "In the playoffs, it's not where you play that matters."

The Wildcats are currently ranked 16th in the nation, but since many schools are in the NCAA this year, they are third in the AIAW rankings, behind Rutgers and Texas.

Women Runners Rout Field

By BEVERLY REILLY

A big "blow-out" took place this last weekend at Orono, Me., where the women's track team won the Eastern Division Indoor Championships. This impressive team victory set a record for the most points a team has ever scored at the regional meet. The Wildcats captured 163-1/2 points in order to out-distance their next closest competitor, Cortland, with 141-1/2 points.

The Wildcats opened the meet Saturday night with a strong performance in the three-mile. Sue Shea, Mary Ellen McGowan, and Carol Gilsinger took first, second and fourth places respectively, bringing in the first 22 points. Shea broke the school and fieldhouse records with her time of 16:34.2. Shea, McGowan (16:41.3) and Gilsinger (16:53.5) were the first women to break 17:00 in the indoor three-mile for Villanova.

In the pentathalon, junior Peggy Stewart captured first place and set a new fieldhouse record in the high jump, 5'7". Sophomore Patty Bradley took second in the Pentathalon and senior Amelia Cain took sixth place. Bradley also placed second in the long jump, running the team score up to 49 points for the first day of competition.

On Sunday, the women tracksters continued to run away with the meet. Senior Jennifer Whitefield captured first place in the 600-meter and teammate Veronica McIntosh finished a close second. McIntosh ran a 121.7, qualifying her for nationals along with Whitfield, who had already achieved her qualifying time.

Another fieldhouse record was set in the 880 yard run. Bradley established the new record with a first place time of 2:17.1. Jane Ashton and Cain followed in second and third respectively.

Stewart proceeded to score as she won the open high jump and placed second in the hurdles. Other key scorers were McGowan and Eva Marie Berardi, who placed third and fifth in the mile. In the two-mile, Shea and Gilsinger came back to place fourth and fifth. Also, in the sprints, Whitfield picked up a third in the 60-yard dash and freshman Liz Feeney placed sixth to score in the 300-meter.

The relays brought the Wildcats their final score. The two-mile relay (Stewart, McGowan, Ashton, Cain) captured first over their rivals from West Chester. The mile relay (McIntosh, Whitfield, Berardi, Bradley) also captured the gold. Also scoring, the distance medley relay (Pat O'Donnell, Valerie Allen, Sue Cronin, Beverly Reilly) took a close second place and the 800-relay (McIntosh, Feeney, Allen, Whitfield) placed third, giving Villanova the record score of 163-1/2 points.

Coach Bob Shoudt takes this win as the second step in the intended Triple Crown. In the fall, the women's cross-country team won their Eastern Championships, and now after obtaining the second Eastern crown, all eyes look to the outdoor season where the team hopes to achieve the third step.

At present, Coach Shoudt is looking forward to some good performances at Indoor Nationals this weekend at the University of Northern Iowa. The team's national qualifiers are Whitfield, Stewart, Bradley and McIntosh.

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

This week's Budweiser Athlete is senior trackster Jennifer Whitfield. At the EAIAW Championships held last weekend in Maine, Whitfield took first place in the 600-meter dash with a time of 1:21.7. She also ran on the winning mile-relay team, the third place 800-meter relay, and took third place in the 60-yard dash. Whitfield has qualified for and will be running at the AIAW National Indoor Championships in the 600-meter event on March 12.

Big East Tourney in Review

Wednesday, March 3, 1982

By MIKE HEALEY

The 1982 Big East Conference basketball tournament could not have gotten off to a better start for Villanova than it did. At the annual awards luncheon, the Cats were very well represented when it came to the doling out of conference honors.

Topping the list of award winners was none other than Coach Rollie Massimino, who was named the conference's "Coach of the Year."

Named to the All-Rookie team were super freshman Ed Pinckney and Dwayne McClain, which made for an all-Villanova frontcourt. Occupying the guard spots were St. John's sniper Chris Mullin and Georgetown's Anthony Jones. The center position was adequately filled by one Patrick Ewing.

Junior guard Stewart Granger was placed on the All-Conference second team, which is not too shabby an achievement when one considers the Floyds, Callandrillos, Bagleys, et al, who sell their wares from the conference's guard spot. Joining Granger were Mullin, Ewing, Erich Santifer of Syracuse, and Connecticut's Mike McKay.

Rounding out the award recipients for Nova was the hub of the team, John Pinone. Pinone was cited as the First Team center selection. John Bagley, Sleepy Floyd, Dan Callandrillo, David Russell, and Corny Thompson comprised the rest of the team.

Thursday, March 4, 1982

Villanova freshman Ed Pinckney saved his best performance of the season for a very appropriate time as he led the Wildcats to an impressive 88-73 hammering of Seton Hall. Pinckney responded to tournament pressure by pumping in a season high 23 points on 11 of 12 shooting, and if there ever was a tourney record for slam dunks. Pinckney shattered it by jamming it home six times.

The first round game of the tourney started out well enough for Nova, with Pinckney scoring on a foul line jumper only 18 seconds into the contest. Seton Hall responded with a hoop of their own, and for about eight minutes of the first half, the Pirates battled the Cats on even terms.

Then, with the score 14-12 in Villanova's favor, the Cats went hogwild on a scoring spree. When the smoke had cleared, they had reeled off 14 consecutive points to increase their lead to 28-12. With Stewart Granger and Dwayne McClain hitting outside jumpers to accompany the ever strong inside play of John Pinone and Pinckney, the onslaught did not cease until the halftime buzzer when the scoreboard read Nova 36 and the Hall 23.

The Cats continued to pour it on in the second half, building 18-20 point leads at times. All this didn't seem to phase the Pirates, who aren't the kind of team that just rolls over and dies. Seton Hall plugged along and chipped away until they had cut the Cats lead to ten at 75-65. Coach Massimino, who had been resting several of his starters, brought all five back into the game.

It turned out to be a very wise decision, because the Cats squelched Seton Hall's threat and came out on top for the final 88-73 score.

"I wasn't going to take any chances," said Massimino, explaining his move to bring the starters back in. "We played a gutty team with a gutty coach," he added, "and they just didn't quit. Hoddy's team exemplified the coach and the person that Hoddy is."

When a team scores 88 points, the offense has to be clicking. To be sure, Villanova did hit on 61 percent of their shots. But a major reason for their success was not entirely due to the offense. The defense, particularly that of Aaron Howard, was a big factor.

Howard turned in a sterling defensive effort as he collared the Big East's "Player of the Year," Danny Callandrillo, to a mere four points in the entire first half. Callandrillo later wound up with 22 points, but ten of those came in the last few minutes of the game when the outcome was academic.

Howard's defensive work drew rave reviews from Massimino. "All year long, Aaron has taken the best offensive player of the other team," said Massimino, "and has done a fine defensive job on him. Aaron did a tremendous job on Callandrillo."

If it had been a battle of the respective bands, the game would have ended in a dead draw. Even if it came down to respective fan support, the outcome would still be in serious question. Thankfully though, the second round matchup between Villanova and Boston College was a battle of basketball teams, not bands or fans, where there was certain to be a definite verdict.

That verdict came in the form of a 74-71 Wildcat victory over a game, never-say-die Eagle squad for Nova's third win over B.C. for the season. The Cats had little difficulty vaulting into the tourney's second round, by disposing of Seton Hall 88-73. The Eagles, on the other hand, trailed Syracuse the whole way in their game, but won a pulsating 94-92 decision on Dwan Chandler's jump shot with four seconds left.

Villanova struck quickly in the B.C. game, scoring the first six points and opening up a 9-2 lead. Mainly behind the red hot five of six shooting of Dwayne McClain and the superb point play of Stewart Granger, the Cats led steadily throughout the first half. The Eagles always stayed close, however.

Just when it appeared that they would be run out of the Hartford Civic Center, John Bagley and cohorts would chip away and forge their way back into the ball game. It was a good thing that Nova shot an incredible 72 percent for the half from the floor, for they went into the locker room leading only by ten, 43-33.

At the outset of the second half, the game bore a striking resemblance to the B.C.-Syracuse contest. B.C. swapped buckets with Nova for awhile, but with their full-court pressure nagging like an Excedrin headache, they inched their way into a tie at 51 with 11:21 to play.

Thanks to a big three-point play by John Pinone with 6:45 to go, the Cats led 59-53, and from then on, did not falter. They maintained four to six point leads for the remainder of the game, hitting the clutch shots when they sorely needed them. With 20 seconds left, Pinone hit two free throws to ice the victory and account for the 74 points.

As a team, Villanova shot 61 percent for the second consecutive game. It was also the second time in as many games that all five starters scored in double figures. Pinckney headed the group scoring 21 points, McClain netted 16, Granger 14, Pinone 11 and ten big rebounds, and Aaron Howard chipped in with ten.

"I thought we played excellent in spurts," said Massimino, "and we kept our cool, which is a tough thing to do against a team like B.C." In explaining the Cats success in the game and indeed the key for the whole season, Massimino said that "They go out and get the ball when they really have to."

Ed Pinckney slams home two points against the Eagles of Boston College who fell prey to the Wildcats in the second round of the Big East Tournament. Charles Gulda Photo

For B.C., the loss ended an eight-game winning streak. "This league is just too tough," quipped B.C. Coach Dr. Tom Davis. "To two comebacks in a row is just t much to ask for," he add "especially against a team li Villanova."

Saturday, March 6, 1982

Somehow, Villanova and Georgetown were destined to reach the final round of the Big East tournament together. After all, Villanova had won the regular season title, and Georgetown had been favored to win the Tournament.

So it just seemed right that they should have the chance to battle for the league title. Somehow though, a 72-54 Georgetown pasting of Villanova did not seem right. But whether right or not, that is what happened.

The first half of the finale was played like a true championship game. Both teams shot the ball well (Villanova 60 percent, Georgetown 55 percent), both committed few turnovers (Villanova five, Georgetown four), and both electrified the crowd of 14,044 with outstanding plays.

Granger started the Nova ball rolling with a deep outside jumper but Sleepy Floyd answered with one of his own. The two squads slugged it out, with neither assuming insurmountable leads, and the lead seesawed.

One play, however, warranted special attention. With Georgetown up 11-8, Ewing took a teammate's pass and arched what seemed to be an impossible shot. It was a poor-angle, fall-away baseline jumper, so angled that the ball had to travel over the backboard. Travel it did. After about a three-second hang time, it ended up in the hole as if it had eyes. On the television replay later on, the ball did not even appear on the screen during its ascent.

Villanova held for the half's last shot. With :08 remaining, Granger heaved one and hit from three-point land. (Unfortunately it was not the NBA.) The Hoyas hurried the ball upcourt and tied the game at 33-all on a Ewing double-pump slam at the buzzer.

If only the second half could have progressed as well as the first had for the Cats.

The Cats were dealt a serious blow when defensive ace Aaron Howard picked up his fourth personal foul only four minutes into the half. Nova stayed fairly close until the seven-minute mark when Floyd scored on a twisting layup to make it 47-42, G'town. This spurred the Hoyas on to a 19-scoring rampage and the game was history.

With their full-court pressure wreaking havoc upon the Cats, the Hoyas forced several turnovers and cashed in on shots with alarming frequency. If Nova did get a chance break the press, there stood Ewing, anchoring the defense and blocking away a tourney record five shots like a giant fly swatter.

Hoya Coach John Thompson felt that his team's pressure was the key to the win. "We like to pressure a team until they crack," he said, "and once we apply the pressure, we get a lot out of our defense." In perhaps the understatement of the year he added, "We are a very good defensive team."

A gracious Rollie Massimino held the Hoyas in high esteem. "Georgetown is a great team. They don't let you make any mistakes. I think that they can go very far in the NCAA Tournament," he said. "In fact," he added, "John Thompson can win the National Championship with that team."

Sunday, March 7, 1982

In assuredly the weekend's most pleasant surprise, not only did Villanova get invited to the NCAA's, they drew a first-round bye for the first time in their history. The bye is indicative of just how much respect the Cats have earned during the course of the year.

Nova will be pitted against the winner of the Northeastern-St. Joseph's game in the East Region at Uniondale, N.Y.

Impact of Aid Cuts Detailed

By LEONARD J. LaBARTH

An estimated 1313 Villanova students will lose approximately $1,037,358 in financial aid for the academic years 1982-83 and 1983-84, according to a University report.

In a study prepared by the financial aid department, proposed cuts by the Reagan administration limiting or eliminating sources of federal financial aid such as the Supplemental Education Opportunity Grant (SEOG) and National Direct Student Loan (NDSL), could make Villanova dependent "entirely upon wealthy families."

The study charges that "Villanova University has . . . for a number of years, been unduly dependent upon state and federal sources of student aid. These have not kept pace with the constant increases in our students' need for assistance. As a result, parents and students have been forced to make increasing sacrifices in order to attend."

Director of Financial Aid Vincent Femia emphasizes that while the figures are only projections, it is the most complete report possible because financial aid planners "are in the dark."

"We really don't know anything definite," said Femia. "Last October, the bill cutting back the federal grants was stated in Congress. Now President Reagan wants to tack on resolutions. Then the appropriations will be changed, and continuing resolutions asked for which will stall it all off."

According to Femia, Assistant Director of Financial Aid Arthur Switzer has been the catalyst behind most of the research study. Switzer has met with Father President John Driscoll to discuss the financial aid considerations. Switzer also visited Washington on March 3 to see local congressmen and members of key committees in Congress.

"A lot of congressmen said they were going to vote against the bill," said Femia. "But we'll just have to wait and see."

"If all these cuts are imposed," said Switzer, "we really wonder how the students are going to afford the cost of college."

Last year (1981-82), for the first time, reductions in federal student aid coupled with a drop in state grant funds put Villanova in the position of being unable to meet student needs. A $2,900 gap in each aid package was forced on the student, according to Switzer.

The cuts that will affect Villanova students:

—In 1981-82, 1,064 Villanova students received $954,835 in Pell Grants. The estimate for 1983-84 is for 572 students to receive $513,319 in grants — a two-year 46.2 percent cutback.

—In 1981-82, 491 students received $399,837 in SEOG grants. The Reagan administration is asking for a total elimination of the aid.

—National Direct Student Loan, a federal program with a repayment on the loan at an interest rate of 3 percent, could be eliminated. The large cuts first came in 1981, 495 students received $394,400. The program will continue to be kept afloat to a diminishing degree by the repayments. An estimated 350 students at Villanova will receive $350,000.

—College Work Study could be cut from 465 students receiving $544,588 to 280 receiving $392,953 — a 27.8 percent cut.

According to the study, "the bulk of Villanova enrollments come from good solid middle-class income families. Many are from

Teller Speaks on Energy

By BONNIE WHALEN and MARY PAT HENRY

This past Tuesday, a symposium on nuclear energy featuring Dr. Edward Teller and a panel of other scientists and engineers was held in the Villanova Center of the Connelly Center. The panel discussed issues and answered questions concerning nuclear energy before a crowd of over 800 people.

The symposium, entitled "Nuclear Power: Why the Controversy?" was sponsored by Villanova University in conjunction with the Energy Advisory Council of the Philadelphia Electric Company and Scientists and Engineers for Secure Energy, Inc. (SE2).

Teller, a physicist and senior research fellow of the Hoover Institute at Stanford University, was the key-note speaker. The panel, moderated by Dr. Arthur Crabtree of the religious studies department, also included Herschel Specter of the Power Authority of New York State and Dr. David Bodansky, chairman of the physics department at the University of Washington.

After opening remarks by Father President John Driscoll and Miro M. Todorovich, executive director of SE2, Teller spoke on issues ranging from the connection between energy and world hunger to the Persian Gulf.

Teller, one of the developers of the atomic bomb and an outspoken proponent of nuclear energy, said that energy production, particular in the area of nuclear power, would have to be increased to alleviate world hunger. According to Teller, "Energy increase in underdeveloped countries is closely-linked to their increase in food."

Another subject Teller discussed was the Persian Gulf. He explained that, because the region is unstable and because there is a great risk of a take-over of the area by the Soviet Union, U.S. oil supplies are threatened. Con-

Athletic Complex Plans Proposed

By JAMES DeLORENZO

Suggestions for improved intramural and athletic facilities were presented at the February meeting of the University Senate. Rev. Edward McCarthy, O.S.A., chairman of the Board of Trustees, told the Senate, "The palestra is not desirable for attendance at basketball games, and I want a change." Stating that the plans for an intramural complex are before the Board of Trustees, McCarthy added, "At present there is no endowment; no funding for the complex."

"I believe that the Trustees recognize there are serious athletic needs," commented Bob Capone, Villanova's alumni director. According to Dr. Ted Aceto, director of athletics, "The Board plans to take it up at their April meeting."

The present fieldhouse, constructed in 1932, was built for a pool with under 1000 students, and an expected maximum number of 1200 men. Villanova's enrollment is currently 6200 undergraduates, 2500 of whom are women.

At the building's opening, the Philadelphia Public Ledger praised it as "a palace of sport of unusual architectural beauty and extreme modernity in athletic facilities." The completed fieldhouse, its cost estimated between $400,000 and $500,000, has a 3000 person seating capacity.

Among several proposals under consideration is an altering of the present fieldhouse basketball court, with the construction of an intramural complex at the rear of the building, on the site of the present baseball field.

"We could expand the present building out through the Butler Annex, and change the direction of the basketball court," indicated Aceto. "We could add seats instead of bleachers, making a permanent 6500-7000 seating

Part Two: Alcohol at Villanova

Villanova Selling Liquor License

By JEFFREY PAGE

Villanova University is presently attempting to sell the retail liquor license it purchased a year ago for the Connelly Center. According to Dr. Richard Neville, vice-president for student life, "It doesn't seem to be in the best interest of the students."

When the down payment was put on the license over a year ago, then Vice-President for Student Life Rev. John Deegan, O.S.A., stated, "We might be able to resurrect the Cat's Eye or Monday night football kind of thing."

He added that the license "does not grant us the authority to violate the laws of the Commonwealth, and the drinking age of 21 would have to be observed."

Marc Tuchman, director of the Connelly Center, said at the time that the license would be "an important improvement to the whole alcohol program, and would be used in conjunction with it. It is a natural outgrowth of the program."

Villanova Buys Liquor License

In March 1981, a retail liquor license was granted to the Belle Air Corporation. The Corporation was formed for the purpose of buying the license, because Villanova University, a tax-exempt institution, cannot own such a license.

After receiving the license, the Corporation was informed of concerns of Radnor Township and the Pennsylvania Liquor Control Board (LCB) that the license might not be the right one for the Connelly Center.

In the Sept. 18, 1981 issue of the Villanovan, Tuchman said, "We are in possession of the license but do not want to use it."

Villanova attorney Ray Cullen explained, "Since it is a retail liquor license, any member of the public who is over 21 can be served — not just students."

Problems

Neville says there are more problems with the $40-$50,000 retail license than benefits. "The disadvantages far outweigh the advantages." Neville continued, "The amount of people served would be a problem. We would need a lot of control and supervision."

He went on to say that "If you have the license and are caught being in violation of the law (with other parties on campus), the LCB could just take it away."

Cullen said, "It would be questionable if the LCB could take it away (since the Belle Air Corporation is legally separate from Villanova), but I would expect a great deal of pressure to revoke it. Pennsylvania is very strict."

Cullen also reminded that "Radnor Township had raised questions about the license that had never been resolved."

"After the Connelly Center opened, there was more of a concern as to whether or not we should have a bar," said Neville. "It didn't make much sense. It would benefit too few students."

Lucyna Gorski, director of student activities, agreed. "It really wouldn't have helped the situation on campus. Most people on campus are under 21; and the people off campus would still go to Kelly's or the Wayne Tavern anyway. It would have just become another 'town-type' bar."

She also speculated that it could have even made matters worse. "We would have been in the public eye a lot; and, the LCB would be on campus a lot more."

Club Liquor License

Gorski said that the University originally wanted to purchase a

Restore Sea... Liquor License

"club liquor license," not a retail one.

In a Dec. 5, 1978 letter to Villanova attorney John Phelan, Deegan wrote, "I believe it is essential that we begin the process of obtaining a club license for our new University Center. Please advise me of the legal steps that must be taken."

The LCB says, "A club liquor license is for a non-profit organization operating towards some interest to which the sale of liquor is secondary. The club can sell liquor to members and their guests at club events on the licensed premise."

In response to Deegan's letter, Phelan wrote, "You have asked us to initiate the process of obtaining a club license for your new University Center . . . You must acquire a club license from a holder of an existing club license in Radnor Township. Since their quota for liquor and/or beer licenses has already been filled, the LCB will not issue any new club licenses in Radnor Township."

Waiting Process

"It was not likely that a club license would become available," stated Tuchman. "The places that own the (club) licenses in Radnor Township have owned them for years. And they're not in the market to sell them." The four club licenses in Radnor Township are owned by Overbrook Golf Club, Radnor Valley Country Club, American Legion Post 668, and the Italian/American Club of Wayne. They have all owned their licenses for over 30 years. "Villanova will have to wait forever to get a club license," added Tuchman.

Center Gets License

Then, in October 1980, a Radnor Township business decided to sell its retail liquor license. Since it did not look as if the University would be able to get a club license, "we decided to take a shot at the retail license," said Tuchman.

Cullen noted that, "How the license would be used was different in some people's minds. There was an opportunity to buy a license at a good price. If the price had been $20,000 more, we [illegible] the process."

We were glad we knew that there wouldn't be another opportunity to purchase a license for a long while. And, they were in a hurry to sell it."

Tuchman said, "The University went at it the best it could. We believed at the time of the purchase that it would meet our needs. It really came up unexpectedly, and we had to act fast or lose the chance. There were problems that were unexpected."

Neville added, "We weren't well enough informed. We made assumptions that weren't true. In the fall we talked about if it was the kind of license we needed — and decided to sell it."

"Rather than risk the potential problems with the license, we opted to sell it," said Tuchman. "We purchased it at a good price. We should easily get our money back and maybe make some money on it too."

The license is being sold through Morgan, Lewis and Bockius, the Philadelphia law firm representing the University.

capacity, with room for press tables. There would be no intramurals in the fieldhouse itself," added Aceto, "since the intramural building would take its place. We need to expand in order to include four good locker rooms, and restrooms, to accommodate men and women properly."

The intramural facility would include indoor track facilities, basketball courts, and facilities for baseball and other sports. Suggestions have also been made to extend the fieldhouse swimming pool from six to eight lanes.

McCarthy noted that the intramural complex was turned down by the board for lack of funding ten years ago. He now suggests that "there is a need for a separate fund for an intramural complex."

"Anyone who has ever attended Villanova would recognize and support its needs," Capone stated. "The recreation area is diminished, but the university needs to sell a whole package. Concern for the academic facilities, the need to keep the scientific and academic departments up to current standards, should be included."

The Senate was told by McCarthy that "You can't sell one area to everybody as it may not be to their particular interest. It is wise to draw from three areas to attract all possible donors."

The first Covenant Campaign fundraiser resulted in the construction of the Connelly Center. In regard to the second phase of the campaign, McCarthy told the Senate academics was a "real priority," with student life also a concern. The physical plant is a third priority, and guidelines for the campaign will likely be drawn from these areas.

Speculation as to the result of any fieldhouse and intramural facility improvements includes a possible withdrawal from the Philadelphia Big Five Conference, and the playing of all home men's basketball games at the fieldhouse instead of at the Palestra.

Cut-off Reversed

By JEFFREY PAGE

Last Friday, the Office of Residence Life posted the cut-off points for sophomore and junior residents who chose numbers in the annual housing lottery. Then on Monday, the junior women's number (282) and the sophomore women's number (130) were switched. A mistake had been made on Friday when the cut-off numbers had been posted and the two numbers had been accidentally reversed.

"It was a clerical error that allowed the sophomore and junior women's numbers to be reversed," said Director of Resident Life Chris Janosik.

Due to the lack of housing at Villanova, all resident students who want to live on campus the following year are required to choose a lottery number. Freshman residents are guarenteed housing for their sophomore year. However, there is limited space available for junior and senior residents. Therefore, lottery cut off numbers have to be determined. Those who pick numbers higher than the cut-off are inelligible for on campus residency.

While the erroneous cut-off number posted for juniors was 282, there were only 200 numbers in the lottery for juniors to pick from in the first place. And of the 70 possible numbers (between the real cut-off of 130 and the total of 200), only 35 of them had actually been drawn, because many juniors did not draw in the lottery at all.

On the other hand, approximately 130 sophomores had drawn numbers between the incorrect cut-off of 130 and the real sophomore cut-off of 282. So, while 35 more juniors are going to be ineligible for campus housing next year, 130 more sophomores can now stay on campus, who originally thought they could not.

According to Janosik, there are about a dozen women who actually acted on the incorrect numbers. He said that the Office of Residence Life feels obligated to repair the situations that the women are in. "Where people have acted on the mis-information, we want to know about it. We will try to help them"

A sophomore woman who picked a number higher than 130 could have gone out and signed a contract to lease an apartment for next year. But, if the women's is under 282, and she still wants to stay on campus, Janosik said he would try to help. "We will try to get her out of her contract. And if that doesn't work, we'll try to find someone else to take the apartment and the contract, and hope the landlord will agree to the switch."

A junior woman who believed she would be on campus next year might have passed up an opportunity to room off campus with her friends. If her friends had already found a replacement and signed a lease, than Janosik said he will try to help the woman too. "We'll try to help her find alternative off campus housing or we might put her at the top of the waiting list to get on campus." But, Janosik added, "she'll have to prove it," (that she had previous plans which she broke because of the Friday postings).

"We're obviously responsible for the error and we're trying to be fair," remarked Janosik.

Consumers

The National Student Consumer Protection Council and the Marketing Society of Villanova University will be holding a conference on the topic of "Life After AT&T?" from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. on Monday, March 22 in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center.

The conference, according to Dr. Adolph Buthys, moderator of the Marketing Society, is designed to address the implications of future changes in the telephone industry concerning costs, services, convenience, and choices to the consumer.

Representatives from two telephone companies and state and private consumer advocate groups are slated to speak, including Susum Shaneman, chairman of the Pennsylvania Public Utilities Commission, W.K. Grove, consumer affairs manager for Bell Telephone, and Max Weiner, executive director of the Consumer Education Protection Association.

The event is open to all students and the general public, and admission is free.

Pre-Registration

Pre-registration for the Fall 1982 semester will have some changes. A brief summary follows: 1. The Registrar will mail complete instructions, blank forms and time appointment information to all students; 2. According to directions for their own colleges, and in consultation with advisers, students will select their courses for the Fall 1982 semester; 3. During their assigned times, students will visit the Pre-Registration Area in Butler Annex and complete their rosters by choosing among the open sections; and, 4. Each student will leave the Pre-Registration Area with a complete approved schedule.

There will be no "course adjustment" period, and the "drop/add" following registration will be limited to transfer students and to students with changes authorized by chairpersons and deans.

"Controversial" Lecture Wasn't

A university is, ideally, a place where all sides of an issue are presented for rational, intelligent consideration and critique. For example, a quality class in political science would not shy away from discussion of a topic such as fascism, just because few if any in the class would agree with that ideology. This past Tuesday's symposium, "Nuclear Power: Why the Controversy?," did not, unfortunately, come anywhere close to presenting this type of a balanced treatment of a subject.

The symposium featured Dr. Edward Teller, a man who has been throughout his career an ardent advocate of nuclear power, in both its military and non-military applications. The event was sponsored not only by the University, but by a pro-nuclear scientists' group and the Philadelphia Electric Company, which has millions of dollars invested in nuclear reactors. Clearly, the two latter groups would not be inclined to sponsor the presentation of anti-nuclear views along with their own. Therefore, it should have been incumbent upon the University to insist that both sides of the nuclear issue be aired.

Certainly the word "controversy" implies differing opinions. However, by limiting the discussion to pro-nuclear addresses only, a chance for a lively, edifying debate was missed.

Regardless of its views on a subject, the University as an educational institution is obligated to present the Villanova community with a balanced, well-rounded view of the issue from which independent, reasonable and rational conclusions can be drawn.

The Bureaucracy – They Got Us Again

The Villanova bureaucracy has struck again.

Last week, Villanova's resident students participated in the first part of the annual housing lottery to determine who would be eligible to remain on campus next year and who would be forced to move off. By late Friday afternoon, the cut-off numbers for current sophomores and juniors were posted.

Something seemed a bit strange, a little unusual — the cut-off number for current female juniors was more than twice as high as that for current female sophomores. Normally, the numbers should have been the other way around. No one could explain the sudden change. Until Monday, that is.

On Monday morning, the Office of Residence Life announced that, lo and behold, a mistake had been made. The numbers had been reversed; the cut-off number for female juniors was actually the number for female sophomores, and vice-versa.

No big deal, right?

Wrong.

Traditionally, when the cut-off numbers are posted after the first phase of the lottery, a virtual stampede begins. Those who are kicked off-campus immediately start seeking alternative housing, and many sign leases for apartments and houses the day after the announcement.

This year was no exception, and that's the problem.

When people were out signing leases over the weekend, many had no idea that they were indeed eligible for on-campus residency. However, they are now legally bound to landlords, who aren't known for their compassion in matters such as lease-breaking.

The Office of Residence Life has announced that it is going to work with the landlords and try to help the students get out of their contractual obligations. However, this is not much of a consolation considering all the trouble and aggravation caused by the mistake made on Friday.

The mistake should never have been made. The office should have at least realized that juniors did not have more than 200 numbers to choose from, so how could their cut-off number be 282?

Additionally, with only four figures to print all together, the office could have at least gotten them in the right order...

Letters to the Editor

Meeting

Dear Editor:

Today, Friday, March 19, the University Senate will decide whether to accept the proposed University budget for fiscal 1982-83. As most students are aware, it is this budget which calls for tuition increases as high as 15.7 percent in a year when thousands of students here are facing drastic cuts in financial aid and loans. The Senate Budget Committee has rejected this budget on the basis that there is not enough "belt-tightening" in non-academic areas. It was felt that if the increases in many of these areas were more in line with the general rate of inflation, the overall tuition increase could be reduced and thus provide some relief to those who will be affected by the government cuts.

We urge all the students to attend today's Senate meeting at 4 p.m. in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall. The presence of students will show to the Senate, and the community as a whole, that the students of Villanova do care about what takes place here, and are concerned over the future financial situation for students. We look foward to seeing as many of our constituents as possible.

Minority Students

To the Editor:

A recent Villanovan (2/19/82) featured an editorial which criticized the poor performance of Villanova University in enrolling an increased number of minority students. Speaking for Villanova's black student body I strongly agree that a university of this magnitude enrolling an approximate total of black students is a sad statistic. I will refrain from adding further criticism in order to offer the administration one compliment. I compliment them in the selection of black students they do admit.

Despite the many obstacles black students encounter at VU, our attrition rate is proportionately much better than that of white students. Also, in the sports programs that black athletes are permitted to participate in, we have proven to be a major asset to the teams' success. Unfortunately, the area black students have not fared too well in establish unity and respect for each oth The result of this deficiency black student apathy towa Villanova University, bla students organizations and o selves.

Times are changing though. T black freshman class has pro to be the catalyst that awoke black upperclassmen to take pri in our school and ourselves. A in the area of sports, I do not ha to emphasize the importance black freshmen on both the m and female basketball and tra teams.

Villanova is a school that would recommend qualified bla high school students to consid If "Mr. Admissions" decides th he would like to admit a respe able number of black studen please contact the Black Cultur Society and VIBES (Villanov Informed Black Engineeri Society). We are more than willi to assist you in recruiting the ty of student that would make bla Villanova student life continue grow and flourish

Education Cuts

Dear Editor:

Villanova University, we, the student body, and the future of our country as a strong nation are being threatened. The currently proposed budget cuts on aid programs for deserving students are the key.

Our university, like most other privately supported institutions of higher education, is presently facing a serious situation, if not to its very existence then certainly to the extent of its public usefulness. High taxation against individual incomes and inflationary living costs could dry up sources which nourish and sustain the school's activities. Furthermore, the school's budgetary deficits are mounting and the end result is elimination of such activities as football and construction of new dorms.

We, the student body, are suffering also. Our education as well as our development as an individual in society could be threatened. At Villanova, as at most universities and colleges, the tuition paid for instruction meets only a fraction of the cost of the education furnished. Not only that, but a large segment of the student body is assisted by scholarships and by direct financial aid from the school's treasury as well as state and government programs for financial aid and loans. So widespread has been this policy for many years that it cannot in truth be said that any deserving student of ambition and promise cannot obtain that aid, in whole or in part, necessary to put him/her through an undergraduate career or even a post-graduate course. However, these budget cuts are now putting this policy in jeopardy.

I strongly believe that the only hope for the survival of privately-supported colleges and universities, such as Villanova, lies in the willingness of government spending to furnish support to institutions which are so essential to public welfare and therefore, of necessity, to corporate welfare and to the welfare of the state.

The issue here involved is, namely, that the government spending for aid programs for deserving and needy student is towards a course which is intimately tied to the preservation of American business and government and the American way of life as a system of free enterprise and democratic self government. Such spending is so essential to our future. I urge the student body to recognize this issue as an important one. Write to your congressman or congresswoman and exercise your rights as an American citizen. If you feel about this issue as I do, and you should, please let it be known. Thank you.

Nuclear Power

Dear Editor:

On Tuesday, March 16, I was witness to a rather one-sided symposium on the topic of nuclear energy. The fact that only the pro-nuclear argument was put forth, while it does not contradict the definition of "symposium," certainly runs contrary to the spirit of the word.

I suppose that I could dwell upon the event and its speakers, but my guess is that you will receive plenty of that sort of mail. I would much rather make what I feel is a constructive suggestion, now that the damage is already done. Why not hold another symposium featuring speakers who are uniformly anti-nuclear? The rendering of equal time to opposing points-of-view is a hallmark of academic inquiry which Villanova cannot afford to ignore, yet we seem well on our way to doing so. Perhaps (if we're lucky) the detractors of nuclear power will have the courage to engage in debate with members of their audience, unlike last Tuesday's speakers.

Thomas J. McElroy

School Spirit

To the Editor:

As the post-Spring Break blues hit most of us at this time of year, I would like to talk about an important issue to everyone here at Villanova — enthusiasm.

For the past three years our basketball team has flirted with some positive results at tournament time. This year seems especially big. After winning the Big East title in regular-season play, the Wildcats were selected for the post-season tournament. This weekend marks a big one for Villanova basketball; however, I am sorry to say, it is not being supported properly.

When we read the articles and reports of the financial rewards given to the participating teams, our eyes open wide. Just imagine a nearly $200,000 donation given to the University by the NCAA each time our team plays in the tournament. So when a group of die-hard students tries to talk to University officials concerning a trip to North Carolina for the upcoming games and gets shut out, this really upsets me. It's a crime that a so-called major university can't support its basketball team.

It's not a question of finances; the money is there; it's the enthusiasm of V.U. officials. Remember that the football program was put on the block because of "economic reasons." Well, because of this, men's basketball has become the sport. I am not knocking the other sports here, because they're all important. However, basketball is the sport which draws the greatest number of people. When the students are interested, the school is not.

I am disappointed for the team. They won't see any of the big dollars they are earning for the University. No, those so-called big dollars will be plowed back into the budget somewhere. This is 1982. Villanova, time for expansion. We are in a basketball league that is perhaps the finest in the country, but we have gone about it in a minor-league way. The players and those involved closely with the team deserve to win this weekend, but the school doesn't.

To me, it's sad when you have to talk about the Georgetowns and the Boston Colleges to induce a little spirit. But that's the way it is. They create the spirit at those schools. But at good old Villanova, all we create are computer problems.

On Campus

By ELISE VALADE and STEVE SKROBALA

Because of the on-going concern involving the proposed rise in tuition, we asked students, "Do you think that a 13.6 percent average tuition increase is justified? If not, what University area budgets should be cut?"

"No, because they are taking away loans and financial aid. Not many kids are going to be able to afford to go to college. I think the money appropriated to the Connelly Center should be trimmed."

Amy Fitzgerald
Freshman, Liberal Arts

"Not really, because I don't know where the money is going. They raised it last year and nothing looks different on campus. I think we should cut some of the maintenance budget."

John Beljean
Sophomore, Accounting

"I think not. From the people I've talked to on the Senate, it sounds like they're just not tightening their belts enough, and I feel that it's the school's obligation to make concessions for the student. Money should be cut so that not one particular budget is under any exceptional stress, yet I feel that academics should come before athletics."

Francis Schneck
Junior, Biology

"It is justified only if it is applicable to improvement in the academic areas, but because of the cut back in student loans, it is not realistic to ask the students to pay more tuition to finance such areas as maintenance and salary increase."

Lisa Farnan
Freshman, Business

"Yes, I think it is justified because with the rate of inflation, everything is increasing, so why shouldn't tuition increase along with everything else?"

Joanne Gallagher
Sophomore, Accounting

"I think it's terrible. Two of my best friends probably won't be back because of it. Not everybody is rich; not everybody can afford it. They should cut out the non-essential personnel who are getting paid for doing nothing."

Danny Nies

Models Damaged

By BETH BONINA

Two scale models of the Connelly Center and the west end of the campus were vandalized on Saturday, Feb. 20, according to Marc Tuchman, director of the Connelly Center.

The incident, which took place between 11:15 and 11:35 p.m. was discovered by the night manager on duty. He found the model of the western end of campus destroyed and the plastic model of the Connelly Center in the vestibule by the cinema.

"The model of the Connelly Center was badly ruined, but we may be able to repair it. The other one is damaged beyond repair," stated Tuchman. He continued, "When we originally purchased these models, approximately four years ago, they cost between $3,000-4,000. I doubt that we will replace them."

Tuchman feels that it is hard to prevent an isolated incident such as this, but overall he is pleased with the way in which the entire Villanova community has treated and respected the Connelly Center.

Tuchman remarked, "It is difficult to apprehend who the vandals were, due to the late hour, and also because nobody actually saw the incident take place. We would like to believe that it was not done by a student."

"It is my hope that someone will come forward with some information about the incident," said Tuchman. "What students may not realize is that whether or not they do the damage, they still have to pay for it. If someone does have information, it would be very helpful," closed Tuchman.

The Connelly Center, which is celebrating its second anniversary, is staffed by security guards during both the night and the day. "Of course, not all the guards can be everywhere at all times," said Tuchman. He also said that there are some new security measures being taken, but he declined to mention them.

The Plight Of The Commuters

By MARY GREGORY

For those who think a day in the life of a typical college student begins and ends in a convenient, cozy little dorm room, it's time your minds were enlightened. Because of its exceptionally small capacity for housing, Villanova caters to many students with a very different life style: commuters.

There are several different categories under the heading "commuter student," including the one who lives at home, the one waiting to "get on" since freshman year, and the transfer who is told when applying that there is no chance of rooming on campus. Of course there are those who opt to move off after having a fair share of dorm living, but these usually have established themselves actively and socially within the University.

The major complaint for those who commute is the feeling of being cut off from the school's social life. Karen Hayduk, a freshman transfer commuter from Narberth, complains, "You feel like you're going to a job. You come to school in the morning to do a day's work, and when your last class is over, it's time to turn around and go home. Becoming involved with students who live on campus and knowing about parties is not easy."

"Most people meet their friends in their dorms," says Jody Northrop, a sophomore, also from Narberth. "My friends are those I met in high school who didn't go away to college." Both Hayduk and Northrop commute by train, living too close to school to be eligible to live on campus.

Christine Goetschius, a sophomore arts student from New Jersey, lives in an apartment a few miles from Villanova. Because of various mix-ups with the Office of Residence Life, she is still waiting to move on campus. "Living in an apartment isn't easy," says Christine, "especially for freshmen. You don't hear people talking about where the parties are and how to get tickets for them. If you've lived on before and now commute, you've at least established friends on campus."

Perhaps the housing situation will improve for the freshmen entering in September of '82; yet those whose homes are within a certain radius of the school, as well as any transfer students, are given no hope at all of ever living on campus. A small percentage of students living close enough to campus are permitted to eat in the school's cafeterias. Fortunately, this provides a means of mingling with Villanova residents. For those who don't have this option, however, there is always the Connelly Center.

Senior civil engineering major Joe Smith claims that "the Connelly Center is good enough for meeting other commuters, but it's difficult to find out about campus activities, and once you do find out about them it's too late to find tickets." Smith also commented, "The association for commuter students doesn't do much to enhance school involvement."

Another problem commuters must deal with is how to spend time between classes. "I'll swim in one of the campus pools, rather than go home, just to be around other students," says Karen, "but even then it's difficult to meet Villanova residents. Lugging books and other paraphernalia on the train, and carrying it around all day is a hassle." If you're lucky you have nice on-campus friends who patiently put up with you using their rooms as lockers, but even then there is the strained feeling of imposition.

Well, these gripes are all part of choosing to commute to college. After all, the school does inform the new student of its lack of space. In any event, it's important to be aware of how "the other half," that is, the commuters, live. Many residents don't realize the problems commuters face, but perhaps now, in light of the recent lottery drawings, more students may appreciate the difficulties involved.

Only Qualified Need Apply

By CAROL ALKONS

Often when a professor possesses a doctorate degree in a specialized field, people tend to think that he has risen to the highest level as an educator, but as Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, O.S.A., vice-president for academic affairs explained, there is a series of prerequisites that must be met before the promotion to the highest level of teaching — that of a full professor — is awarded.

Gallen stated that most of the professors at Villanova have doctorate degrees, although some without them were hired in the past. He noted, "Villanova is in the process of change. We wouldn't interview anyone who didn't have a doctorate unless it was for nursing or naval science. We don't usually talk to people with just master's degrees. They just wouldn't stand a chance. If they don't have their doctorate, they're on the verge of getting it."

Gallen described the hiring of professors as "a long process. We advertise that there is an opening; then a screening committee looks over the applications." The chairman and faculty of the department usually hold a seminar about the academic program for the prospective candidates. Along with the dean of the department and Gallen, they discuss who will be best for the position.

"I then send the letter of offer," said Gallen.

The new faculty members with doctorate degrees are hired as assistant professors; those without degrees are hired as instructors, with the stipulation that they obtain their doctorate, at which point they will be promoted to assistant professor.

"The intent of this is to get everyone to get a doctorate degree," said Gallen. Currently, there are 49 full-time instructors at Villanova.

Instructors must report when they expect to complete work on their doctorate degree. In addition, the deans must report on the instructor's progress.

The exception, Gallen noted, is in the undergraduate nursing program. "What is important is the clinical aspect; you don't need a Ph.D. to demonstrate clinical nursing skills." The clinical portion of the nursing program is that in which the students work in actual hospitals, nursing homes and simulation labs. "The students are taught by doctors in chemistry class and in other classes."

For the nursing graduate program, the faculty members are required to have a doctorate degree.

In order to advance from the position of assistant professor to associate professor, a teacher must show substantial research, published work, or material in refereed journals, in which peers from other universities review the research before it is published.

"Teaching effectiveness is a very important requirement for this promotion, also," said Gallen. He pointed out that the University Senate recently passed a resolution in which student input would be a consideration in "this tender and emotional issue."

There are 159 full-time assistant professors at Villanova, 108 of whom hold doctorate degrees. Of the 132 associate professors here, 115 have doctorate degrees.

Gallen explained that the standards for promotion to the position of full professor are even more difficult. The candidates must have a record of "an eye to teaching, research and service. The person is scrutinized very carefully. The research done and published work should bring national attention to the University."

Currently, 97 members of the full-time faculty at Villanova are professors; 93 of them hold doctorate degrees.

All faculty members have the same basic requirement of teaching 12 hours of class each week. "However," remarked Gallen, "some work loads are reduced for special research or administration reasons, as in the case of department chairmen."

There is a broad salary range within each professional level. "There is no fine dividing line; some salaries are rather high because of longevity, but sometimes newer people fulfill the requirements more quickly," Gallen said.

"After we hire someone — a Ph.D. — there is a six-year trial period before they come up for tenure. They are reviewed by the Rank and Tenure Committee. Once they have tenure, they are reviewed every year ... People have been denied tenure for not qualifying in the area of teaching, research or service. Even when they come up for promotion they might not get it if they haven't performed in these areas. More don't get it than get it, recently.

"This procedure is standard in most first-class universities. This isn't a procedure unique to us," elaborated Gallen.

He continued, "I don't think kids understand what it means to be a full professor. A full professor has done thorough research and has been of service to the community and has served on committees. A full professor should be a [illegible] outstanding academic person. They're not everywhere."

Mgt. Enjoys Break

By GARY SHIRK

Between the dates of February 15 and April 29 this year, hundreds of thousands of college students will migrate to Ft. Lauderdale, Fla., for their Spring Break vacation. How do the people of Ft. Lauderdale feel about this?

The hotel management seems to enjoy it. According to Nelson Crance, Assistant Manager of the Holiday Inn Oceanside, hotel management looks forward to the Spring Break season in many respects. One of the reasons they enjoy this season is that their hotel occupancy hikes up from a year-round average of 75 to 80 percent to 99 to 100 percent.

Along with this boost in occupancy comes a boost in the rates. The normal rates of $83 a night for a room jump up to $95 a night. However, these figures, points out Crance, are misleading. "Though the cost per room rises, the actual cost to the individual decreases." This is because the number of occupants per room is doubled.

Another thing that pleases the management is the advertising that they receive. "Students are a very good source of advertisement," says Crance. "Each year the same students keep coming back, and each year they bring more people with them."

In another evaluation, Sgt. Frank W. Schueler, public information officer of the Ft. Lauderdale police department, believes that with any sudden population increase of this magnitude there are bound to be some problems.

One of these problems is an increase in the amount of petty crimes committed. This is apparently due to the students running short on funds, says Schueler. Also the amount of people drinking in public and the amount of intoxication arrests increase.

According to Schueler, as far as the residential section is concerned, their major complaint is the noise. This noise problem stems from the traffic and the people walking the streets.

Junior Week

By CHRIS RADAN

Each year, the Honors Program sponsors Honors Junior Week, a lecture and discussion series conceived of and actualized by the juniors in the program. A time-relevant theme is chosen and speakers are brought to the University. Forums, panels, and lectures are the means used to communicate and debate the theme. In the past, themes such as "The 'Me' Culture" and "U.S. Policy in Latin America" have been discussed, which both proved popular.

This spring, the topic of discussion for Junior Week will be "Computers and Society." The role of computers in our lives and society will be thoroughly examined in a lecture/discussion series spaced over five nights.

On Tuesday, March 23, Dr. Carolyn Marvin, a sociologist from the University of Pennsylvania, will speak on "Computers in Personal Life." She will address the wide range of topics associated with this idea.

On Wednesday, March 24, a panel composed of representatives from Bell Labs, Merck Company, Chilton Publishing Company, and several others will address the subject of computer applications in growing professions.

"Computer Fun Night" will be on Monday, March 29. There will be demonstrations of computers by both faculty and local business representatives.

Another panel, on Tuesday, March 30, will meet to discuss the implications of merging communication and information networks. Representatives from Bell Telephone, the Defense Department, and others will speak.

On Wednesday, March 31, Junior Week 1982 will close with a lecture given by Dr. Daniel Bell, noted Harvard sociologist. His topic: "The Post Industrial Era."

In the past, Junior Week has been dominated by a concern for the arts. This year, however, the theme is designed to appeal to a broader cross-section of students and faculty alike.

All events will be held in the Connelly Center Cinema, with the exception of "Computer Fun Night," which will be in the Villanova Room. All events will begin at 7:30 p.m., with the exception of Bell's speech, which will start at 8 p.m.

Germany's Greatest Poet

March 22nd, 1982 marks the 150th anniversary of the death of Goethe. The following feature article is a repeat article from the October 20, 1976 issue.

By JOHN J. MULLIGAN

Dr. Mulligan is a member of the department of modern languages.

He has been called Germany's greatest poet and writer. A modern psychologist has assigned him a reconstructed I.Q. of over 200. Authorities have termed him a genius, one of the greatest intellects of Western Civilization. His name ranks with Homer, Dante and Shakespeare.

Johann Wolfgang Goethe was born on the 28th of August 1749 in Frankfurt-on-the-Main River in current-day West Germany. The threat of asphyxia made it an extremely dangerous and difficult birth for the new life and for the young, 18-year-old mother. She was Katherina Elisabeth Textor Goethe, daughter of the chief magistrate of the city, a woman of happy disposition and lively imaginative powers. Goethe's father, twenty years older than his wife, was Johann Kaspar Goethe, a doctor of laws and an imperial councillor, fairly wealthy, serious, pedantic, orderly in all that he did. It was he who gave Goethe and his sister Cornelia their first education.

From 1765 to 1768 young Goethe studied law in the city of Leipzig. During this period he was quite active socially, interested in the theater and writing poems in the pre-Christian Anacreontic spirit. An illness forced his return home to Frankfurt. He was about twenty years of age now as he came under the influence of the pietism of a distant relative of his mother, Susanna von Klettenberg.

In 1770-71 Goethe, at the suggestion of his father, completed his law studies in Strassburg, receiving the degree of licentiate of law in August, 1771. In Strassburg he met and formed a friendship with Johann Gottfried Herder, the great philosophical leader of the German "Sturm and Drang" ("Storm and Stress"). The latter exerted a powerful influence on Goethe's cultural and literary development. During these two years Goethe became exposed to Homer, Shakespeare, Ossian, the German Folk-song, old German literature, and Gothic architecture. Here, too, he fell in love with Friederike Brion, the first of several great loves of his life-time. As always, such a relationship produced beautiful and enduring love lyrics. He was to write later, in his great autobiographical work, Dichtung and Wahrheit (Truth and Fiction), that his poems were "fragments of one great confession."

The spring and summer of 1772 found Goethe preparing himself actively for his profession — which he was destined not to pursue; nor the career of a painter/sketcher in which world he also had marked talent. He was at the seat of the imperial law courts, Wetzlar. More significantly he experienced the emotional upheaval of an unrequited love for a young lady, Charlotte Buff, later immortalized in his Werther.

He returned to Frankfurt and published his first great work, a "Sturm and Drang" historical drama based upon a medieval independent knight, Gotz von Berlichingen. It made him the greatest writer in Germany. In 1774 there appeared the novel in epistolary form, Die Leiden des jungen Werther (The Sorrows of Young Werther). Its morbid sentimentality suited the age and caused the "Werther fever" ("Wertherfieber") to spread all over Europe. The "Werther costume" ("Werthertracht"), consisting of a blue tailed coat, yellow waist-coat, and trousers with high boots, was adopted everywhere by young men.

In the ode "Prometheus" of 1774 also, Goethe depicted the ancient mythical creator of man defying the gods. He became the idol of the "Sturm und Drang." Goethe was now, at the age of twenty-five, a European celebrity in the world of literature. He became briefly engaged to Lili Schonemann, the daughter of a Frankfurt banker. His first trip to Switzerland was followed by an invitation in 1775 by Duke Karl August to spend a few weeks at his court in Weimar. Goethe accepted. Weimar was to become his home for the remainder of his life.

Singers To Compete

By IRENE M. SHALLOW

In 1962, Ladycliff College of New York hosted a competition for women's chorales and glee clubs from the northeastern United States. Every year since a competition has been held as a tradition bringing together clubs within a bond of excellence through the special gift of music. This year is no exception.

The Villanova University Women's Glee Club will be hosting the 20th Anniversary Catholic Intercollegiate Women's Glee Club Association (C.I.W.G.C.A.) Festival and Competition on March 20 and 21. This coming weekend's extravaganza will consist of a Festival Saturday at 7:30 p.m. in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center. Dr. Bernice Leagus-Capaci, moderator of the Women's Glee Club, will welcome the nine clubs and Rev. Edward Hamel, O.S.A., moderator of the Villanova Singers, will be the Master of Ceremonies.

The Competition will be held Sunday afternoon at 2:15 p.m. at Archbishop Carroll High School in Radnor. The nature of the competition is as follows: each club in order will perform three pieces. The first is a warm-up which will not be judged. The two judged pieces are "This Is The Garden" by Vincent Persechetti and the other is at the choosing of the individual clubs. The five judges will grade each club's performance on appearance, execution, interpretation, technical precision and tone quality. Tabulators will determine the first, second and third places by the point system. Dean of Students Rev. Robert Martin, O.S.A., will issue the welcome. Mr. Daniel Regan, assistant professor of philosophy, will be the Master of Ceremonies.

This year's participating clubs are from Anna Maria College of New York, College of Saint Elizabeth of New Jersey, College of New Rochelle of New York, Fairfield University of Connecticut, Worcester Polytechnical Institute of Massachusetts, Immaculata College of Pennsylvania, Marist College of New York, Georgain Court College of New Jersey and Villanova University of Pennsylvania.

Where The Band Is....

By PAULA C. GARELL

John Dunphy, director of "music activities," and the Villanova band are collaborating with Vasey Theatre production this season in "How to Succeed in Business without Really Trying." This is the first time there has been a fusion of these organizations, partly because this is the music activity's first year in existence. Previously, music activities was merely another heading under student activities.

Music activities includes all facets in music from the band to the glee club to the dance ensemble and involves about 250 students. It is hoped that working with Vasey Theatre will be another permanent part of the activities. Dunphy expressed optimism in this area and "personally looks forward to operating with other organizations on campus." He feels this area is the beginning of a whole new viable and growing area of Student Life.

Dunphy, who has been at Villanova three years, is happy that, "we can all work together and share in the production of this musical." This is his 37th production of a musical, and the second time he has done this particular show.

Also helping with the production from music activities is pianist Monica Liggins and vocal coach Michael Luisi.

Yiddish soul music? Jewish jazz? Yes, there is such a music, and it is coming to Philadelphia in the form of a concert by the Klezmer Conservatory Band at Villanova University on Sunday, March 21 at 8:00 p.m. Made up of 14 Jewish and non-Jewish musicians, the Klezmer Conservatory Band performs Yiddish and East European vocal and instrumental melodies based on the original folk forms developed by wandering minstrels in medieval times and brought to America by Jewish immigrants.

The concert will take place in the Villanova Room of The Connelly Center, and admission is $3 for students and $4 for adults, paid at the door. It is being sponsored by the Villanova Jewish Union and the Jewish Campus Activities Board.

Cultural Program Developed

By DONNA BOYER

This spring, the Connelly Center, under the direction of Dr. John Doody of the honors department, is presenting a new concert and lecture series featuring prominent members of the Villanova community and various performers from the Philadelphia area.

Doody, the originator of the idea, believes this series is "an attempt to help educate people in Villanova to things that aren't normally programmed to Villanova."

"The University recognized the need for cultural programs and this series allows students to be exposed to it," said Chris Mueller of the Villanova Union, who helped in coordinating the publicity for the series.

The future of the series, according to Doody, depends on the interest shown. If the series is a success, as is hoped, plans include talks by such personalities as the president of Sun Oil Company and concerts by classical and contemporary musicians in the area. However, once the news of the series has been spread, both Doody and Mueller are confident that it will be a success.

However, with all this in mind, the police still have a positive view of Spring Break in Ft. Lauderdale. As Schueler states, "Any pilgrimage from all over the country puts money into the businesses of Ft. Lauderdale, which helps boost the economy so that everyone benefits. Also we hope that after visiting Ft. Lauderdale, many students who like it will consider making Ft. Lauderdale their home."

'Windows' Gi[illegible]

By STEVEN HELMETAG and GREG SHEH

Windows, the latest new album release from the Charlie Daniels Band is a good time Southern rock record containing many smooth songs ranging from straight-ahead country to virtually straight-ahead rock and roll. Unfortunately, the disc contains nothing new, but it is a must for CDB fans.

Still in Saigon, the first cut, is about life during the Vietnam War. It attempts to be progressive while still containing the Charlie Daniels' touch. This tune is tastefully played and offers nice lead guitar work and is a decent opening track.

Starting with the neat tune the album begins to go downhill, only to pick up at the end of side one when the Partyin' Girl hits town begins. Once again this song is nothing original, but it comes across quite well. It's about a sexy girl who is always ready for a good time. Musically, Partyin' Girl contains a well rehearsed country blues progression.

Ain't No Rambler Anymore, a honky tonk tune, starts out with a saloon sounding piano and rolls into some nice guitar playing. Like most of the songs on the album, it tells a story and has the Charlie Daniels' trademark of guitar solos. This song is about the dying breed of traveling man (or rambler) in the United States. The Lady In Red, Blowing along with the Wind, and Nashville Moon, are all medium tempo tunes with great keyboards and guitars, which are prime examples of Southern rock.

Ragin' Cajun, the opening track on the second side, is a song about a tough man who would abuse anyone that upset him. This is a catchy tune with a fast tempo and fantastic fiddle solos. Another medium tempo story song is Makes You Want To Go Home. This is about musicians who are trying to make it in the music business but always end up going nowhere. The musicians, because of their love for music, keep on striving for fame even though what was once fun is now not much more than a job. Strong lyrics and mellow guitar solos make this song tick. The Universal Hand is a nice tune with an Egyptian backdrop that reminds the listener of melodies from The King And I.

The album's cover conveys the idea of good against bad, the country versus the city, and day with night. The front cover shows a small town scene with an old time drug store and movie theatre in the foreground, churches and country houses are in the background. The dark corner is the evil side. This cover reminds me of [illegible] album. A pretty department, a church and scattered service. The album is revealing its listeners of the dismal future in store for our country. The lyrics throughout, seem to say the "life ain't what it used to be." And if taken seriously can be a bit depressing. However, the music, on the whole is cheerful (still another contrast).

Windows does not have the long fiddle and guitar jams that are reminiscent of past CDB recordings. On the whole, it is a good album with a contained Southern influence that is a change for the Charlie Daniels Band.

Succeed

pirations, as well as the anger and despair, of Rosemary.

Both Guerin and Sotorrio are versatile performers and reveal the many talents that they possess. The rest of the cast provides good, yet inconsistently refined and polished support. Paula Garell is the exception. Garell, as Smitty, the personnel secretary, consistently gives a fine performance. She seems to be the key to keeping the chorus from falling apart. She provides a cohesive element to much of the production. Nonetheless, there is still an element missing which is needed to tie the entire production together.

All in all, "How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying" is a success. Villanova Theatre once again provides fine culture, and the annual spring musical, with its lively and entertaining performances, is a fun way to forget the harshness of the exiting winter.

Book Review:
Depression's Panacea

By JOHN F. LYNCH

The Courage to Live by Dr. Ari Kiev is a guidebook which explains the causes and reasons for depression and suicide. Depression is a state of mental existence where the patient feels that nothing can go right. Kiev tells us that tens of thousands of normal citizens take their lives every year. This unbelievable fact should be dealt with by breaking it down to examine who these depressed/suicidal patients are.

When one thinks of someone who has committed suicide, one thinks of a lonely, sad person who has no job and no money. Wrong. Suicide holds no racial, social or age limitations, says Kiev. In fact, the number of late teen-age middle class girls who commit suicide is astonishing. One also thinks of a suicide victim as [illegible] as a very [illegible] and the typical suicide [illegible] for many hours before committing their act of finality.

Kiev continues his book by explaining to the reader the signs of a depressed person. Quite simply, signs of depression are temporary exaggerations of every day experiences, fatigue, loss of appetite, insomnia, and sudden emotional changes.

Kiev continues his analysis by telling us the forms of treatment available today for the victim of depression. One form discussed is called chemotherapy, which is the use of certain drugs to help the symptoms of depression. [illegible] pression, unlike most diseases [illegible] no sound remedy or [illegible] cure. Chemotherapy [illegible] on the situation [illegible] The use of [illegible] ates, and lithium [illegible] the heading of [illegible]

The final pages of The Courage to Live covers such topics as "A Guide to Family and Friends," "Guidelines for Selecting a Psychotherapist," "Throughout the book Kiev comes across as someone who is caring and sympathetic. He has put together a fine piece of work which is entertaining and quite informative. If anyone has questions pertaining to depression, Kiev's book The Courage to Live is the source to turn to.

Lester Bowie: The Other Pretender

By JOHN HAWECKI

[illegible] experience which are brought in to make new music. This isn't a band where the leader dictates the way everything should be done. Everybody writes, brings in material and does extra studies."

The album opens with its title track, The Great Pretender, which, in its original form, everyone would recognize although not be sure from whom. Bowie plays a twisting, undulating trumpet solo that slowly winds into the somewhat recognizable melody. It all comes together after some introductory changes, managing to merge what sounds like Miles Davis and Frank Zappa into New Orleans' style Louis Armstrong blaring; an impressive, if eclectic, tour. The band underneath structures the piece wonderfully. Somewhere in the baritone sax solo, things fall apart but the piano/drum/bass rhythm section puts them back together again. To call this interpretation of The Great Pretender new and different would be an understatement.

Then It's Howdy Doody Time. No kidding. That same song that millions of kids sang along with Buffalo Bob is a pretty shrewd follow-up to the unfamiliar rendition of another American favorite which preceden it. This version is loose and easy. Bowie's trumpet sounds like a drunken sailor balancing on a highwire, and when the piano comes in, it sounds like the two of them are dancing up there. Is this purely "academic" music? Sure it is!

Doom? is (what else) the sound of things falling apart. It is unsyncopated, disjointed, pinned together only by a feverish bass line. It does, however, provide an interesting, bridge between the throwaway It's Howdy Doody Time and the beautiful :40 of When the Moon Comes Over the Mountain which closes the first side. It demonstrates Bowie's amazing depth of talent and modes of expression.

Rios Negroes is easily the most exciting and accessible piece on the album. It borrows from Don't You Worry 'Bout a Thing for its opening piano riff and then Bowie borrows one or two moods from Davis' Sketches of Spain songbook with admirable restraint. The piano/bass interplay provides the chords, and the pianist also steps forward to solo a little. Towards the end, the pianist runs circles around the dancing bass and crackling drums while Bowie blows cool overtones nearby. It is the most coherent and sincere number on The Great Pretender.

Rose Drop and Oh, How the Ghost Sings are the instrumental equivalents of Allen Ginsberg's poem Howl. On top of a slow, menacing bass rumble, Bowie's trumpet shrieks like some kind of terrible, bleeding beast while the piano and cymbals softly rustle like leaves of grass parting to let the tiger pass and stalk its wounded prey. If there is a melody to Rose Drop it is buried beneath some awfully frightening stuff.

Oh, How the Ghost Sings is more of the same brutal, jarring sounds. It is certainly powerful, but the structure of contrasts that makes the first side so coherent and dynamic seems overrun by disharmonics and dramatics on the second. The final 13 minutes of the album sound like Robert DeNiro slowly going crazy in Taxi Driver.

It won't play in Peoria, which may or may not be the point. It is a shame that a very inventive tune like Rios Negroes is buried on an [illegible] ish, when even just another :40 of When The Moon Comes Over the Mountain would have seemed much friendlier. The Great Pretender is just tight enough to not be discarded completely, yet you have to wonder if it is together enough for most people to buy it. Of course, you have to wonder if most people are together enough to believe in The Great Pretender. Which may or may not be the point.

Laxmen Play Exhibition Games

By BRIAN McFADDEN

The Villanova Men's lacrosse team opens its season at Western Maryland this Saturday at 2 p.m. Senior captains Tom Kelly, Kevin McHugh and Jim Coakley predict this game will set the tone for the rest of the season.

According to Coakley, "Western Maryland and Drexel are the best teams we will face this year." The Cats hope to improve last year's record of four-and-eight by winning their first few games against some of their toughest opponents.

This year, Coach Lee Stevens has a team of "greater depth." Kelly remarks, "We have a big load of freshman who are talented but lack experience." The team lost only three or four graduating seniors and will be starting freshman Drew Cunningham as goalee.

All-Leaguer's Coakley and Bill Gold will provide their skills for a strong, physical defense. Heading the offensive attack will be sophomore Kenny Delgado, last year's "rookie of the year" and leading scorer.

According to Kelly, "For us to win this year, we need balanced scoring from our mid-fielders and attack men. The way our offense goes we will need high scoring." Defensively, "We hold other teams pretty well."

In their two scrimmages against Fairleigh Dickinson, the Cats tied the first 10-10 and lost 12-6 in the second. Sleet and hail covered the field, making it difficult for the defense to rotate off and on, and this helped account for the 12-6 loss.

The men's first home game is Monday, March 22 at 4 p.m. against Michigan State.

Women

Women's lacrosse, which is club team, will begin Tuesda March 23 against Swarthmor Head Coach Joan Johnson think this year's team is "the be quality team we've had so far

The team, which finished .500 la year, hopes to play respectabl against some of the stronge teams. Johnson adds, "I feel a l better about this year's team. W have a lot more depth this yea than we've had in the past and ar fairly strong."

The women's team then travel to Widener on March 31, and the to Glassboro on April 2.

Cats Shock Rutgers for EAIAW Title

By BOB HELLER

This past weekend the Villanova women's basketball team participated in the EAIAW Basketball Championships at the Villanova University Field House. The Wildcats came away with two victories, the first, an easy 65-48 win over the Express of St. John's, and the second, a hard-fought win over seventh-ranked Rutgers, 59-55.

Their first game was on Friday night against the Express of St. John's. This game was completely dominated by Villanova. Leading the way for the Wildcats was senior center and co-captain Lisa Ortlip with 27 points. The team as a whole played excellent ball. They were able to penetrate very well and get the lay-up, and they played excellent defense, holding St. John's to just 15 points in the first half. By virtue of this win the Cats earned the right to play Rutgers, which had an easy victory over Northeastern in Friday's nightcap.

Against Rutgers, the Wildcats jumped out to a 4-0 lead early in the first half on two jump shots by Nancy Bernhardt. Rutgers battled back and took the lead 17-16 with 7:15 left in the half, on a three-point-play by center Terry Dorner. Villanova, by this time, was already in foul trouble, with Ortlip picking up her third foul with a little less than nine minutes to go. Both teams exchanged baskets until 1:33, when Rutgers jumped out to a 33-28 lead. Some clutch free-throw shotting by Stephanie Vanderslice.

Villanova controlled the second-half tip off and extended their lead to three points, 36-33. During the next seven minutes, the Lady Knights of Rutgers outscored the Wildcats 8-2, taking a 41-38 lead. During that time Ortlip picked up her fourth personal foul. A jump shot and a free throw by Andrea Burton, who finished the game with seven points and five assists, tied the game at 41-41. Baskets were exchanged by both sides with Rutgers taking a 49-45 lead with 6:58 left in the game. The Wildcats defense began to slowly collapse, allowing Rutgers to penetrate and with 5:07 left to go Rutgers had built a six-point lead 53-47. Villanova Coach Harry Perretta quickly called timeout to talk things over with his team.

After the timeout Cats came out charging, outscoring Rutgers 12-2 in the last five minutes, pulling off a 59-55 upset victory. This offensive attack was sparked by some clutch free throw shooting by sophomore Burton and Nancy Bernhardt and excellent outside shooting by Kathie Beisel and Vanderslice. Vanderslice finished with 12 points and 12 rebounds. Beisel had eight points, eight rebounds and seven assists. The high scorer for the Wildcats was Bernhardt with 16 points. Patty Coyle led the Lady Knights with 12 points.

The Wildcats were able to run with a very good Rutgers team. "We are a running team," commented Burton after the game. "As long as we are in control of our break, we can run with anybody," she said.

The Wildcats now advance to the final 16 in the AIAW national tournament. Perretta's team is seeded second, with Texas as the top seed and Rutgers, the third seed. "I think we can win it all, there's no question in my mind. We have played almost every team that is in the AIAW championship with the exception of Texas, which is ranked about fifth," commented senior co-captain Vanderslice after the St. John's game on Friday night.

The team will play the University of Miami (Ohio) this Sunday night at the Fieldhouse. The winner of this game will play the winner of the Delta State-Vanderbilt game .

Synchro Trio Leads Team to 3rd Place EAIAW Finish

By LARRY GOANOS

Propelled by first-place finishes in both the trio and figure advance, the Villanova women's synchronized swimming team took third-place honors in the 1982 EAIAW Regional Championships.

The Wildcats used the meet, which was held on March 12-13 at Millersville State College, as a springboard for the national championships which will be held from March 25-27 at Ohio State University.

The winning trio team consisted of Susan Giordano, Vicki Wagner, and Joelle Haughey. Giordano and Wagner are All-Americans by virtue of their superior performances and last year's championships. The pair teamed up at the 1981 Nationals to place ninth in the country in the senior duet, while Giordano and Wagner placed ninth and tenth, respectively, in the junior solo competition.

First-year Head Coach T.J. Citta and her swimmers will be heading to Columbus with the hopes of improving upon last year's ninth place national finish, which currently stand as Villanova's best synchronized swimming season ever.

Junior Vicki Wagner captured third in the open solo event at last year's Eastern Regional Synchronized Swimming Championships. This year, teamed up with Giordano, Wagner helped lead the Villanova squad to a 3rd place finish.

Women Host 1st Round National Tourney

College basketball in Philadelphia: You don't have to travel all the way to Raleigh to see the Wildcats go after a national championship. The Villanova women's basketball team will be hosting the opening round of the AIAW National Basketball Championships this weekend at the Field House. The Wildcats are seeded second and are slated to play Miami of Ohio Sunday night at 9 p.m. At 7 p.m. that evening Vanderbilt takes on Delta State. The winners of these two games will advance to the second round to be held Tuesday night at 7:30 p.m. in the Field House.

Women Receive Honors at National Championships

By BEVERLY REILLY

The women's track team produced four All-Americans at the National Indoor Track and Field Championships this past weekend at the University of Northern Iowa.

Senior Jennifer Whitfield broke the school record in the trials of the 600-yard run with a time of 1:21.23. Then, Whitfield came back to place sixth in the finals, establishing herself as an All-American. Whitfield, who also qualified for the 880-yard run, placed fourth in the 880 trials.

Junior Peggy Stewart also broke a school record in the high jump. Stewart jumped a record breaking height of 5-11-1/4 to place sixth in the event. Stewart received All-American honors for her fine performance.

Sophomore Patty Bradley also came home an All-American. Bradley took seventh place in the 880-yard run with a time of 2:13.03.

Freshman Veronica McIntosh achieved All-American honors with her performance in the 600-yard run. Due to a tie in the trials, McIntosh was forced to compete in a two-woman run-off. McIntosh outran her opponent with a personal best of 1:21.83, insuring herself a spot in the finals. McIntosh came back to place seventh in the finals.

Coach Bob Shoudt was pleased with the performances of the tracksters. He stated, "We traveled to the meet with four national qualifiers and we came home with four All-Americans. It was a super meet."

Tracksters Capture 3rd At NCAA's

Donoghue, England, Hunter Pace Team

By JOE MARUSAK

Entering their most important indoor track meet of the season, Villanova University's Men's varsity squad was not in a good position. However, as they left the meet, they were in a very good position.

Last weekend, the Wildcats competed in the NCAA Indoor Track Championships held at Pontiac, Mich. and captured third place. As Nova warmed up in the Pontiac Silverdome, they were missing three of their top athletes: Craig Morris, John Marshall and Ken Lucks.

Morris, the freshman, had visited the dentist a little over a week before Pontiac. The pain from having three molars pulled was just too much for the New Jersey native. He had to sit out.

The other freshman, Marshall, was recovering from a hamstring-related injury. He was not in top form and couldn't compete effectively. Lucks' stress fracture has kept him from running all season.

Fortunately, the veterans maintained control and Villanova, when all was said and done, left the Superbowl XVI town with a third place trophy.

That made Jack Pyrah, the assistant coach and indoor mentor, very happy, "Considering the people injured, we did a real good job."

One of those who helped to do the job was the senior Ross Donoghue. He ran 4:00.74 mile, good for second place. Suleiman Nyambui, whose Texas-El Paso team once again won the meet, edged out Donoghue for first.

Donoghue and Marcus O'Sullivan, who placed fourth in the mile, teamed up with John Borgese and Mike England to take third in the two-mile relay. They were nipped at the finish by both Richmond and Arizona State.

Still, not everything was going well for Villanova. Competing in his heat of the 880-yard run, England tripped on the track. "I think England would have won if he had gotten into the finals," noted Pyrah. "Some boards were loose. A total of 12 people fell in trials." One of those even managed to do a complete flip. Fortunately, England did not. He recovered and was running a half-hour later.

"He did a tremendous job," said Pyrah.

In the 60-yard hurdles, Rodney Wilson hit a hurdle, and ended up in fifth place. Carlton Young, running the 440-yard dash, placed seventh.

Yet, the Cats ended up with an impressive 28 points. They were only two behind second place finisher Arkansas. John Hunter's strong second in the 1000 yard run was a key to that total. His 2:08.39 was topped only by Arkansas' John Stephens.

Texas-El Paso surprised no one by finishing first in the field. With such runners as Nyambui, it is no wonder the school has been the envy of all others for the past several years.

Villanova's finish was typical of the track tradition. "Since 1974, we've been in the top five every time," observed Pyrah.

"All in all," the coach concluded, "it was a real good performance ... Everybody did a great job."

Cats Prevail in 3 OT's, Face Memphis State In Eastern Regional Semi Finals

By KERRY LYNCH

Sunday's Wildcat-Huskie match-up was no ordinary basketball game. As a matter of fact this game was well-stocked with four edge-of-the-seat, never-say-die finales. The Wildcats pulled it out at the end of the nationally televised triple overtime 76-72 to move on to the regional semi-finals in Raleigh, North Carolina.

Many fans had counted on a Villanova/St. Joe's re-match and had not even considered that Perry Moss and company might be waiting under the boards on Sunday afternoon to give the Cats a scare.

The fairly unknown status of Northeastern was brought home when the public address announcer introduced the, "Huskies from Northwestern."

However, once play opened, it was necessary to keep in mind that this team wanted to win, too, and beating them would be no easy task for the Wildcats.

Northeastern took the ball on the opening tap but Villanova scored first with Stewart Granger putting two on the board with a running lay-up.

For a while things remained pretty even with Nova and Northeastern trading shots and the lead. At the half the Wildcats were up by three and shooting 62.5 percent.

Coach Rollie Massimino said, "Our freshmen did an outstanding job." Ed Pinckney and Gary McLain were both two for two in the first half and grabbed down two rebounds each. Dwayne McClain had eight field goal points.

Fired up early in the second half, the Cats came out as if they had made a decision to win this one in no uncertain terms. And it looked, for most of the half, as if just that would happen. A McClain side jumper at 10:48 gave the Cats a nine-point lead. Minutes later, Perry Moss, Northeastern's "Miracle Man," was playing with four personal fouls, and things were not looking good for the Huskies. But Moss already had 21 points and was just beginning to realize how hungry he was.

Moss, the 6-2 guard, turned in a super performance all day and down the stretch when it mattered — he really showed that he was the Huskie MVP for the day, as he had been all season. All this is very fitting because his initials (his name is Perry Vernon Moss) read backward are MVP, and his mother claims this was no mere coincidence. Playing to win, Moss gathered 31 points and seven rebounds before the Huskies were banished for another year to the still cold and unknown regions of the ECAC North. Coach Mass remarked, "He is a fine player and deceivingly quick."

A long jumper by Eric Jefferson with 16 seconds showing on the clock tied the game and was the last scoring action of the half as repeated Northeastern and Villanova shots failed to fall through the hoop as the seconds dwindled. In a last bid to put this one away on time McLain inbounded to Pinone who dribbled up court in what was probably his longest dribble ever and called time with :06 remaining. But Granger's shot missed and Nova failed on the rebound but it was too late for Northeastern as they rebounded only in time for the buzzer. The score was tied at 56. The scoreboard read OVERTIME.

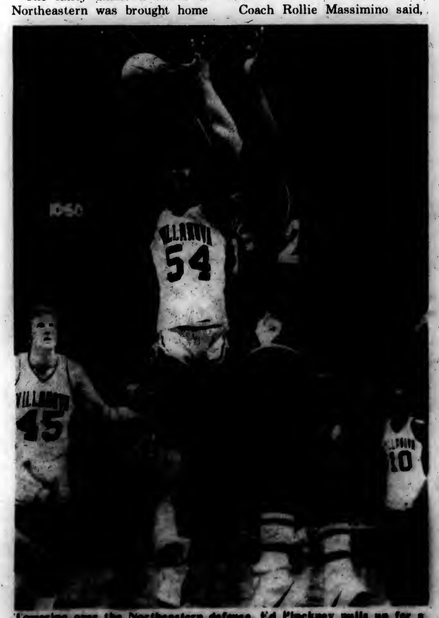
As if one overtime wasn't enough, Nova and Northeastern played it tough and rough through the better part of the first triple overtime in NCAA action since the UCLA 111-100 victory over Dayton in 1975.

Granger, who stood after the game in a state of exhaustion groaned, "I feel right now like I've had a heart attack. I'm tired of playing overtime games." Perhaps he was remembering the Villanova/Syracuse fight for the 1981 Big East Tournament Title when Villanova fell to the Orangemen in triple overtime. However, this wasn't to happen Sunday.

Finally, the Cats took control, scoring seven in a row sparked by a Pinckney lay up and sinking some important last minute foul throws on the one and one. The show was over when Granger got a steal from McClain and went the length of the court, scoring on a running dunk and establishing the Villanova win, the Cats made plans for Raleigh with a 76-72 victory.

Northeastern coach Jim Calhoun, one of the unsung heroes of college basketball said, "Villanova is a great, great basketball team. I couldn't ask more of my kids effort-wise."

In other Big East action Boston College scored an upset over DePaul, being the third team in a row to knock them from the first round. Georgetown also took a win in their Midwest Regional match-up with Wyoming.



Towering over the Northeastern defense, Ed Pinckney pulls up for a shot in Sunday's close call first round NCAA action. Charlie Guida Photo

Carolina Conquers Cats

By LARRY GOANOS

The Villanova Wildcats' dream of a national championship was put to rest last Sunday afternoon in Raleigh, N.C., as the University of North Carolina Tar Heels inflicted a 70-60 defeat upon the determined Villanova squad. It took the number-one team in the nation and a 12,400 rabid, Carolina blue-clad fans to finally extinguish the vision which Wildcats had so stubbornly embraced.

The Tar Heels got double figure scoring from all five starters in the team's 30th victory of the season. Freshman guard Michael Jordan led the way with 15 points, while junior forward James Worthy kicked in 14 points and five rebounds. Villanova's top point producer was 6'10" freshman Ed Pinckney, who poured in 18 points and hauled down 10 rebounds, both game highs. The only other Nova player in double figures was center John Pinone, who netted 14 points and grabbed six caroms. Aaron Howard finished up his Villanova career with a six-point effort, which left the Wildcats' defensive specialist just 16 points shy of becoming Villanova's 24th player to reach the 1,000 point plateau.

The first half started with the Cats and Heels battling almost even all of the way up to the 13:00 mark when Pinckney converted a rebound to pull the Cats within one at 10-9. At that point Carolina got its offense in gear and ripped off ten points to Nova's one over the next five-and-half minutes. With 7:38 left in the half, the Wildcats were down 20-10, but they refused to roll over and die, fighting back to within six as the half ended in Carolina's favor at 28-22.

The Cats used the strong inside play of Pinckney and Pinone during the early minutes of the second half to slice the Tar Heel lead to five at 43-38 with 8:41 to go. The next Carolina score was, according to Tar Heel Coach Dean Smith, the key play of the game for his squad. Jimmy Black fired a backdoor pass to sophomore Matt Doherty, which Doherty layed in as he was being fouled by Dwayne McClain. The ensuing free throw was sunk by Doherty to put Carolina up by eight 46-38 with 8:25 on the clock.

Down the stretch it was Pinckney and Pinone providing most of the offensive punch for Villanova but the duo proved to be no match for the many facetted attack of Smith's Tar Heels. Sophomore center Sam Perkins combined with Worthy inside, while Jordan and senior guard Jimmy Black ran things from up top to keep the Heels comfortably in front of the Cats.

With 1:46 left on the clock Pinone collected his fifth foul while attempting to corral an offensive rebound. As he disappointedly walked towards the Nova bench, many of the Carolina fans in the sell-out crowd rose to their feet as they roared in approval of the junior's performance. Senior Howard followed Pinone to the bench with his fifth foul at the 1:06 mark, bringing a special round of applause from the roughly two hundred Villanova fans who had enjoyed watching Howard give his all for the Wildcats over the last four years. "Aaron had a great year, a great four years," Coach Massimino would say later.

As time ran out on the Cats, the partisan crowd exploded into a frenzy at the realization that their

Senate Approves '82-'83 Budget

By LEONARD J. LaBARTH

The University Senate voted to reject the Senate Budget Committee's recommendation not to accept the proposed 1982-83 budget by a 16-15 vote, thereby approving the budget approval at its March 19 meeting.

The vote for the approval of the budget was 16-12-3. Two student senators, Tee Hoyne and Diane Sansone, were not present at the Senate meeting.

In an unexpected appearance, Father President John Driscoll addressed the Senate for 20 minutes, first reiterating the importance of capital projects originally outlined in November, then chastising the Senate Budget Committee for its rejection of the budget.

At its Feb. 16 meeting, the Senate Budget Committee voted against recommending the budget, prepared by the Administrative Budget Committee, to the Senate by a 5-4-1 vote.

The budget calls for an average 13.6 tuition increase as well as a 12.5 increase in faculty salaries.

"I'm surprised," said Driscoll. "The budget was very carefully prepared by the committee. As a whole, the budget was thought out and it is the best effort.

"It was inconsistent of the committee to agree that the priorities were met by the budget, yet reject it," said Driscoll.

The motion from the Senate Budget Committee not to recommend to the Senate the approval of the budget was brought to motion by Sen. Paul Tufano and seconded by Sen. Robert Nally.

Sen. Alvin Clay, chairman of the Senate Budget Committee, who voted in favor of the budget, deferred the presentation of the committee's recommendation to Tufano.

Tufano, in a prepared outline, presented several reasons why the committee believed the budget should not be approved, highlighting the cuts in state and federal aid for education and questioning the increases allotted to certain non-academic areas.

According to Tufano, "The students at Villanova are representative of students across the nation — angry, frustrated and scared.

"The students are not questioning the validity of many of the increases," read Tufano, "but are asking that the increases be pared down to a more moderate level in order to achieve a more reasonable tuition increase."

Sen. Justin Green then offered a rebuttal to what he called Tufano's "plea." Green emphasized that he was not persuaded that Villanova is asking more than

Student Dies in Accident

By KIM RUSHTON and JERRY ARTH

A 19-year-old Villanova student was killed and four other students were injured in a one-car crash early Monday morning on the Christiana River Bridge outside of Wilmington, Del., as they were returning from the NCAA play-off tournament in Raleigh, N.C.

According to Delaware State Police, Maria T. O'Reilly, a freshman, was killed when she was ejected from the front passenger seat of the car and thrown onto the bridge after the car flipped on its roof.

Police said the accident occurred at 12:10 a.m. when the 1981 Oldsmobile, driven by David Glickman, 21, of Rydal, Pa., went out of control after the driver apparently fell asleep while operating the car on Interstate Rt. 495.

The police report stated that the car veered to the left and struck the center retaining wall of the bridge, which separates the north from south-bound lanes. The car continued along the wall for 76 feet before it flipped over on its roof. According to police, O'Reilly was thrown from the car at this point.

The automobile then proceeded to skid on its roof for another 143 feet, crossing all three northbound lanes, before coming to a stop.

O'Reilly was rushed to the Delaware Division of the Wilmington Medical Center at 12:27 a.m., police said. A hospital spokesman, who said O'Reilly suffered "massive head injuries," reported that she was pronounced dead at 1:33 a.m.

Maria T. O'Reilly, victim of auto accident

The cause of death was later verified by Dr. Ali Z. Hameli, chief medical examiner for the state of Delaware.

Glickman was taken to the hospital and treated for minor injuries, the hospital spokesman said. He was later released.

Also treated for minor injuries and later released were backseat passengers Kenneth Bloski, 21, of Huntingdon Valley, Pa.; Michael Loftus, 21, of Narberth, Pa.; and Kathleen Falon, 18, of Wilmington, Del.

Police said that there was no indication that the accident was caused by excessive speed, alcohol or drugs. In addition, police termed road conditions that morning as "fair, windy and dry."

A funeral mass was held for O'Reilly on Wednesday at Our Lady of the Assumption Church in Strafford, Pa.

Rosemont Party Raided By LCB

By [illegible] PAGE

Four Villanova students and two Rosemont students were arrested and charged with dispensing liquor without a license, after two Liquor Control Board (LCB) agents and six police officers raided a party at Rosemont College on March 18.

Four other students were cited for underage drinking, for which there is a $25-$300 fine. The party was held in the "T," a building at Rosemont, and was sponsored by the Rosemont Junior Class.

According to Charlotte Jacobsen, Rosemont dean of students, "The main issue at hand is: If there is a cover charge, does this constitute the sale of alcohol? The college policy is that it does not. We were not charging for alcohol."

Ed Tortman, system supervisor of enforcement for the LCB, disagreed. "Anytime you charge admission or take donations at the door at an event where there is alcohol, that is selling liquor — and you must have a liquor license."

Notices Posted

Jacobsen said that there were "large" signs posted inside the door, where the $2 admission fee was being collected. The signs said that the admission was being used to pay for entertainment, security, clean-up, etc. It also said that the admission price was not for alcohol.

"The sign doesn't make a difference," said Lt. Joe Daly of the Lower Merion Police Department. "As long as beer is served and money is collected at the door, it doesn't matter what the signs say," said.

The Cause

Jacobsen felt that the raid was precipitated by reports of vandalism on Curwen Road (which connects Rosemont and Villanova).

"The residents of Curwen Road brought our attention to problems," said Daly. "Once our attention is brought to something, we have to do something about it."

Rosemont Notified

"Earlier that week, I had been notified by the police of the problems on Curwen Road," said Jacobsen. "We made additional efforts to try to calm things down." However, the party was held on Thursday night.

Preplanned Raid

Daly said there had been no complaint the night of the party. "We were just following through the previous complaints. It was common knowledge that there was going to be a party that night."

According to Daly, "The raid was planned a few hours in advance. One LCB officer entered the party at 9:30. If there was no violation, he would come out. Otherwise, we were going in."

When the agent did not come out, six police officers and one more LCB agent entered the party at approximately 10 p.m. The students collecting money at the door and dispensing beer were arrested. Other students were randomly asked for proof of age and four were cited for underage drinking. Five kegs were confiscated.

Jacobsen, two faculty moderators, two security guards, and others were present at the party, representing Rosemont.

Hearing

A preliminary hearing was scheduled for March 25 for the six students charged with distributing alcohol without a license. At this time the Rosemont College attorney is planning to represent the students. Jacobsen said she hoped that the charges would be dropped.

"We're hopeful that this can be resolved without hardship coming to those students involved," Jacobsen added.

Cat's Eye

Almost the exact incident happened at Villanova four years ago when four Villanova students were charged with dispensing liquor without a license, after three LCB agents raided a "Cat's Eye." A month later, the charges were dismissed on a technicality. The LCB could have refiled the charges, but chose not to.

Under the Villanova's present alcohol policy, tickets may not be sold at the door of any event which has alcohol.

Jacobsen said she was aware of Villanova's present policy, but she reiterated, "We were acting under the assumption that we were within the law."

other colleges.

"Villanova is not a bad value for the money," said Green. Concerning the proposed Reagan administration cuts, Green said that, "should the cuts go through, which I doubt, then the Senate should offer a resolution to ease the financial impact on students with monies from the budget or endowments."

Speaking on behalf of the faculty, Green also said that should the budget be rejected, faculty salaries would be the first area cuts would be made in if the administration should do so.

The 12.5 increase in faculty salaries allows for an actual 9 percent just for faculty and 3.5 percent for fringe benefits.

Vice-President for Financial Affairs Gary Fenner stressed that Villanova is way behind in benefits to faculty. "The pension is high but everything else is way behind.

"We took a survey and nationwide we are way behind. We must catch up. In benefits, we're at the bottom," he said.

Nally addressed the Senate next, outlining why he planned to vote against the approval of the budget. Nally, as a member of the Senate Budget Committee, originally voted in favor of the proposed budget but changed his mind, he said, "due to considerable reflection.

"I just don't feel well about it," said Nally. "It is a matter of qualitativeness. Yes, the priorities are met but there are areas that need discussion. It seems we are approving matters built-in for one more year."

As an example, Nally brought up the matter of the Connelly Center's losses. Tufano's study revealed that there will be a 57 percent increase in the allowance for net loss next year, from $70,00 to $122,000.

"We're not talking cost increases but losses," explained Nally. "We need to talk it out. The Connelly Center is supposed to be self-sustaining.

"It means that a proportion of tuition is used to subsidize the facility, but the student can't afford to eat there."

Sen. Joseph George responded to the criticism of the Connelly Center by asking if Villanova wanted to return to the days before there was the facility.

"Even if we are losing money, the Connelly Center is still quite a bargain. No one wants to go back to the days before there was the facility. If we can get substantial reductions without affecting quality — we should, by all means. But now, we have no alternative but to accept the budget."

Before the vote, Tufano reported that the committee agreed with the faculty increase and with the proposed capital projects. What Tufano suggested is that if a 10 percent increase was given straight across the board, with the exception of the faculty's 12.5 percent, it would result in a savings of $1,400,000.

"What we're saying is that the tuition increases are just a bit too high," said Tufano. "We're having a hard time. Can we cut down on non-academic areas?

"Driscoll's appearance was questionable," added Tufano. "The fact that he came to give us a pep talk wasn't right in this situation. The Senate wasn't voting on anything he presented."

Following the vote approving the budget proposal, Green and Tufano debated about the wording of a resolution to be presented to the Board of Trustees and the Administrative Budget Committee. Tufano first refused to add the resolution to the Senate report in light of the acceptance of the budget.

Green recommended that despite the approval of the Senate, with the exception of the area of faculty salaries, the Board of Trustees should reexamine the budget in order to find areas in which more austerity can be applied with the possible savings going to students.

The amended resolution passed 28-1-2.

New Registration Adopted

By DAVID POMA

Villanova University has adopted a new system of pre-registration, according to David J. Smith, the university registrar. The new procedure will take affect when registration for next semester takes place.

"No one was happy with the old system. I hope this one works," said Smith. Cathy Connor, of the registrar's office, also hoped that the new system would be successful. Connor described the procedure. "As a result of the changes we've made, there will be no course adjustment. Students will arrange their schedules beforehand with an advisor. Then, they'll get a time appointment to go to register for the open sections."

John P. O'Malley, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, believes that the plan is an improvement over the previous method of registration. "If it works, it will be a real step forward. Students will be guaranteed complete schedules at the time of registration."

According to Smith and Connor, having students obtain complete schedules is a major goal of the new procedure. If the plan is successful, it will be impossible for a student to be closed out of a course any time after registration. Later, according to Smith, students will receive schedules with the proper times, sections, and instructors, as in previous semesters.

Smith said, "The new process does away with the old way where a student had to make three trips to a scheduling area just to make a complete schedule. This kind of system became more inconvenient and inefficient for everybody." Smith believes that another important benefit of the new process is that students should run into fewer problems with closed courses when they are in the registration area. He added, "Someone will be in the registration area to advise students who have schedule problems" before the student leaves the area, but he stressed that it is important to keep the initial advising process separate from the actual registration process to avoid confusion.

There were rumors that in the new system the master schedule would not include the names of instructors, but Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, O.S.A., vice president for academic affairs, denied this. "It will be the same master schedule as always," he said, "only the instructions to the student for registration will be different."

The system is still not tested and there may be problems, according to the administration officials involved. Gallen commented, "The students and faculty are going to be unfamiliar with it. People are always skeptical of new things." O'Malley agrees, but he also sees another potential problem. "If you do away with course adjustment, what do you do about a student who unknowingly doesn't pre-register?" he asked.

Connor said that mailings to students concerning the new procedure would probably go out today. Advisement would take place starting on March 25 and appointments for registration would probably begin on March 31.

Senator's Job is Serious Position

"In campaigning for Arts Senator, I have found few people who realize what the office of Senator actually involves . . . I hope to be one of those twelve important voices which speaks on behalf of the student body."

Tee Hoyne
Election Supplement '81

"As a representative of the student body, one must be willing to listen to ideas and then be dedicated and responsible enough to carry these ideas to further stages . . . We must be active in the University's decisions concerning academic policies, student life, budget, and many others."

Diane Sansone
Election Supplement '81

Once again, all of us have lost.

The University Senate disregarded the recommendation of its own Budget Committee to reject the proposed 1982-83 University budget and instead passed it.

When the final tally was taken at the Senate meeting last Friday, the motion to reject the budget lost by one vote; a disappointing loss for students. It is disappointing in that the budget, with its average tuition increases of 13.6 per cent and its inflated increases for certain non-academic areas, now goes on to face almost certain approval by the Board of Trustees.

And what is even more disappointing is the fact that two student senators failed to attend the meeting.

Tee Hoyne, an Arts senator, and Diane Sansone, the sole representative of the College of Engineering, apparently had more important things to do than show up to represent their constituents at the most important Senate vote of the year. Their two votes could have defeated the budget.

This was the Senate's first true opportunity in its history to have an effective impact on the University budget..Defeat of the budget would have sent a message to the Board of Trustees that the voice of Villanova's students, faculty, and administrators found the budget to contain serious shortcomings.

But because of the irresponsibility of these two senators, all the Trustees will now see is the same rubberstamp Senate approval that they have seen year after year.

When Hoyne and Sansone were campaigning, they promised to assume certain responsibilities. They abandoned one of the most important of these on Friday.

Next Thursday, students have the opportunity to elect new senators. In light of last week's fiasco, students should be all the more aware of their responsibility to choose representatives who will fulfill the duties of the office.

Students should closely scrutinize the policy statements of each senatorial and presidential candidate in order to make an educated choice.

The events of the last week have shown the importance of electing dedicated, responsible candidates to the senate. The decision is yours on Thursday; we urge that you do not waste this chance.

Wise decisions next week could protect us from losing again.

Letters to the Editor

Budget

Dear Editor:

The acceptance of the University's 1982-83 budget by the University Senate last Friday meant more than approving a collection of numbers. At stake was the issue of an average tuition increase of 13.6 percent in light ofdrastically reduced aid. The Senate defeated my motion to reject the budget, 15-16-1, and approved the subsequent motion to accept the budget. I believe there are several reasons behind this huge disappointment.

To be perfectly frank, in essence all of our hard work was defeated by two Student Senators who failed to show up without any prior notice at all. Unfortunately this does not speak well for Student Senators on the surface, but I am sure the student body will not impose such a judgement on the other nine Senators who worked diligently with me throughout the past few weeks in organizing our presentation.

As a member of the Senate Budget Committee it was my duty to analyze the Budget in terms of its effects on the University, which I feel includes the students. The majority of the committee felt that there were too many large increases in non-academic areas, and that the large tuition increases in non-academic areas,and that the large tuition increase were unjustified.

This is the rationale the Student Senators and I presented to the individual Faculty and Administration Senators we met prior to the Senate Meeting. We informed the faculty that we wholeheartedly supported their increment of 12.5% and asked them to support us in trying to help offset the effects of federal and state cuts in education, by reducing the increase in tuition, which meant rejecting the budget. However, it turned out that six of the nine faculty senators present voted for the Budget on the basis that they felt that there was no assurance that the Board of Trustees would not cut their increment in order to reduce the tuition increase. In fact, one faculty senator alleged that the students were self-centered in asking for a reduction of the tuition increase, since he felt it might result in a smaller increment for the faculty.

We, the student senators, feel that if anyone was to be considered "self-centered" it was indeed any faculty senator who voted for the Budget on the basis mentioned above.It was these faculty senators that didn't give the Trustees credit enough to look only at the fact that they did not support us in our effort to help the many fellow students who will feel the Reagan cuts quite deeply. I am proud to say that we supported their raise 100 percent from the beginning and through to the end. Perhaps we shouldn't have?

In closing, the students of this University owe a great debt of thanks to the three faculty senators and one alumni senator who did indeed support us, along with the only administration senator, Rev. John O'Malley, dean of Arts and Sciences. We will forever appreciate their efforts to help the students of Villanova continue their education.

Rape

Dear Editors:

I am writing out of aggravation and frustration on behalf of victims of crimes, assaults and rape. The system in society today has all kinds of loopholes for the accused and all kinds of rights for the criminal. But there is little if nothing to compensate or help the suffering victims of crimes.

I have been a victim and the victim suffers, loses and pays. Innocent victims are not protected, helped or compensated. There are no funds to help a victim pay for the hospital bills incurred by a rapist. There is no free psychiatric care to help a victim overcome the trauma left on them from the crime. The victim suffers from the crime itself, the criminal, the police, the courts, the society, insurance companies, lawyers and whoever else is involved.

But what about the victim —the innocent person who suffers from the crime?

Name Withheld Upon Request

Commuters

Dear Editor:

This letter is in response to your recent article "The Plight of the Commuter." While I see the underlying theme of the article, I can't help but comment that it comes across saying, "I'm a commuter, feel sorry for me." Commuting is indeed difficult and often frustrating, but it is used too often as an excuse for not getting involved or just being apathetic.

I believe articles such as this one do nothing but reinforce the "feel sorry for myself" feeling among many commuters. Commuter participation is a major problem at Villanova. Your paper should encourage rather than discourage commuters. Perhaps the positive aspects of commuting and the advantages should be presented instead of always the negative. This would do more to help commuters than to have everyone "feel sorry" for us.

Before concluding this letter I feel I must respond to Joe Smith's comment on the Association of Commuting Student enhancement of commuter involvement. Looking through the membership list, I failed to find his name. I looked under both "S" for Smith and "A" for Apathetic. He is probably just another one of those who speaks without thinking, is quick to criticize and refuses to become involved. Remember, college is what you make of it and it is up to the individual to get involved.

Basketball

Dear Editor:

I was not sure where this should go. I thought maybe to the director of athletics, or maybe to the Coach himself, or maybe in the trash, where it will wind up yet. Then, I remembered that the "Letters to the Editor" section of the newspaper is supposed to be the medium for the free and open exchange of ideas; although this letter might not have much to do with ideas, it is certainly free and open.

I would like to thank the basketball team for making me, after four years of tuition hikes and administrative slip-ups and a seeming lack of concern for anything but money, proud of this school. Your recent performance brought a diverse and divided student body together, if only for a little while. We weren't English or accounting or business or art students; we went to Villanova, and weren't those last two minutes against Northeastern great? They were minutes full of emotion and skill and excitement and energy and youth. Which is what college should be all about.

Many words of praise would find their places here. Many individuals could be singled out here, which might even make them smile. They may even be reading this. But we already know who you are, so there's no need to single you out, and the whole NCAA now knows how good you are, so there's no need to drag it all out again. What I will say is that it takes togetherness and laughter and tears and frustration and victory and defeat to change a group of players into a team and a house into a home. And Villanova feels like home now, thanks to eleven guys in shorts and a bouncing leather ball.

Thank You

Dear Editor:

Excitement, thrills, school spirit — these are only a few things that the Villanova basketball team has brought to basketball fans this year. It will be a long time before we will forget that triple overtime defeat of Northeastern and then only one week later, the single overtime defeat of Memphis State. With this victory, the Wildcats became one of the eight remaining teams in the country left with a shot at the NCAA championship. This accomplishment is an honor in itself; one that Coach Massimino and the entire team should be proud of. Their outstanding play and professional attitude throughout the regular season and the divisional playoffs have represented the Villanova community in only the most outstanding ways. Coach Massimino and the team have attained national recognition. The Wildcats are a team to be reckoned with.

I know that I speak for many when I say thanks — thanks for the great effort, thanks for the excitement and anticipation and thanks for making this year a little more special.

And New Orleans, watch out. Who knows, maybe next year . . .

Anti-nuclear

Dear Editor:

The editorial commentary in the Villanovan of March 19 is correct in describing the so-called "symposium" of March 16 on nuclear power as unbalanced — unbalanced in favor of nuclear power. As one who takes an anti-nuclear view and tried to say so as "moderator" in the "symposium," I hope Villanova may some day organize a true symposium on nucler power in which various views may be freely expressed. Nuclear power poses many problems. The paramount problem of the moment, however, is the acute danger of nuclear war. The Reagan administration has renewed the cold war against Russia, consistently ignores the needs of the poor, exploited famished nations of the third world (and poor, exploited, famished people in the United States), devoted the lion's share of the budget to increased armaments, and is now intervening by sabotage and military action in support of corrupt, oppressive military regimes in Central America.

This intervention is unjust, since it supports oppression; it is hypocritical, since while supporting oppressive military regimes in Latin America (and South Africa), the Reagan adminsstration is denouncing oppressive military regimes in Asia and eastern Europe; it is alienating, since it alienates the nations of the world from the United States, and alienates citizens of this country who oppose such intervention from those who support it; and it is highly dangerous, since, as we ought to have learned from our experience in the Indochina ("Vietnam") war, escalation only leads to counter-escalation.

It is easy to foresee the probable course of escalation and counter-escalation in the case of Central America. The Reagan administration escalates. The liberating rebels escalate, and are increasingly driven to turn to Cuba for help. Cuba escalates, supported by Russia. Now the third world war has begun. It escalates. "The tendency will certainly be for the losing power to use everything it has, including nuclear weapons, and for the winning power to try to checkmate its enemy by delivering the coup de grace first" (Sidney Lens). This nuclear exchange will be the ultimate nuclear holocaust, in which millions will be burnt alive, millions will suffer death through blast and falling buildings, millions will suffer manifold radiation diseases, and the survivors, if any, will find themselves in an utterly devastated world without hospitals, without medical services, without communications, without food and shelter, left to die a lingering death in a hopeless world. It will be Dante's inferno plus.

How can we avert this probable course of events? Only by a massive, rapidly growing peace movement which the Reaganites will not dare to resist, a peace movement which demands an end to United States intervention in Central America, which demands a mutual moratorium (freeze) on the production of nuclear arms, followed by reduction of arms, leading (insofar as that is technically possible) to the abolition of nuclear arms.

Let us not forget the words of President Kennedy: "Mankind must put an end to the arms race or the arms race will put an end to man." Tht end is now very close unless the peace movement can induce the Reagan administration to end its unjust intervention in Central America and abandon its reckless plunge into the nuclear abyss.

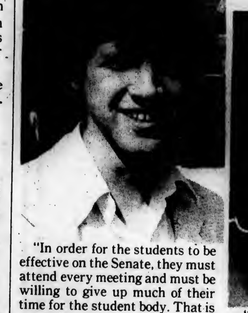
Last Friday, the motion to defeat the 1982 budget lost by a vote of 15-16. Two student senators did not show up to vote. The question this week: "How do you feel about the absences of these two students?"

"I think that if we vote people into the Senate, we should look into the candidates running and make sure they are responsible enough to hold the office. Obviously these two senators were not responsible. They are not representing the students at all."

Marijo McNamara
Freshman,
Electrical Engineering

"I feel that it shows a lack of responsibility and participation on the part of the senators. If a student expects to get elected, he must be prepared to be fully involved in the governmental structure of the University.This is going to be very detrimental to many students, considering the cuts in financial aid."

Ed Joel
Junior, Political Science



"In order for the students to be effective on the Senate, they must attend every meeting and must be willing to give up much of their time for the student body. That is a requirement that people fail to realize."

Vic Falvo
Junior, C&F senator

"I feel it showed a lack of responsibility on the part of the senators. With the elections approaching, maybe this will make everyone think twice about who is capable of filling this position."

Beverly Reilly
Junior, Education

"The Senate meetings for the entire academic year are determined in September and there is no excuse for missing them, especially when it means so much to the students. However, under the current governmental structure at Villanova, this defeat of the motion will prove academic since the Board of Trustees have the ultimate decision as to whether the budget is passed or not."

Wayne Remai
Senior, Communications

"Since they were elected by the student body, then they should fulfill their responsibilities to the fullest. I think it was pretty low of them not to vote in a decision that affects everyone."

AT&T Conference Held

By PATTY LINBLAD

On Monday, March 22, the National Student Consumer Protection Council and the Marketing Society of Villanova University collaborated in hosting a Consumer/Marketing Telecommunications Conference in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center. The main topic was "Life after AT&T?," and the majority of the discussion was centered around the recent consent decree reached after a lengthy seven year anti-trust suit against AT&T by the Justice Department.

The opening statements were made by Suzanne Shanaman of the Public Utility Commission of Pennsylvania (PUC). She stated the views held by the PUC emphasized a breaking up of the AT&T monopoly, while upholding similar standards of quality and efficiency. The PUC feels that by breaking up this monopoly, the resulting smaller companies would induce competition and in doing so would promote technological advancement more than the monopoly did, she said.

Bell Telephone was represented by Charles Zoi, who defended a proposed $420 million rate increase on the basis that it is an unavoidable side-effect of inflation and increased competition. Zoi, division staff manager for rate and cost coordination and planning, stated that the large profits now realized by the long-distance sector of the company are vital to cover deficits incurred by local services, and that by breaking up the subsidiary branches, a necessary shift of the burden would occur. Rates of local services (service charges) would undoubtably increase, he said.

Michael Hunter, the director of public affairs for ITT, stated that the divestiture of local services isn't as detrimental to AT&T as they make it sound. He pointed out the fact that had AT&T not accepted the proposal to divest its local services, the court was coming "dangerously" close to make them divest their much more profitable Western Electric subsidiary, and this would obviously hurt the firm much more. So in effect, by accepting the divesting of local services, they didn't make out as poorly as they make it sound, Hunter said.

When State Consumer Advocate Walter Cohen was asked what he thought of "Life after AT&T," he replied, "Asking if there is life after AT&T is like asking if there's basketball after North Carolina."

The services of the telephone company continue in much the same way that we are used to. The only real differences will be in how the costs are allocated, he stated.

As a final viewpoint in the discussion, consumer advocate Max Weiner, executive director of CEPA (Consumer Education Protection Council), pointed out that his organization doesn't want to hold down rate increases, but reverse the trend and roll them back.

Representing the welfare and Social Security recipients of the economy, CEPA believes that breaks in rates should be allowed for phone bills as they are in water rates.

"Consumers have no countervailing power - that is, the large monopoly sells to the whole consumer market that doesn't have the equal strength to fight it," said Weiner. The monopoly is simply walking over the consumer, doing as it pleases."

Financial Aid Talk Sponsored

By BETH BONINA

Director of Financial Aid Vincent Femia met with students in the Radnor Room of the Connelly Center on Mar. 18 to discuss with them the impact of the proposed federal financial aid cuts.

The discussion, entitled "A Small Talk on Financial Aid," was sponsored by Dr. Richard Neville, vice president for student life, in conjunction with the Financial Aid Office.

"As of right now, there is no money appropriated for next year," stated Femia. He continued, "We applied last August for the funds for the 1982-83 academic year. In January we were supposed to get the tentative figures . . . they have not arrived yet."

"We are unable to determine what our allocations are going to be," said Arthur Switzer, assistant director of financial aid. "We will do what we can for the students, but when we run out of money, we run out of money. That will be it."

According to a University study, an estimated 1,313 students will lose over $1 million in financial aid for the academic years 1982-83 and 1983-84.

Before the financial aid cuts were effected, a need analysis, which determines those students who are more qualified to receive aid, was done only on students whose family incomes totalled over $30,000 annually. However, President Reagan now wants everyone applying for aid to go through a need analysis, according to Femia.

"The Federal Office of Education audits our office each year," said Femia. "If we go against the federal laws and give aid to those who, according to the need analysis are not eligible, the University gets billed for it. We do not run our office — the federal and state governments run it."

"We are urging each and every student to write to his representatives in Washington," said Switzer.

Germany's Greatest Poet

March 22, 1982 marked the 150th anniversary of Goethe's death. The following feature article is a repeat from the October 27, 1976 issue of The Villanovan.

(PART II)

By DR. JOHN J. MULLIGAN
Department of Modern Languages

During the decade 1775-1786 Goethe developed a lasting friendship with the Duke and became an imperial councillor and his prime minister. Early in his life at Weimar he met and fell in love with Frau Charlotte von Stein, a woman seven years older than he. It was she who influenced him the most of all the women whom he loved. She taught him his great life's lessons of self-control and resignation. Literary publications were not so frequent in this period since court life and responsibilities placed continuing demands upon him and his time. However, love lyrics, ballads and studies in the natural sciences (botany, optics, meteorology and osteology) continued. Goethe discovered the intermaxillary bone in the human being in 1784. He was raised to the nobility by Joseph II and became Johann Wolfgang von Goethe.

Goethe at the age of 51

In September 1786 an overburdened and exhausted Goethe, now in his late thirties, secretly left Weimar to begin his famous Italian journey — Venice, Rome, Naples, Sicily — in order to revitalize his spiritual and mental powers and to expose himself to the world of antiquity. He returned to Weimar, almost two years later, in June 1788. He was completely released from his youthful "Storm and Stress" ideals, refreshed in the sheer joy of existence, active in artistic and natural scientific studies and on the threshold of his classical period. Egmont, the tragedy of an over-optimistic titan of the Dutch people and a drama of transition from his "Sturm und Drang" to Classicism, appeared in 1787. It was followed, in the same year, by the first of his two great dramas of the classical mold, Iphigenie auf Tauris — Iphigenie, modelled on Frau von Stein, represented true womanhood, the incorporation of moral strength and woman's purifying and ennobling influence on despairing man, in a man's world. Torquato Tasso was published in 1789, a psychological drama based upon the life of the great Italian author who had died in 1595. It treated the problems of the artist's adjustment to the world and society.

It was at this time that Goethe met Christiane Vulpius, a pretty and unlettered, but an intelligent and affectionate girl who was to become his life's companion. Both she and Rome were responsible for his Römische Elegien (Roman Elegies). In 1791 he became the director of the Court Theater in Weimar. He participated as a passive observer in several military campaigns.

In the summer of 1794 there occurred one of the significant events of his life — Goethe formed a lasting and mutually beneficial friendship with Johann Christoph Friedrich Schiller. The years 1794 to 1805, the year of Schiller's death, were the highpoint of German Classicism. The breadth and depth of Goethe's genius motivated and was stimulated by Schiller's own gifted nature. Some of Goethe's greatest ballads were published in 1797, as was the epic-idyll poem, Hermann und Dorothea. This picture of simple domestic life in a small German town during the French Revolution possessed a patriotic spirit which appealed to the public. It gained a wide popularity.

Schiller's death affected Goethe deeply. His "Epilog zu Schiller's 'Glocke' " ("Epilogue to Schiller's 'The Bell' ") in August 1805 is the greatest tribute of one great poet to another. It is said that Schiller's name was on Goethe's lips even a few hours before his own death in 1832.

For years Goethe had been one of the great luminaries of Europe — countless visitors from all ranks of European life came to Weimar to pay their respects to the personality, to the intellect, the lyric poet, the dramatist, the novelist, the short story writer, the autobiographical writer, the natural scientist, the political figure (who believed that in man, as in nature, evolution was to supplant revolution), the composer of philosophical and aesthetic writings, the theater director. In 1808 one man did summon Goethe to him — Napoleon requested his presence at the "Fürstentag" ("Princes' Meeting") in Erfurt. The meeting between the two men was brief. Napoleon, the master of Europe, was impressed by Goethe.

The years 1805-1832 saw a Goethe who was not particularly interested in the great national movements of the times. His Wilhelm Meisters Lehrjahre (Wilhelm Meister's Apprenticeship) appeared in 1795, Wilhelm Meisters Wanderjahre (Wilhelm Meister's Travels) in 1829, Die Wahlverwandtschaften (Kindred by Choice) in 1809 — all novels. Two of his significant scientific works were published in these later years: Die Farbenlehre (Theory of Colors) in 1810 and his main effort in botany, Metamorphose der Pflanzen, in 1831. Several collections of poetry, with love, the East, and "God and World" as the bases, appeared. Characteristic of virtually all his poetry is the quality of easy flow, musical sound and vibrant life. His autobiographical works, attempting to cover a lifetime of over eighty years, continued.

However, even to such a man the end had to come. Goethe's last words, reportedly, were "Licht, mehr Licht!" ("Light, more Light!"). He uttered them on the 22nd of March, 1832.

Of all his works — lack of space prevents mentioning many of them — Goethe's Faust predominates. The First Part, began in his early twenties, was published in 1808, the Second in 1832. Faust is probably the greatest philosophical drama of modern Europe. The work was suggested by the legend of Dr. Faustus, who, as he was represented in the comedies of the sixteenth century, was to the youthful poet the embodiment of the Spirit of the Time, who strove to free himself from every restriction; to the aged poet, however, Faust was the symbol of striving humanity. Goethe's life is so interwoven with the drama that it may be considered a commentary on the work. The First Part manifests Goethe's vast knowledge of human thought and affairs and the final success of an erring seeker after truth. The Second Part represents Faust's experiences in the "Greater World" which encompasses all the influences and activities of man and offers an opportunity to atone for sin by useful service. Never has there been erected a more beautiful monument to man's hopes and aspirations.

Political Union

By MATTHEW J. KORTEN

On Thursday, March 18, William L. Rogers, vice president of environmental affairs for the Gulf Corporation, addressed the Villanova Political Union on the topic of laws which regulate the activities of companies (especially the oil companies) in relation to the exploration, extraction and refinement of raw materials. Rogers spoke in favor of the Union's resolution: "This House opposes environmental laws which improperly hinder the development of natural fuels."

Rogers indicated that one major area of improper regulation was in portions of the Clean Air Act, now before Congress for renewal. Rogers stated that Gulf was not opposed to the concept of cleaner air in the least, though he did indicate that abuses did occur within the oil and other industries prior to the act.

However, it was stated that Gulf does oppose excessive and capricious regulation which impedes competition on the national and international market, and limits the industry's ability to meet the energy needs of the country.

For example, Rogers stated that the process of applying to the government for permission to build a plant which will emit noxious substances into the air, known as "permitting," is slow and cumbersome. Furthermore, once the permitting process is complete, regulations which have been imposed are sometimes rescinded after investments in compliance to those regulations have already commenced. An additional improper restriction mentioned by Rogers is that date deadlines often do not allow enough time to fully comply with regulations.

According to Rogers, Gulf's official policy is that of "balance." It is in Gulf's best interests, and that of the entire country to meet domestic energy needs while concommitantly working for the enhancement and maintenance of a sound environment.

To accomplish this balance Rogers advocated communication and compromise between the major factions in this heated issue (environmental groups, industry, and government).

After a period of debate, the Union voted on the resolution, which passed by a narrow margin.

Prevent Binge Eating

By CHARLES MOLINEAUX

You're all alone in the house. Your friends have deserted you for the night. There's nothing on T.V., you have a lot of homework to do and your stereo is broken. What do you do? EAT! Before you know it, you have annihilated three bowls of fudge ripple ice cream, a big bag of Doritos, umpteen Cokes, about six Twinkies, half a box of Oreos and a pizza. You now have a stomach ache and a guilty conscience for going on another eating binge.

Munching out, pigging out, scarfing down the chow, a.k.a. binge eating is a persistent physical and psychological problem for millions of Americans, according to Marylee Goldberg, co-director of Healtmodes, a health and weight counseling center in Philadelphia. At monthly binge-prevention workshops, Goldberg and Co-Director Lee Rutenberg discuss the phenomenon of binge eating with groups of men and women seeking to overcome their binging impulses. The last workshop was Wednesday, March 10. The next will be on April 23.

The four-hour seminars acquaint participants with "El Fatso" and "El Fatso's" messages. "El Fatso" is that inner voice, a part of the mind, that compels you: "Eat! There are starving children in Lumbania; If you don't eat, all that food will go to waste; its your favorite;" or worst of all "You're fat! You'll always be fat. Give up and eat."

According to Rutenberg, "El Fatso" and the basis of our binging impulses are conditioned into us. Since childhood we have been told to clear our plates and eat whatever food we are given. Advertisements constantly exhort us to consume foods which are usually not even nutritious. Binge patterns, however, can be started by a wide variety of personal problems, says Goldberg. "Binging is complicated stuff. It has a lot of emotions, physical responses and psychological aspects attached."

The most common psychological reason for binging seems to be a conscious or unconscious rejection of dietary limits. The best known instance of this is the dieter who goes on a massive eating binge after a strict diet, rejecting the limits the diet imposed. This can set off a habit of binging which results in more weight being gained than was lost on the diet in the first place. A binge can also be a rejection of instructions from parents or friends to eat less. Someone who is expected to stay thin might go on secret binges simply as a rejection of those expectations.

Stress can also trigger binge eating. The binge eater uses the activity and sensations of eating in a frequently subconscious effort to block out feelings of depression, concern over school work, romantic problems or even boredeom.

Once someone starts eating, says Rutenberg, a new physical inducement towards a binge comes into the picture; food allergies. (Continued on page 8)

This week's sunny weather prompted these two girls to hit "Sheehan Beach." Villanova students, as well as area residents, need only look for bodies, radios, blankets, and suntan-oil bottles on the lawn in front of Sheehan to know when spring arrives. By this picture, spring seems to have finally made its debut.

Binge Eating

Goldberg notes that many of today's snack foods are highly allergenic and eating them can cause allergic reactions, one of which is a very strong craving for more.

Among these foods are milk and dairy products, wheat, corn (as in Doritos and Fritos), peanuts, chocolate, beef, eggs, sugar and frying fat.It takes little imagination to connect these to virtually every fast food or junk food in existence. "And, of course," Goldberg points out to the group "What's the most easy thing to find when you're hungry? The candy machine!"

The seminar has its participants recall the experience of binging and how it felt. Did you get an intense desire to eat the whole container of ice cream or plate of french fries? In many binging cases, such urges appear and the binge eater frequently feels them after starting to eat.

"What is important is finding foods that match your body" to prevent an allergic reaction that will trigger a binge, says Rutenberg.

The seminar presents participants with a few tips on how to prevent an eating binge:

Become aware of the foods you eat and what effects they will have on your body. Try to avoid those foods you "just can't eat one (dozen) of." You are probably allergic to these.

Don't go on starvation diets or radical fasts that make you so hungry you'd eat the paper off the wall. That's just asking for a backlash and a binge.

Become acquainted with that part of you that tells you to eat. Be ready when it does. Eat only when you're hungry.

Stop eating when you're not hungry any more, not when the plate is clean.

Eat what you want to eat. If you don't, you will still want it and you might binge on it later.

Let's Give Them a C-H-E-E-R!

They are ever-present figures on the sidelines of the basketball court at each and every game. In their blue and white uniforms and Nikes, the women seem to endlessly dance, jump, and twirl through the air as the men shout through their megaphones. They are the first to applaud every point, and also the first to offer encouragement to the dejected players after a defeat. Who are these spirited and enthusiastic students? None other than the 20 Villanova cheerleaders who have become a valuable asset to the university which they represent.

The cheerleaders have just about the longest season of any athletic squad on campus. This year's season began in early August when the group traveled to Knoxville, Tenn. to participate in the National Cheerleader's Association (NCA) week-long camp. Pyramids, stunts, gymnastics, chants, and cheers were demonstrated to squads from major universities all over the country.

"Camp is a very valuable asset because it is such an intense week of training," commented this year's co-captain John Genell. "We really gained a lot from that week in August."

Weekly practices began in early September in order to prepare for the late November opening game. In addition to Tuesday and Thursday nights spent in Alumni gym, the group was also given the athlete's privilege of twice-weekly workouts at the ATRA center.

"The physical conditioning we do is really necessary in order for us to safely perform the partner stunts and pyramids that we do," commented Genell. "It takes a lot of skill and timing, as well as concentration, to make it work. Injuries on the squad have been kept to a minimum this year, and one possible reason for this is the training and practice that the squad members have had."

Not only does the group perform at all Field House and Palestra games, but at all away games as well. The squad spent much of Christmas break cheering at both the Holiday Festival in New York, and several other games as well. Spring break was spent in Hartford, Conn. cheering the Cats on to a strong second-place finish behind the tough Georgetown team. Other away trips included Notre Dame, Syracuse, Providence, Maryland, Connecticut, and several day trips to away games. Most recently, the troup was in Raleigh, North Carolina in support of the team's final-eight finish in the NCAA Tournament.

This year's captains Patty Reilly and Genell have helped push the squad to a very high level of performance. In addition to them, there are nine men and nine women on the team, bringing the total to 20. "It's been a big group to work with," stated Genell, "but we've had a great time together and have gotten over the rough spots."

Election Supplement '82

Candidates: Issues and Ideas

the Villanovan

Editor's Note: The word "candidate" comes from the same Latin root word that forms words like "candor" and "incandescence." The SGA and The Villanovan have compiled this supplement in order to give the presidential and senatorial hopefuls for this year's student body elections a chance to frankly, sincerely express their views, at the same time emitting a degree of brilliance and intensity as only candidates can do.

Chris Young

It is quite apparent that the students of the University have had their fill of idle promises and an ineffective Student Government Association. I will refrain from boring you with these idle promises, but, will rather attack the major issues I sincerely believe in.

1. The function of the S.G.A. is not to act as a token organization in which the University can satisfy its conscience pertaining to equitable student representation. But, rather a functioning instrument in which we, the students can actively participate in determining goals and objectives via an outright request to put a student representative on the Board of Trustees.

2. The grasp of the S.G.A. is not only limited to the 200 acres of Villanova University but, also, its surrounding community. In that, actions by either part will directly affect the other. Why has there not been any student lobby groups to meet Radnor township policies that restrict the growth of the University? I believe in not only a strong S.G.A. on campus but, also a strong policy to voice our opinion to the commissioners of this "beloved" township.

3. Finally, I strongly feel that the members of the S.G.A. have failed to meet their objectives in that, they have lost touch with whom they represent and are caught up in their own self interest. A solution that needs to be enacted is to maintain an excellent channel of communication with those that we represent!

In conclusion I feel that promises don't win elections but, rather strong convictions win elections. I would be eager to meet with anyone to discuss in depth my platform and not only problems but also possible solutions. Thank you and remember to vote on April 1 for Chris Young. Thank You. *

Paul Tufano

This year's Student Government elections will mark the beginning of a whole new slate of student representatives — maybe. My name is Paul Tufano and I am currently serving on the University Senate as C & F Senator. I seek the office of Student Body President because I am deeply concerned about the future of the role of students in the University's decision-making process.

Of all the candidates for President, as well as Senator, I am the only candidate who is a current elected representative of the students. The possibility of next year's Student Government comprised of 11 new Senators, led by a new-comer President, worries me. It would be different if perhaps these candidates for President had been actively involved this year, yet this is not the case, and in fact the majority have never been seen in the Student Government office until a week or so ago. Even more disappointing was the fact that only one of these candidates attended last Friday's important Senate meeting.

When I was elected C & F Senator last Spring, I made a commitment to the students that I would represent them as best as I possibly could. This year I have tried to fulfill this commitment whenever possible. As a member of the Senate Budget Committee I spent most of the year analyzing the University budget in terms of its effects on us all. The committee rejected the budget on the basis that the tuition increases were too high and that many expenditures were unjustified in amount. In presenting this report to the full University Senate last Friday, I was successful in making them aware of the plight of college students — facing skyrocketing costs and drastically reduced financial aid. To that end, the Senate approved overwhelmingly my proposal which called on the Board of Trustees to examine the possibilities of redirecting funds into student aid and/or reducing the tuition increase.

I have worked with the administration on several matters successfully, and was responsible for initiating and coordinating the repairs of outdoor athletic facilities. My position has also enabled me to become involved with and vote on key issues such as the construction of an intramural facility, the MBA program, and the continuance of keeping course/teacher evaluation results available to students. All of these efforts were successful.

Each year the candidates speak of issues which have been talked about year after year. You will hear people talk about the alcohol policy, alternate meal plans, etc., but what have they done to show their ability to work on these tough issues? The real issue this year is experience.

In closing, I ask you to come out and vote next Thursday in the Connelly Center Cinema. Your vote is your voice in who represents the student body next year, on and off the University Senate. I have tried to fulfill my commitment to you this year as your representative and hope to do it more so next year. My promise to you is the same one I made last year — that if elected, I will do the best job for you that I possibly can. *

Peter Jirak

Students of Villanova, once again it's time for you to choose the person you wish to represent you as student body president. It's time to replace the politicians in the student government who are concerned only with their future, and elect someone whose main concern is the future of Villanova. I feel I'm that person.

For the past few years, the Student Government Association has concerned itself with issues that are out of its league. Instead of trying to alter the administrations views on its budget, the S.G.A. should be putting more time into issues such as guaranteed student parking, an alternate meal plan, bringing back the contributions of the alumni, expanding visitation, developing a better line of communication between students, faculty, and administration, and most of all, bringing back football! These issues have to be dealt with in such a way that the Board of Trustees will listen and consider them.

The Board of Trustees, which holds virtually all the power at Villanova, must be dealt with differently than in the past. Communication must be greatly facilitated, as past efforts for this have come up far short. This must be a priority if anything is to be accomplished. A line of communication with the Board of Trustees must work, and our other needs should fall into place soon after.

During the course of my three years here at Villanova, I've seen the students lose all interest. The S.G.A. has disassociated itself with the students. I'm going to change that. I'll make myself seen and heard as president, addressing the students weekly, through the Villanovan. The students should be directly involved with the making of policies, instead of leaving it solely to the few that represent them. You have to make yourselves heard as a single unit, and I'll do everything in my power to make this happen. I feel there just hasn't been any motivation in the past for the students to get involved. I'm prepared to be that motivation. VOTE FOR PETER JIRAK AND GET MOTIVATED! *

John Pisano

Annually candidates for Student Body President overwhelm our campus, making unattainable promises, citing experience, often claiming new and innovative approaches necessary to confront the ever-present tension between the administration and the student body.

My name is John Pisano and I am running for Student Body President. During the past year as chairman of the Grievance Committee, as a member of the Academic Policy Committee, and as vice President of the Student Body I have attempted to take a realistic approach in dealing with the limitations of student government. I do not ask for your vote on the basis of my experience alone. From my past experience I can only offer my insight on where our problems truly lie.

For too long student government has placed too much emphasis on the senate. The time has come when our student senators must do more than cast a monthly vote in a non-governing body, where we are outnumbered two to one by the administration. While the senate is an effective means of communicating our needs it should not be the only focus of student government.

Today, as in the past, several perennial promises will be made. Last year, we as students, were promised a less stringent liquor policy, student representation on the board of trustees, a student bill of rights and an alternative meal plan. Today, one year later, we have none of these. Like my predecessors, and the other candidates, these will be my goals also. The difference lies in the approach I intend to take.

It will be my goal to bring about a justification for our administration's consistent disregard for the requests of the students. Only when the board of trustees justify their consistent impositions on the students will we be able to understand their motives. This explanation will be insured through the monthly publication of an "administrative report card."

Secondly, while in the past we have appealed to the administration with the same recurring negative results it is time student government appeals to the students in the form of a student lobby. Through this, hopefully more students will play a role and the failures of the past will be the success of the future.

The necessity for change and the need to articulate the beliefs of the students cannot be overemphasized. This year Villanova will be considered for re-accreditation, an accreditation that was last granted stipulating several recommended changes. Namely the accreditation committee cited two key problems, "the need for general financial information" and "the necessity for student input and knowledge of the decision making process." Today, we still have neither, yet consideration for re-accreditation looms ever closer.

This year I offer my candidacy with what I would like to believe is a broad base of experience along with a realistic approach to confront our problems. Frequently, we as students have been accused of being apathetic. Thursday, April 1, do not display this apathy, instead devote one minute of your time to endorse my theme that "We deserve better." *

Andy Guarino

Do you believe since you have come to Villanova, that the Student Government Association has been effective in bringing about a better quality of student life? If you are like the vast majority of students at V.U. your answer would be, No! That is why I have chosen to run for Student Body President. The entire thrust of my campaign is to bring about a revitalization of the S.G.A. in order to make it more effective in serving the needs and concerns of the students.

In order for our student government to be more effective it must first establish a broad based support for its goals. This can only be achieved if the S.G.A. establishes open and active avenues of communication with the student body and administration.

I propose three avenues of communication which would be far reaching and operative:

1. The S.G.A. should establish a column in the Villanovan on a weekly basis. Its function would be to address current, pressing issues. It would serve not only to fostr awareness and stimulate interest, but also to enhance S.G.A.-student body relations.

2. I see the need for a publication on a daily basis, a "Daily Express." Its purpose would be to inform students on a daily basis about important matters. It would announce S.G.A. activities as well as the activities of other organizations on campus.

3. Lastly, I believe there is a strong need for W.K.V.U. to expand its capabilities with the possible goal of becoming an FM station. It would serve as an immediate means of communication and could play an instrumental role in bringing students together. I would certainly work hard to bring about this change together with those at W.K.V.U.

The establishment of these avenues of communication by S.G.A. would be a major step towards a revitalized government with student involvement. They are realistic proposals which, if implemented, could begin the gradual, yet significant, changes which I believe are necessary in order for students to be satisfied with the Student Government.

Communication is the foundation from which the S.G.A. can build a strong and united student body. We need the support of the students in order to achieve meaningful changes. My proposals will strengthen the S.G.A. in its efforts to address those issues which are so important to all of us.

In conclusion, I urge you to vote for me in the belief that I am sincere in my commitments to bring about changes for the entire student body through aggressive leadership and clearer avenues of communication. *

When you vote for your next President and Senators...

Please tell the University Senate* whether or not you want Football!

On each ballot there will be a question asking you if you want football back again.

It reads:

If a football program is reinstated at Villanova, I will support it through attendance. Yes ☐ No ☐

ARTS SENATORIAL CANDIDATES...

CAROLYN DiGIOVANNI

Having been actively involved in Student Government as both a freshman and sophomore, and having invested a great deal of time in student affairs, I feel that I have been exposed to the obligations, responsibilities, and commitments necessary to be a successful representative. My freshman year I was involved with the Survey Committee during which time I interviewed a random sample of students obtaining their views on student life. As a first semester sophomore, I was on the Football Committee where I obtained signatures for the reinstatement of football. I played a minor role, yet contributed what I could. Now I want to play a more vital role in Student Government, and I am ready and willing to accept the challenge.

Being aware of all that this job entails, I will represent and be sensitive to the needs of commuters, of which I am a part, as well as the needs of residents. As a second semester sophomore, I have gained experience working with many individuals. I am now President of the Pre-Law Society, and I am well aware of the qualities needed to be a good leader.

As an Arts Senator, I will advocate the following: resolution of the parking situation, pedestrian walkway over the train tracks, improved security, a more representative Student Government, reinstatement of football, revision of the alcohol policy, commuter meal plan, improved escort service, emergency facilities for commuters, and a personal pledge of dedication. Given the opportunity, I will prove myself worthy of this position. *

LAURA MORENO

As I prepare to finish my second year at Villanova, I have become increasingly aware of the problems facing the University and its backbone, the student body. I am not only referring to the many issues which concern the students but also the total lack of communication between those who make the policies and those who are affected by them.

Year after year it seems that the same promises are made: a revision in the alcohol policy and the visitation rules, a change in the housing situation, and alternate meal plan, and a fight against the forever increasing tuition. These issues are important and I too would like to see them successfully carried out, but they unfortunately haven't been. I can't and I won't make any promises that these issues will be satisfactorily changed if I am elected, but they will be presented to the Senate and the Board of Trustees and I will do my best to see positive action taken. If no positive action is taken, then we together will find out why.

I propose to have a monthly newsletter go out to every student explaining what is happening. If there is going to be a revision of the alcohol policy, an increase in tuition, or any other change, the students should be informed about the issues when they are being discussed, not after they have been finalized.

I am representing you, that's not a goal, it's a requirement. I always want to hear your opinions and reactions to the issues and work with you for changes. I promise you commitment, hard work, and results for a better student life.

Remember if you want results, vote Laura Moreno. *

MARY BETH BOGAN

Today I, Mary Beth Bogan, have chosen not to write extensively about certain issues that I realize need to be rectified, and of those issues which are of most importance to the student body because I think the student body is already well aware of what the issues are by their own everyday experiences. The fact that there are 50 guys to two showers in Sullivan Hall; the fact that there is a prevailing lack of security in the dorms; and that the student body has been, in general, "protected" from the exploitation of controversial issues, are all, in effect, evidence that the student body realizes what the issues are. Then where, one may ask, does one go to for dealing with these problems? The Student Government? But what is the Student Government?

Through numerous conversations with students, I have found that the student body is quite unfamiliar with the functions of the Student Government Association which happens to be one of the most influential organizations that represent you, the student body. I feel there is apathy at Villanova. I must say, however, that this apathy is understandable. Apathy is due to a lack of communication, and there is a lack of communication between the students, the one party interested in results, and the administration, the other party who allow the results to take place. It is important to note that it is precisely at this point when the Student Government must make their efforts to link the two parties together, and to build the bridge of successful communication. However, it is the student body's obligation to themselves to make certain they elect responsible and productive communicators as appropriate representatives for them. That is why Mary Beth Bogan is running for the Senate.

There also must be unity among the student body, and this unity is found through student participation. If more students participated in the Student Government affairs, the links of communication would grow stronger. There needs to be a more definite form of communication created, such as a column in The Villanovan specifically utilized for editorials and articles concerning student government issues. Thus, there could be an equal exchange of opinions and ideas. This is one proposed idea Mary Beth Bogan intends to put into effect.

Although the issues are the principle matter at hand, I cannot and will not make campaign promises but rather I will promise to put my best efforts forward to abolish the existing gap between the student body and the administration. In effect, the outcome of this promise will provide the Villanova student body with a concerned representative who will establish the ability to achieve the necessary needs of the student body. That is why Mary Beth Bogan wants to be the next senator for Villanova Student Government.

I would appreciate YOUR VOTE on April 1, 1982. *

JOE McCOLGAN

It's nothing less than tragic to see what is happening to the Villanova student body. Through the workings of the Administration and our "friends," the Trustees, the student body has grown so far apart that it is like WE all are outsiders struggling to see what is happening around campus. WE have little or no say in the goings on at OUR university; yet WE should because it concerns US. Sure the administration will listen, but will they respond?

An example is Father Driscoll. Why does he operate OUR university with a "closed door policy?" Why isn't he ever out talking to his students?

Another question pertains to the budget. How could the Budget Committee defeat the recommendation of the budget by such a small margin? That vote should have read 10-0-0 not 5-4-1. Do they really have OUR interests at heart? Where are the priorities of OUR university when they allot an asinine 784% increase to Athletics Telephone and only a 9% increase to Career Development? Is Bell of Pennsylvania a member of the Board of Trustee's too?

The commuters have always been left out in the cold. They want to get involved in the university social life; yet, that social life doesn't even exist for the residents.

These are just some of the problems that the Student Body faces that need changing and I would like the opportunity to initiate these changes as your representative on the Senate. *

FRANK CALATOZZO

In preparation for writing this message I took the liberty of reading some of the articles submitted by candidates from previous elections; a practice not unknown to my fellow candidates. In doing so I decided that I would be brief and to the point. I also decided that I would employ that quality which I sometimes found to be deficient in previous messages — honesty.

The question asked most by students who signed my ballot petition was, "What does a senator do?" It is my firm belief that the greatest responsibility of a senator is to fight for the rights of the students. It is also important that a senator keep the students informed as to the actions taken by the Senate and Board of Trustees. The alienation of the Villanova student body from its government is a major cause of unrest. Students must be made aware of what is being undertaken by their government and what can be done to bring about change.

I feel that I can represent your best interests. Vote Frank Calatozzo for Arts senator. *

JOHN WILKE

In the past year here at Villanova we have seen many changes take place. We have seen the Board of Trustees make a mockery of our Senate. We have seen our football program dropped due to lack of funds, yet a new athletic complex is under consideration. We have seen a budget proposal calling for increases as high as 15.7%, yet we have not seen any justification for such a large increase. We have not seen any answers. We have not seen Fr. Driscoll. The list goes on and on. WE HAVE SEEN ENOUGH!

With your help, I would like to propose to next year's Senate the following programs. First, when the Senate is in unanimous opposition to a decision by the trustees, that unanimous opposition should serve as a veto. Second, I would like to provide a monthly forum to keep the students informed of the issues that are before the Senate. This would also serve as a medium for the student body to reply to their representatives, allowing the Senate to express the views of the student body as a whole. An informed, unified student body is the only way to legitimize our student government.

Most of the candidates for Senate are aware of the problems facing this university, and I am sure they are just as concerned; however, awareness without action is useless. We can't afford indecisiveness, we need solid concrete proposals such as the two I have put forth.

These programs will be a tough pill for the "powers that be" to swallow, but they've shoved enough of their decisions down our throats. The time has come for the students of Villanova to reciprocate. You can start by voting Thursday. *

JOHN GARDNER

The time has come for us to elect "Senators" who will show more concern for their constituents rather than their resumes. The job of a senator does not end with the campaign — that is where it begins.

I see this job as a means by which I can protect the liberal arts population of this school, myself included, from the restrictions and infringements which have been placed upon it.

Recently, this university has been allowed to discriminate against liberal arts students. A decision was made which stated that liberal arts students could no longer take business courses until after business students had taken their pick. As a result, many of us were closed out of courses which we wanted, and in effect, denied that opportunity for which we came here — a "liberal" education. I intend to turn these two schools back into one university!

Another recent event which took place was the decision to raise our tuition by 13.7% for next year. This decision came about when a majority vote over-ruled a student government without two of its senators! That is not representation.

My platform for this campaign is pure and simple. Should I be elected, I can guarantee that you will be protected and represented in every decision which the student government will make! Vote for John Gardner for Arts Senator. Thank You. *

MANUS COONEY

News of the Villanova University Senate has appeared in the Villanovan; not for its merits, but for its failure to get anything accomplished. I will, if elected, try to bring the Senate away from its place of obscurity, to a position where it will be respected by the student body as well as the administration.

First, I will request that an itemized list of the university expenditures be made available to the students, so that we may know exactly why our tuition is constantly on the rise. Secondly, the need for an extended visitation policy has been stressed by most students. Therefore, I will push revised policies in an effort to introduce a new visitation policy, on campus, within the next year.

The alcohol policy here at Villanova has been a very controversial issue for the past few years. A revised policy has been the promise of past candidates, who after being elected, have failed to come through. The only way we are going to get a new, more lenient alcohol policy is if the Senate works with the administration and not against it. Working with your support, changes can be made to benefit each and every student. I am not making promises which cannot be fulfilled, so please vote for me, Manus Cooney, number eight on the ballot. *

SHAWN ROWAN

My name is Shawn Rowan. I am a sophomore honors major and I am running for Arts senator.

The greatest concern of an Arts Senator should be the establishment of good lines of communication amongst students and administration. It is proper communication that serves as the catalyst for strong and positive action. If elected, I plan to attack this issue and can foresee only good results.

My platform proposes no flashy or unreasonable promises but does introduce practical goals within our reach. By stimulating greater student involvement and utilizing strong lines of communication, I plan to address the following issues:

— An investigation of the issue of loft removal in the dorm rooms. I feel that loft structures, without causing damage to the rooms, are a definite asset to the general living conditions at the University.

— A relaxation of the present visitation and alcohol policies. Other schools of our caliber have much less stringent policies and are not faced with uncontrollable problems.

— The establishment of social functions solely for the students in the School of Arts and Sciences. It is important to interact with those in the same major.

— An improvement in the relations between resident and commuter students. The gap here is very evident and there is need of better rapport between the two groups.

My credible campaign proposals, based on the concept of stimulating communication within the University, and my leadership qualities make me an excellent candidate for the office of Arts Senator. *

VOTE VOTE VOTE

SCIENCE SENATORIAL CANDIDATE...

...(SELECT ONE)

GERRY MALANGA

Once again it's that time of year where the concept of a Student Government seems to become the great savior of the students of Villanova. Candidates go running around filling the dissatisfied students with promises which brings great hope and promise for the future of Villanova. However, after all the propaganda is taken down, everyone, including the candidates slip back to their apathetic ways, allowing the situation at this potentially great university to resort back to its inferior status.

My name is Gerry Malanga and I am running for re-election for Science senator. Due to an injury, I was unable to serve my position, but have returned this semester and it has been a very educational experience (but a very frustrating one!) My only promise to you last year was to work hard and to express your views on issues presented at Senate meetings. In the short time I have served I feel I have kept that promise and I would only like the opportunityy to continue to serve you. Since I am the only Senator on this year's Student Senate running for re-election, I feel I can be a very valuable asset in assisting the other elected senators; and with a hard working, outspoken Student Body President, I think that student government can become more than that once-a-year concept on this campus. So please exercise one of the very few rights you have at this campus and re-elect Gerry Malanga for Science. *

C&F Senatorial Candidates... ... (select two)

Jim Swift

My name is Jim Swift. I am a sophomore accounting major. I am a member of the Villanova Crew team, have been active in the Resident Student Association, and have been attending the Student Government meetings in addition to the debates about the budget. I feel I am qualified for the job of C&F senator. During my two years here, I have come to know that Villanova is a fine academic institution. But one must realize that academics is still only one aspect of the college experience. If we are to fulfill the potential that I know Villanova has, we must all get involved.

As C&F senator I would like to bring the Student Government Association out into the open. I will put the S.G.A. in direct contact with the students through means of a monthly S.G.A. newsletter and a monthly conference at which students may directly address their problems to the members of the S.G.A. I will also get the S.G.A. to work more closely with the Resident Student Association and the Association of Commuter Students. These three organizations were formed to serve the students; and in order to do this to the best of their capacity they must not be isolated. I will work to integrate their efforts and see that the students' rights are represented as effectively as possible.

We are all aware of the hard econimic times that face us ahead. Most of us, like myself, have student loans and have been forced to cutback on non-essential items in order to meet the ever increasing tuition costs. If the students have to cut back so should Villanova! Because I have been attending the weekly Student Government meetings, I have had the chance toview some of the proposed expenditures in the new budget. There are many areas where substantial cutbacks can be made. I propose to take the money that was intended for many of these unnecessaries and fund it back to the students in the form of a tuition decrease or in low interest student loans.

Like all of you, I am very familiar with the alcohol and visitation policies and the uncompromising attitude with which that subject is approached. I also realize that our meal plan is much too expensive. We are all paying for food that we do not eat. There are alternatives to these situations that can be reached if we, the students, can work together as a cohesive organization.

An essential to making the Student Government Association a more viable and progressive organization is the support of the students. We must all work as a collective team, incorporating the efforts of all students to bring about a sense of unity at Villanova so that we are able to vocalize our ideas and see that the full potential of Villanova is realized. On April 1 vote for ambition and progress. Vote Jim Swift for C&F senator. *

John Miller

My name is John Miller. I am a junior Accounting major running for the office of Commerce and Finance Senator. Most of you feel that no one listens to you in regard to how the policies and regulations are formulated here at Villanova. I want to change that frame of thinking. If elected, I will work to see that our hopes and ideas concerning Villanova will become reality.

Two of these ideas, an alternative meal plan and a new intramural and athletic complex, are currently being discussed in the Senate. I fully support both of these proposals. The alcohol and visitation policies are too strict. A re-evaluation of these policies is vitally necessary. Falvey Library, Bartley Hall, and the Connelly Center should be open longer for the benefit of all students. Having the Connelly Center open longer would increase the revenue of the Center. I support the institution of a fall break in our schedule, which would entail a four-day weekend in October. I feel that the administration owes us an explanation for the increases in tuition, parking fees, how the room damage bills are arrived at, as well as other financial decisions.

I feel these issues reflect the feelings of all of you. I hope you will allow me to work on these issues and give you, the students, a say in the operation of Villanova University by supporting me on Election Day. *

Brian Connors

Students, entering into a new atmosphere, carry with them a set of standards on how they feel about different issues. Through interaction with other students, some feelings mold, while others still remain unique. My job as Senator of C&F will be to accurately represent the views of my peers.

Though Villanova has the reputation of being a competitive university, athletically and scholastically, there are improvements to be made so that the students and administration will be more closely interrelated. Once this relationship is established we will be more able to achieve the goals, which will maximize the benefits that the university has to offer.

One of the main problems at Villanova is that the student body has been alienated from the decision making process, which causes tension to arise between the students and administration. A better relationship among the students and administration must be established. This will prove to be very advantageous when dealing with such issues as the budget, the allocation of funds, an alternate meal plan for both residents and commuters, and improved social conditions in the areas of the visitation and drinking policies.

I feel I am best qualified to represent the student body, because I am outgoing, and have the ability to relate well to others. I am responsible, and will put in the time and effort that is required to get the job done.

I have the ability to accurately depict the views of my peers in C&F. On April 1, you have the chance to make the difference. Vote Brian Connors for C&F Senator. *

Engineering Senatorial Candidates... ... (select one)

Carl Sparano

Carl Sparano, Junior Civil Engineer, A.S.C.E. member, and a member of the Villanova Diving Team. In representing the College of Engineering I will create more interaction between the S.G.A. and the engineers. The engineers have many ideas and suggestions that need to be considered and heard. I am an outgoing and active person. These qualities will help me present these issues for them. If the S.G.A. is to succeed in its endeavors in '83, the members must be innovative and aggressive. I feel I have the ability to be one of these members to produce positive results in the interest of the School of Engineering as well as th rest of the Villanova community. *

Tom Janisch

Every year at this time, election for the University Senate is held. Although the Senate is not perfect, it is one of the few ways students have to influence the decisions of the University. I believe that as students we should elect senators who are willing to make a commitment to represent their constituents. I am willing to make such a commitment. In the last two years, I have attended many senate meetings and student caucuses. By attending the meetings I have come to understand the interworkings of the Senate. This, combined with my participation in debate, will allow me to effectively represent your views on the issues that will affect us all. Issues such as unreasonable tuition hikes, the alcohol policy and adequate parking are just such examples of the concerns of the students to which the university must respond. Vote for Tom Janisch, number two on the ballot. *

Bill Pcheny

My name is Bill Pcheny and I am running for the office of engineering senator, which is a responsibility, I feel, that should not be taken lightly. After attending Villanova for two and a half years, I find the greatest complaint voiced by the student population is the inability to communicate with the administration. The dropping of football is a prime example of this lack of communication, but, more recently, an unexpected article dealing with increases in tuition, appeared in the Villanovan.

As an engineering student, I am deeply concerned with any increase in tuition because I have yet to see the results from the previous increase. Walking through the laboratory area in the basement of Tolentine is like walking through a museum of archaic machinery. While engineering students at other institutions are performing experiments with new equipment, Villanova engineers are using outdated models. I feel the engineering community of Villanova deserves better than this and it is time we let the administration know how we feel. Engineering is a field that deals with the future and should not be hindered by remnants from the past. Help Villanova engineering look ahead to the future. On April 1, vote Bill Pcheny for Engineering senator. *

How Old is Your Brother?

By NICHOLAS CORRADO and N. JOHN CAVUTO

Alpha Phi Delta, one of the newest fraternities on campus this semester, holds a current membership of two brothers and 16 pledges. Of these pledges, one does not appear to be a likely candidate for fraternal life. This particular pledge stands apart from the rest because he has lived through 14 presidents, two world wars and the Depression.

Frank Ferrari, currently a senior at Villanova University, was born in the heart of the Italian market in South Philadelphia in 1910. Although receiving most of his early education in Philadelphia, Ferrari's family moved to Sea Isle City, N.J. where his father died shortly thereafter.

As a result of his father's death, the family was separated, and Ferrari moved in with a German family. He worked as a pin setter in a bowling alley by night to bring his family back together. After finishing the eighth grade, Frank, along with his oldest sister, had to quit school and work to help support the other four children in the family.

Ferrari was employed by a weekly newspaper, The Cape May County Times. There he acquired a strong background in the various fields of education and eventually became a sportswriter. He soon achieved the distinction of selecting the all-county teams in the different sports. It is his belief that "When the good Lord closes one door he always opens another."

In 1934, Ferrari married Marie Cicchitti of South Philadelphia, a summer vacationer in Sea Isle City. During the next seven years they had three children all of which were girls. However, his family life was interrupted when World War II broke out and he went into the army.

When he returned to civilian life, Ferrari decided to make a major change. He quit his job as a newspaper reporter to work for a typographic company. (The name of which he chooses not to disclose.) During his 24-year career as a newspaper reporter he also worked for The Atlantic City Daily World and The Philadelphia Inquirer. While working with the typographic company, Ferrari quickly climbed the ladder. Starting as a serviceman, he was promoted to sales and then to District Manager in New York City. In 1969, he was appointed vice president of domestic sales in Chicago, the position he held until his retirement in 1972.

While working in New York, Ferrari decided to take several high school courses to occupy his spare time. There, it was suggested to him by his English teacher to consider college. He proceeded to take the New York State High School Equivalency Test and after passing, decided to attend Fordham University in the evenings.

Upon retirement from the typographic company, Ferrari and his wife decided to spend a year in Florence, Italy. There he gathered background which enhanced his study of the Italian language. When he returned to the States, he continued his studies at Temple University and earned his B.A. in Italian. Then, in 1976, he learned of the Senior Citizen Program at Villanova University, and in just two short years he received his B.A. in French. Ferrari still has not satisfied his quest for knowledge. He is currently in his last semester of studies working for his B.A. in history.

Ferrari first learned of Alpha Phi Delta during a meeting of the Italian Club where an announcement was made concerning the formation of the new fraternity. He was encouraged by his good friend and advisor of the frat, Dr. Gaetano Pastore, director of the Italian Department, to consider joining. After attending a meeting, Ferrari was overwhelmed by the enthusiasm showed by its pledges. "I found the guys to be very friendly and decided to give it a shot," he said.

Since becoming a pledge, Ferrari has not forsaken any responsibilities. He has already competed in the Big Brother — Big Sister Dance Marathon and is looking forward to Greek Week.

When asked if he was hesitant about joining a fraternity, he responded, "Why be hesitant about joining something new? When I decided to join, my wife asked me if I knew what I was getting into. However, she has been very understanding and has even accompanied me to most of the functions."

What's next for Ferrari? As a member of Who's Who, he has decided to study for his M.A. in French. Inquiring about his love of languages, Ferrari responds, "Language provides a brand new culture."

As long as he remains healthy he will continue his education. As he likes to say, "Good health and an active mind mean a helluva lot."

Malle's "Atlantic City" Craps Out

By GREG ANTON

Nostalgia has always had a great appeal and it seems certain that people will always yearn for the past. The troubles of the times can temporarily be forgotten as one indulges in comforting reveries conjuring up fond memories. Or one can turn to the various artistic expressions which are greatly influenced by this incessant longing for the past. The movie industry especially has been affected by this desire. 1981 saw such stars as James Cagney, Henry Fonda, Katharine Hepburn, and Burt Lancaster return to the screen, carrying with them great nostaglic appeal. However, unlike Ragtime or On Golden Pond, Atlantic City expresses and successfully conveys the futility of trying to regain the past.

Atlantic City is the story of Lou (Burt Lancaster), an old, two-bit hood who is barely scraping out a living in Atlantic City. He serves as the "bodyguard" and nursemaid to Grace (Kate Reid), a stuffy, crotchety woman who constantly lies in bed, void of ambition. Lou relies upon the city's diminishing and almost defunct underworld to supplement his meager income and to boost his destroyed ego. He needs to be an important man, but no one needs him except Grace. She only abuses and mistreats him. Lou is desperately in need of a change from his down-and-almost-out life. He impatiently awaits a revitalization.

The change first occurs vicariously, as Lou peers out his window to watch his young and beautiful neighbor, Sally (Susan Sarandon), disrobe and rub lemon juice on her body. He becomes fascinated with her and engages in this daily ritual and dreams of better times. Soon the change is manifested. When Sally's estranged husband (Robert Joy) returns with Sally's pregnant sister (Hollis McLaren) he imposes on Lou and uses Lou's apartment as a front for a dope operation. While out on his first delivery, Sally's husband comes a thrill-seeking gangster, searching to attain his unfulfilled goals of the past. The once nice, old idler becomes a thief and murderer to prove to himself he is a man, just like the ones in the good ole' days. One still pities him, but for different reasons. Now he has become a pathetic and almost demented character.

Sarandon's character development is sacrificed too much to Lou's. Sally is a fascinating and realistic character; one wishes to know more about her. She has a fierce conviction to survive despite her diminished self-esteem. This determination allows one to easily relate to and identify with Sally and the dilemma she constantly faces. Sarandon fuses together the jagged and undeveloped aspects of Sally and enhances the many dimensions of the character. She possess an attractive regularness which makes her performance extremely convincing.

None of the supporting characters advance the plot; rather they merely set the story up. Because of this noninvolvement, their performances are easily overlooked. None stand out as excellent. Kate Reid, as Grace, contributes the little humor present in the film and does a fine job of portraying the querulous lady who is nothing more than another trinket from the past.

Atlantic City is a realistic and contemporary story, but often enters the world of make-believe as many things are left unexplained, causing one to question its authenticity and believability. These seemingly unrealistic occurrences instill a feeling of incredibility and lessens the potential impact of the story.

Atlantic City reminds one of an often depressing, demoralizing, and discordant fact: the past shall never be recaptured. Any attempt to do so will prove useless. And although the movie seems to end on an upbeat and happy note, one cannot help but notice the imminent danger of the wrecker as it begins to erode the exterior of the building with a precisioned slowness. Eventually the exterior shall give way, exposing the rank and decay within.

. . . the young and beautiful Sally (Susan Sarandon)

The story is well written; many enlightening social comments are subtly conveyed through the use of clever symbolism. The movie paces along at a quick clip, but never snowballs into an intensely captivating story. Lou and Sally overcome their conflicts too easily, always emerging victorious and virtually unscathed. One wants to empathize with the characters, but the depth and complexities of Lou and Sally are not fully explored. Nor do they ever encounter obstacles that seem insurmountable. Emotion is created; however, it is shallow and does not allow for a cathartic release. The only appeal the two possess is their simplicity. Both are hapless commoners, two nobodies struggling from day-to-day clinging on to any hopes they have of improving their cursed lot.

Lancaster gives a superb performance. He conveys a naturalism that adds to Lou's appeal. He seems to be relying on an innate sensitivity, a kind of street worldliness and know-how. This perennial star has appeared in such classics as Come Back Little Sheba, Jim Thorpe — All American, From Here to Eternity, and Elmer Gantry. Even at the age of 66 his roughed good looks and masculinity synthesize on screen, creating an uncanny etherealness. This visual sternness and beauty masterfully contrasts the delicate vulnerability of Lou.

One soon realizes that Lou is suffering in the same way. Throughout the course of the movie, Lou's outward and inward appearances change. The money from the drug deals has allowed him to afford the most expensive clothes and restaurants. Yet he becomes a phony, deceiving Sally and leading her to believe he is something he is not. Sally does not see through him, for her insecurity causes her to submit to his kindness and affection. Lou be- is killed by the men from whom he stole the dope, leaving Lou with a small fortune in drugs. This newly discovered source of income greatly affects Lou's life and his relationships with Sally and Grace. The remainder of the movie reveals the changes that take place.

Atlantic City is the perfect backdrop for the story, for it too is desperately in need of a revitalization. The city, once the resort center of the United States, has become a poverty-ridden slum area. All hope for its rejuvenation and rebuilding lies in the casinos and legalized gambling. However, the "gamble" is not paying off and probably never will, for the flashy, ornate, and elegant casinos are an isolated and removed element from the mainstream of life. They merely provide a superficial varnishing and fail to get at or solve the root of the problems. Additionally, these casinos, the supposed panacea, create a mecca of illicit activities, instilling an atmosphere of decadence. Aside from the casinos, the city remains virtually in ruins. This dichotomy reveals the acute desire to recapture and relive the past and the inevitable failure that results when such attempts are made. Atlantic City has not undergone a revitalization or rejuvenation, but rather a fleeting and temporary regeneration of interest and excitement.

'Missing' Hits Government Nerve

By LAURALEE DOBBINS

Missing, the latest film by Costa-Gavras, opened this weekend at local theaters, after several weeks of previews. Washington, D.C. was one of those preview sites and it so upset the U.S. State Department that they felt it necessary to issue a three-page disclaimer concerning the contents of the film.

by Thomas Hauser, implicates the American government in backing the coup of 1973, and also blames it for Horman's disappearance.

Gruesome as Missing often is, it is not a film to be taken lightly or dismissed as a horror film. It was filmed in Mexico and the actual location of the action is rarely mentioned in the film.

Spacek plays a scared yet determined wife, and one never doubts for a minute that her's is the correct explanation for her husband's disappearance. She proves again that she is a very talented actress, although her wardrobe, which looks much as it did in Carrie, could lead to her constantly being cast in similar roles. Jack Lemmon also does a fine job as a father who begins his search believing in his government and slowly becomes disillusioned until the end, where captions tell us that the Horman's filed suit against several government officials, including Henry Kissinger, following their return to the U.S.

The intention may not have been to propagandize, but the reaction may prove to be furious.

Missing is a very disturbing film, which shocks as well as enlightens. Costa-Gavras also said, "It is not a movie against the American government. It's about the tragedy of a family and people and how the government didn't help the family." The intention may not have been to propagandize, but the reaction may prove to be furious.

Missing is a startling film that everyone should see, especially those who tend to be naive, believing in the unfailing benevolence of our government. It very well may do for the Chilean coup what The Deer Hunter did for the Vietnam War.

Destri's 'Heart' Keeps the Beat

By PETER CAPIZZI

The first solo album, Heart on a Wall, from Blondie's keyboardist, Jimmy Destri, has been recently released. Just as Blondie began obscured by all of the new wave groups, Jimmy Destri's album is going to remain an obscure item unless radio listeners are offered the opportunity to hear his low-key but powerful music. A key member of the sensational, new wave group Blondie, Jimmy Destri is the provider of the trend-setting style of music so typical of Blondie. As original pioneers of punk/new wave groups fade away, his talent seems to be blossoming. He helps Blondie set new standards in lyrics and sounds in music, which so many new wave bands try to imitate.

...Jimmy Destri is the provider of the trend-setting style of music so typical of Blondie

As he has helped Blondie propel themselves into the status of a premiere musical group, he is trying to do the same with his first album. His talent on the keyboards and on the guitar rings clear throughout the album.

The first song Bad Dreams sets the style and mood for the whole album, with the exception of the song Numbers Don't Count (On Me), Bad Dreams is a tune reminiscent of the sounds from Blondie's AutoAmerican. It lacks a great deal of guitar, however the guitar that exists is apparently overshadowed by the solid and crisp beat of the percussion section. Furthermore, the keyboards are hard to detect because of the drumming. However, the lyrics and synthesizers keep the song moving and interesting.

The next song Don't Look Around, again is not overrun by long instrumentals. This enables the lyrics and low deep sounds to carry the song. It carries a powerful message of how society has turned into a technological, computerized land. Destri's style seems to remind one the vocals and eerie musical style of David Bowie.

The following songs, Living in Your Heart and My Little World are synthesizer and keyboard symphonies. My Little World and the tune Heart on a Wall are definitely the best songs on the album. My Little World creates its own world from the first sounds of the deep ringing bells reminiscent of the small medieval villages and their churches out of some world of fantasy.

Little Metal Drummer and Under the Ice seem to let down the mood of the album. Both of these are boring at times and seem an afterthought. However the song Number Don't Count (On Me) is full of fast moving catchy music. Heart on a Wall, the title track, is one of the best songs on the album. Again it has the theme of escaping into one's own world. Dreaming and fantasy, as in the previous songs, are the moods set in the final cut on this album. The song's lyrics are powerful and his voice has that ever constant ring of Bowie.

Jimmy Destri has proven with this album that he does have a unique talent with his style of music. It is an example of his expertise and professionalism, however there are some songs tht bore the listener. Also none of the songs, except for Number Don't Count (On Me), are fast and ones that most radio stations like to play. Air play for this album could only help Destri, but nevertheless as Blondie started out in the back and ended up on top so will Jimmy Destri.

On Tap II Intramural Champ

By BOB CONWAY

A good thing is almost always copied. John Thompson, Georgetown's fine coach, uses many of the same techniques that Dean Smith designed. The same is true of Villanova's intramural department. Craig Hudson, the graduating president of intramurals, adpoted the NCAA tournament format for the intramural basketball playoffs. As a result, what is a great money maker for the NCAA, is also a great way to end the intramural basketball season at Villanova.

Prior to the final game 46 teams had already tasted defeat. The championship game is played to determine the 47th loser, or one champion. (There are different ways of looking at things.) The survivor of the championship game was On Tap II. They survived three overtime periods to beat a team they had lost to in the regular season — Sweet.

It was tough enough to get up at ten in the morning on a Saturday, let alone play three overtime periods. Sweet, it could be argued, did not live up to its name on this occasion.

To reach the Final Four, however, a team must be "sweet." Along with On Tap II and Sweet, the Final Four included Ebony Express and the Shooting Stars.

The two semi-finals matched On Tap II against the Shooting Stars, while Sweet was pitted against a high flying Ebony Express squad.

On Tap II won a defensive struggle winning 35-32 at the Field House. Phil Malcotte led the way for On Tap II by scoring 12 points. Eric Holzer was the second highest point-getter for the winners, adding nine points.

This game was the closest game On Tap II had been involved in since the regular season concluded. "It is good to have a close game under your belt before you head into the finals," said Eric Holzer. Holzer could not have known then how true his words would be.

In the other semi-final match Sweet was able to keep Ebony Express at bay throughout the game. Ebony Express, a very hot team, was coming off two big wins over Drink-till-Dawn and the Alabama Slammers. In both of these contests, Ebony Express won by three points. However, things would not be the same against Sweet. Sweet led the entire game. Hank Hagstrom led Sweet to victory by notching 13 points. Willie Abney was high scorer for the losers, compiling 12 points.

The final game was everything a championship game should be. Throughout the entire game three points was the biggest lead either team could muster. The half time score was 26-25 in favor of On Tap II. At the end of regulation, the score was tied at 45-all. At this point foul trouble was beginning to plague Sweet, but they still had enough talent to push the game into the third overtime period. Malcotte was virtually unstoppable in the overtimes. He carried his club getting eight crucial overtime points.

High scorer for On Tap II was Eric Holzer. Holzer netted 26 points. Bruce Turgiss added 16, while Malcotte finished with 14.

Chip Suski was high scorer for Sweet with 18 points.

"They (Delaware) played an ...cellent game," commented ...obst. "They took the body the ...tire game and didn't allow us to ...e-wheel as they did in game ...e. Overall, I thought we played pretty well but they just waited for their opportunities and unfortunately for us, we gave them too many."

Sunday's championship game looked like it was going to be a Villanova blow-out but once again, Delaware did not give up and the Blue Hens slowly, but surely, chipped away at the Icecat lead. Nova jumped on top 5-0 midway through the second period but a batch of Cat penalties gave Delaware some hope. Two minutes later, the Hens had closed the gap to 5-2. After exchanging goals later in the period, Villanova found themselves on top, 6-3, after two periods.

The closest Delaware came to catching Villanova was 30 seconds into the final period, when they converted another power-play goal. The Cat offense then got back on track and scored four unanswered goals and cruised to a 10-5 championship win.

After his 82nd win at Villanova and his second championship in as many years, Coach Probst stated, "We had a fine year. We set many offensive records that I feel will stand for a long while. We had eight players with 30 points or more and our first 60-point scorer. We'll be losing a highly talented group of seniors that set almost every Nova record to date."

Margiotti, who was also playoff MVP in the 1980 series when the Cats lost to Penn State, posted his 30th and 31st wins as a Villanova goaltender, the most in Cat history.

Tom Curran holds every offensive record possible after completing his finest year as an Icecat. Curran, who was held scoreless for the first time in 25 consecutive games on Sunday, scored a record-breaking 37 goals and had 65 total points.

"We'll be losing some fine players," concluded Probst. "Not only offensively but defensively. Three of our top five defensemen will be lost along with our top goaltender. But we have a fine nucleus here and some great talent to continue our championship reign."

Powerlifters Second in Nationals

By N. JOHN CAVUTO

Villanova's powerlifting team, despite missing some key personnel due to injury, lifted to a second-place finish in the National Collegiate Championships last weekend at Marshall University in Huntington, West Virginia. This caps off a tremendous season in which the Cats won the Philadelphia Open to become Mid-Atlantic Champs and the Glassboro Open to become South Jersey Champions. The team also finished third in the Pennsylvania State Championships and with mostly underclassmen, it seems that Villanova has to be a pre-contest favorite in the 1983 National Collegiate Championships.

In the women's competition, Mary Majerus won the national championship in the 97 lb. weight class. She is also the collegiate record holder in the benchpress competition. Meg Folk also put in a good showing, finishing in sixth place in the 114 lb. weight class.

For the men, All-American John Padova, competing in the 114 lb. weight class finished in third place and missed the collegiate benchpress record by just 14 lbs. with a lift of 231 lbs. Padova is currently ranked in the top 20 in the United States for all weightlifters, collegiate and professional.

In the 123 lb. weight class, Chris Wakim, coming off an injury, and competing in his first national competition ever, finished in sixth place.

All-American Dan "The Man" Capece, pre-contest favorite, managed a second-place finish in the 132 weight class. His 270 lb. benchpress was only 15 pounds off the national collegiate record.

Unfortunately, senior tri-Captain Matt Durst was disqualified from competition in the 165 lb. weight clas because of a dispute concerning his lifting technique. Durst, a former All-American, expected to finish in the top three this year, unofficially broke the Pennsylvania collegiate squat record with a lift of 551 lbs. Durst thanked Father President Driscoll, "for all his assistance which enabled us to compete in this year's national Championships."

In the 242 lb. competition, senior tri-captain John Jefferson captured second place, despite being successful on only three of nine lifts. Jefferson set a new Pennsylvania State Collegiate squat record with a lift of 688 lbs.

Throughout the year, the powerlifting team was aided by the tremendous help of two coaches, Joe Slabinski and Ted Kurlowicz, as well as senior tri-caption Vince Sferra. Sferra helped coach the team in the championships, since he suffered from a pinched sciatic nerve which stopped him from competing. Padova commented on the coaching saying, "Besides being very succesful powerlifters themselves, as well as tremendous individuals, they did a superb job coaching us. Kudos to both."

With only three seniors leaving from a team which finished second in the nation, the Wildcat lifters are already looking ahead to next year. Anthony Tracchio, showing his optimism, said, "Throughout the year we were very competitive, and with the return of practically the entire team, we undoubtedly will be National Collegiate Champions next year.

Unfortunately, the National Championships brought an end to the collegiate powerlifting careers of three seniors: Durst thanked the team members and the coaches for all the support throughout the year and said, "We are sure the competitive spirit and determination which we've acquired through powerlifting will stay with us as a positive factor for the rest of our lives."

Women Break School Records at Gator Relays

By BEVERLY REILLY

The hot weather did not deter ...e performances of the women's ...ack team last Saturday at the ...dy Gator Relays, Gainesville, ...lorida. As a matter of fact, the ...sing temperature may have pro-...oked the lowering of four school ...ecords at the Wildcats first out-...or meet of the season.

The tracksters did not waste ...ny time. In the opening event of ...e meet, Carol Gilsinger and Bev-...ly Reilly broke the old school ...ecord (44:44.9) for the 10,000 ...eter run. Gilsinger placed sixth, ...attering the record with a time ...8:19.3 and Reilly took eleventh ...h a time of 40:16.4.

By mid-afternoon the tempera-...re rose to 95 degrees, but the ...mes continued to decline. The ...ile relay (Veronica McIntosh, ...atty Bradley, EvaMarie Berardi, ...nnifer Whitfield) placed sixth in ...e trials, advancing to the finals. ...turday night, the mile relay ...am finished a tight fourth in the ...nals. However, the thinclads set ...new school record with a time of ...46.7.

The same tracksters ran on the ...rint medley relay (Bradley, ...cIntosh, Whitfield and Berardi). The effort was just as strong and the result just as effective. The sprint medley team placed fifth in the sectionals, while setting the school record in 1:51.5.

The 400-meter relay (Bradley, McIntosh, Whitfield, Peggy Stewart) placed seventh in their section. The Wildcats set another school record with a time of 49.2.

Junior All-American, Peggy Stewart took third in the high jump with a height of 5-8-¾.

Under the lights Saturday evening, senior Sue Shea and freshman MaryEllen McGowan attacked the 1500-meter run. Shea placed fifth in the first section (4:40.6) and McGowan placed ninth in the second section (4:39.0).

The women tracksters view this meet as the start to a promising outdoor season. Coach Bob Shoudt agrees, stating, "The performances on Saturday were excellent as the four school records prove." Shoudt lends personal recognition as he continues, "Whitfield had a super meet. She ran a strong leg on all four relays."

The women's next meet is the Big Five Championship, today, at Franklin Field.

Cats Fall

Carolina Tar Heels would be in the final four for the second consecutive season. Meanwhile, on the other side of the court, Coach Massimino was certainly not in despair. "We're very happy to have come this far," he said. "Both teams played extremely well. We were just a little short when we needed a basket."

Perhaps the statement which best summed up the character of this Villanova team, one which far exceeded the expectations of most observers, was spoken by the opposing coach, Dean Smith. "I am very impressed with Villanova, I really am. It's a real tribute to them that they did not quit."

...aseball Season Begins, Team Drops Early Contests

By DAVID ERRICO

...This year's Villanova baseball ...m is experiencing what almost ...ry athletic program is sure to ...counter. It's called a "rebuild-... year." This year's club lost not ...y experience in the graduating ...s of last year, but also talent. ...ch Larry Shane has the un-...y task of rebuilding a club ...ch lost such players as Bob Sullivan, Bob Loscalzo, and Phil Sartori. Although he does have talented new prospects such as Rich Moore, a 6-4 freshman pitcher, it is not easy to mold a winning team in one year. Of the ten freshmen who made the team, five are pitchers. Another point which must not be overlooked is that there is only one returning starter from last year's team.

Going into Thursday's home opener against Textile, the Cats were an 0-5 ball club, and facing a schedule that only gets tougher. Shane is realistic about the situation, stressing that he has the "makings of a strong team, but you can't turn things around overnight."

Noticeably it has been the team's inability to get timely hitting and leaving men in scoring positions which has accounted for the poor record. Sophomore second basemen Ray Paparella notes, "We've been playing good defense and the pitching has been surprisingly good, but we just haven't been able to put the hits together." Lack of timely hitting is common in early season games and sometimes luck is needed to get things rolling.

One member of this year's team who is going to have to adjust is Captain Dante Santoni. Santoni has been trying to get some of the younger players hungry and as he says, "If they get a losing attitude now it's going to hurt them in the long run." Santoni has been on some good teams recently and would like to see the current Wildcat squad get on the winning track.

Women Trounce Miami and Delta to Advance to Final Four

The basketball season at Villanova is not over yet for the women's team as they became one of the final four teams remaining in the AIAW Championships by defeating Delta State, 87-82, on Tuesday night.

The Wildcats will now advance to the Palestra along with Rutgers, Wayland Baptist or California, and Texas.

In the first round of the nationals, Sunday at the Field House, Villanova beat Miami of Ohio, 69-61. The Wildcats held a slim 31-30 lead at halftime but opened it up in the second half to beat the Redskins. Kathie Beisel led all scorers with 24 points. Lisa Ortlip and Nancy Bernhardt added 15 and 14, respectively, while Sandy Williams pulled down 11 rebounds. Delta State eliminated Vanderbilt to advance to the second-round matchup with Nova.

In the first half against Delta State, the Wildcats' biggest lead was nine, but the Lady Statesmen came back and at halftime Villanova was ahead, 30-28. Bernhardt scored 15 points despite the team's mediocre 33 percent field goal shooting.

Throughout the game, the Wildcats easily broke Delta State's full court press with effective passing and skillful ballhandling by guard Andrea Burton. Nova increased its shooting percentage in the second half and held on to the lead. With 12 minutes left, Williams and Beisel each hit jump shots, and Williams scored on a layup to put the Cats ahead, 55-43. After that spurt, Delta would come no closer than nine points, and the Wildcats found themselves one step closer to achieving the dream of a national championship.

Nancy Bernhardt scored a career high of 37 points and handed out seven assists in the victory. Lisa Ortlip added 16, Stephanie Vanderslice had 14 points and 12 rebounds, and freshman Sandy Williams came off the bench to contribute 11.

Coach Harry Perretta felt that his team's play in the second half was the key. "We took a lot of shots in the first half, but they weren't good ones. In the second half we took less but made more because they were good shots. We also scored 17 points from the foul line (in the 2nd half) and executed our offense which is geared on passing."

Stephanie Vanderslice commented, "We were sluggish in the first half but came out determined to make good cuts and passes in the second half."

"We're a second half team. Our defense was good and it kept us in the game," stated Bernhardt.

The Wildcats will play Rutgers on Friday night at 7 in the semifinal game. The teams met twice this season and each won once, with Villanova winning two weeks ago. The winner will play the other semifinal winner on Sunday at 3 p.m. for the Division I national championship.

Villanova will be participating in the AIAW championship for the first time, but it will also probably be the last time. This year the majority of schools have joined the NCAA for their women's teams, and by next year, all schools are expected to join the NCAA.

Vanderslice remarked, "Being in the final four is an unbelievable feeling. It's amazing. Since this might be the last year for the AIAW, it's more incentive to win."

Cardiac Kids Drop Memphis in OT

By LARRY GOANOS

"It was just another game, gentlemen," joked Villanova coach Rollie Massimino, minutes after his Wildcats had battled to a 70-66 overtime victory against Memphis State in the NCAA East Region semi-finals. Coming from a man who had guided his squad to a triple-overtime win against Northeastern only six days earlier, Massimino's comment was probably only half in jest. "This basketball team has character, there's no doubt about it," he continued. "These kids never quit."

Villanova's balanced attack (four players scored in double figures) against the Tigers was led by center John Pinone, who muscled his way to 19 points and 12 rebounds. Senior Aaron Howard produced in the clutch, coming up with a season-high 16 points, a figure which was matched by freshman Ed Pinckney.

Memphis State, ranked ninth nationally going into the game, fell prey to Massimino's multiple defense strategy. The Tigers' All-Everything freshman Keith Lee was held to 14 points and four rebounds before fouling out on a charging call with 4:58 left in the game. Those numbers were four points and seven rebounds shy of his season average. "It takes five people to win," Lee said later, obviously quite conscious of his role as team leader.

The first half saw both teams start almost evenly until Howard popped in a 14-footer with 11:10 left to put the Cats up at 15-13. The Nova margin grew to seven when Mike Mulquin hit a lay-up and was fouled by Tiger center Derrick Phillips. Mulquin's ensuing free throw boosted the score to 28-21 with 6:09 remaining in the half. The Tigers clawed back however, as they managed to cut the gap to four at 35-31 before heading into the locker room.

Basketball

Memphis State took it right to the Cats at the start of the final half, following a Pinckney free throw with three straight fast break lay-ups to lift them over Nova at 37-36 with 18:42 to play. A Villanova time-out was followed by a Pinone tap-in to restore the lead which the Cats would hold for the next eleven minutes. With 6:59 showing on the clock, the 6'10" Lee came up with a loose ball in the Villanova end which he drilled home to put the Tigers back on top, 55-54.

The lead changed hands two more times down the stretch before freshman Dwayne Mc Clain was whistled for fouling guard Otis Jackson with 47 ticks left on the clock and Nova trailing, 61-60. Jackson could only manage to hit the front end of the one-and-one however, leaving the Cats with the ball and down by a basket. Only 29 seconds were on the clock when Pinone took a feed from Stewart Granger and converted a three foot hook to knot the game. Jackson dribbled down the clock for M.S.U. before throwing up a 25 footer which rimmed out as regulation time expired.

Next came the five minute sovereignty attack, also known as overtime. Nova pulled ahead twice on baskets by Pinone and Howard, but the Tigers quickly retaliated each time to even things up at 66. Memphis State came up with a steal with under a minute left, but guard Phillip Haynes missed the shot on the break and forward Bobby Parks was called for fouling Pinone on the offensive rebound. With 26 seconds showing on the clock, the 6-8 junior center calmly went to the line and sank two of the biggest free throws of his career to boost the Cats into the lead at 68-66.

"I knew that if I made the first, the second one would be easy," Pinone would say later of his important shots. The Tigers charged right back but an overly zealous Haynes was nailed for travelling with 14 seconds left. Jackson fouled Granger only four seconds later in a last-ditch effort to get the ball back. Seemingly oblivious to the pressure, Granger hit both foul throws to ice the victory.

"This ball game was a little more physical than what we're used to," declared Coach Dana Kirk after the dust had cleared. He offered no excuses for the defeat however, admitting, "We did what we wanted to do and played well. I don't know if you'd exactly call this an upset."

This week's Budweiser Athlete is freshman basketball player "Ed" Ed Pinckney. In the Cats overtime win over Memphis State in the NCAA's third round, Pinckney collected 18 points and a career high six blocked shots. Continuing his strong play into the final eight, Pinckney had 18 points and 10 rebounds, both game highs, against North Carolina.

The Villanovan will not be published next week due to Easter Break. The next publication date will be April 16, 1982.

Candidates Receive Penalties

By KIM RUSHTON

Several charges have been filed this week concerning the student government election candidates, resulting in the Villanova Election Commission issuing a first infraction against one candidate, and a first and second against another.

Andy Guarino, a junior, as a result of being issued two infractions, could not distribute any printed literature or campaign verbally until election day. In addition, Guarino was not permitted to participate in the presidential debate this past Wednesday.

John Pisano, a junior, recipient of one infraction, was not permitted to circulate any printed literature, but was allowed to campaign verbally and participate in the presidential debate.

On Thursday evening, March 25, the Commission found Guarino's posters to be in violation of the election rules which stipulate that a candidate has to obtain his printed materials at one of four designated print shops and that total campaign expenditures can not exceed $100 for a presidential candidate. Guarino admitted to using a print shop in New York State.

According to Student Body President and Election Commission Chairperson Bob Rosengarth, the Commission had the value of Guarino's posters assessed by various local printers and received "conservative" estimates of $300 to $400. Guarino, however, had presented the Commission with receipts totalling only $48.

"My reaction is that regretfully for a while the campaign diminished to one of innuendo and accusations and deviated from the true problems of Villanova students."
John Pisano

"The estimates Rosengarth got are including labor and profit, and I did not pay for labor and profit, and this is where the term "value" becomes ambiguous."

"I felt the infraction was unfair as it was such a minute error on the part of one of my workers, in light of the fact that all Guarino's signs had already been ordered removed," commented Pisano.

The Commission also determined Pisano to have been in possession of a defaced Guarino poster, which was in his room and was placed there by one of his campaign workers. According to Rosengarth, candidates are responsible for the conduct of their workers as well as their own conduct.

Early Friday morning, March 26, Guarino appealed to the Election Commission's findings to Dean of Students Rev. Robert Martin, O.S.A., who reversed the Commission's decision without consulting its members.

Late Friday afternoon, at the request of the Election Commission, Martin met with them to reconsider his decision. Martin then proceeded to reverse his decision of that morning, sustaining the Commission's original decision against Guarino.

Guarino did not immediately comply with Martin's reversal of his decision, and did not take down the posters by the stipulated deadline of noon Saturday. The Commission then issued a second infraction against Guarino, according to Rosengarth.

According to Guarino, he did not comply with the reversal of Martin's decision because he was not contacted by Martin personally.

"If the rules had stated "fair market value" it would be different and less ambiguous," added Guarino.

"Martin has thrown a wrench in the whole process, and I don't feel the process has been fair. To take the posters down, put them up again, and take them down again was an exhausting and frustrating effort. I would rather have complied with the Commission the first time rather than to have Fr. Martin give me false hopes."

Network '82 Conference Held

By MARY STEPHENSON AND LEONARD J. LaBARTH

Network '82, a communications conference examining the field of professional and non-professional communications, was held Thursday, March 25.

Stressing the importance of "communications as a profession, as an art form, and as an irreplaceable medium for interpersonal relationships" the conference featured a panel of communicators including Robert Smith, dean of communications and theatre at Temple University and Edwin Guthman, editor of the Philadelphia Inquirer.

Sponsored by the Villanova Alumni Association in conjunction with the Office of Public Relations, the conference attracted Villanova alumni, students, faculty, and administrators as well as representatives and other area colleges.

According to Director of the Alumni Association, Robert Capone, who organized the event, "the conference was a success."

"The make-up of the audience was exactly what we had hoped for," said Capone, "It was a good mixed audience. The attendance was up to our expectations."

At a morning session, Smith discussed the role of education in communication and its "vocational roles" as well as "creative components."

He pointed out that the general public could complete the slogan "Don't Squeeze the Charmin" more often than they could correctly name their own Senator. Smith attributed this fact to "repetition."

Other points covered in his speech concerned the credibility of such television personalities as Ed Asner and Jack Klugman in areas of foreign policy and medicine. Smith questions their knowledgeability about these subjects and their comments upon them.

"Well-known personalities are believable in the public eye," said Smith, "This is due to an actor's ability to communicate with the public where the expert fails."

He concluded his presentation by stressing the need to adapt advertising to the individual tastes and socioeconomic levels of the audience. (Continued on page 6)

Run-off Slated for Presidency

Yesterday's student body presidential elections ended with no candidate having the required 40 percent of the votes.

Election officials announced last night that there will be a run-off election between John Pisano and Paul Tufano.

Voting will be next Tuesday (April 6) between 10:00 a.m. and 4:00 p.m. in Bartley cafeteria. All students are eligible to vote.

The VILLANOVAN will print complete election results in its next issue, April 16, 1982.

Senate Resolution Passed

By LEONARD J. LaBARTH

In an attempt to facilitate communication between the administration and the University Senate, the Senate has passed a resolution that calls for a formal question and answer period at the beginning of each Senate meeting.

At the Oct. 16, 1981 meeting, the Rules and Review Committee brought to motion the resolution with the rationale that "the sharing of the information, especially in the Senate, can enable it to act more responsiy and intelligently to the issues at hand." The resolution passed 15-10-1 with the chair abstaining.

According to Dr. Richard Neville, chairman of the Senate Rules and Review committee, the resolution allows for a sharing of information in a forum such as the Senate.

"This is an endeavor to share information," said Neville. "Hopefully, information that might be misunderstood or instances when all the data was not received, can be understood better."

The resolution — US 8182-3-16 reads:

"That the Senate shall adopt, as an internal operation of the Senate, a formal question and answer period at the beginning of each Senate meeting. These questions will deal with official actions and policies of the University administration, will be deposited with the Executive Committee by any Senator, and up to five questions will be placed on the agenda of each Senate meeting by the Executive meeting.

"Those questions will be published at least one week in advance of the meeting and will specify to which administrative officer they are directed. Answers may be submitted to the Senate in person or in writing. Answers will be published as part of the Senate minutes. Questions need not be related to any specific resolution then being considered by the Senate."

The motion for the question and answer period was defeated when originally brought to the Senate two years ago. Neville theorized that the reason why the motion was originally defeated was due to disagreement by the administration, to whom the questions would be directed.

"The compelling argument against the motion was that the administration was going to be the only body being questioned," said Neville.

For a student to submit a question for an administrative answer, he must first present it to his Senator who will in turn, bring it to the attention of the Executive Committee. The executive Committee will screen it and refer it to the administrative officer.

"The Senate should be perceived as being more helpful in getting information," said Neville. "It is important that the students and faculty be aware of this opportunity to question."

Beautification Planned

By BETH BONINA

In an attempt to improve the appearance of the campus, long range recommendations have been proposed by the University Senate in a project called "Green Acres."

The original draft, drawn up by the committee in 1977, sought improvements in five areas: parking, lighting, fences, shrubbery, and paving. A sixth category, aesthetic recommendations, covers any specific recommendation not classified in the other five areas.

Currently, the chairperson of the committee is Dr. Emily Binns, of the Religious Studies department. Other members include Mr. William J. McNichol of the Civil Engineering department, Fr. Patrick J. Rice, Vice President for Administration, Thomas Trucks, Director of Maintenance, and two students, John Couzens and Margaret Eggert.

According to Carolyn Lea, the recording secretary for the Senate, the last meeting on record was April 23, 1981. However, she said that there may have been meetings this year that she has yet to be informed of. Couzens and Eggert were named to the committee on November 17, 1981.

Concerning the recommendation for parking, improvements include the possibility of fencing along the main parking lot on Lancaster Avenue with shrubs in front of it. Also, the proposal calls for the closing of the Bartley-Sullivan parking lot, returning it to bushes and grass, and possibly permanent picnic tables, while increasing the size of the lower Bartley parking lot.

The "Green Acres" proposals for fencing include the removal of fences that are "inadequate or detract from the beauty of the campus." This includes the fence along Lancaster Avenue that requires barbed wire to keep it intact. "We suggest that all barbed wire existing on any fence at Villanova be removed and that no barbed wire be permitted to be used in the future," according to the long range recommendations.

In the area of shrubbery, recommendations include the restoration of the quad area to grass and shrubs, following the closing of the Bartley — Sullivan parking lot. "We maintain this to be an excellent area place to create a park-like atmosphere, including the planting of shrubbery, grass, and trees, and the placing there of permanent picnic tables."

According to "Green Acres," it is necessary to repair certain paths and sidewalks due to crumbling. Paving areas of common use, such as the dirt paths in the grotto area, and establishing the area of sidewalks where appropriate are among some of the considerations in this area.

The lighting division calls for the change from mercury lighting, which is currently used, to sodium lighting.

The report explains that the concern for campus beauty is a cherished tradition at Villanova and the appearance of the grounds is an unmatched and unique form of public relations with parents and prospective students.

Senate Passes Frosh Proposal

By DAVID POMA

The University Senate has passed a resolution from the Student Life Committee stating that "all non-commuting freshmen be given the opportunity to reside on campus."

The motion, presented by Student Body President Bob Rosengarth, would guarantee all elligible incoming freshmen housing on campus for the first year. After that, they would enter the lottery system with the rest of the student population vying for on-campus residences.

Rosengarth introduced the resolution because he was concerned with the situation faced by incoming freshmen. "It's very hard to adjust from the dependent kind of life you have during high school to a totally independent life in college," he said.

Rosengarth added that if a freshman has to face living off campus, the situation of going to school in a strange area becomes more difficult. He also pointed out that many Villanova applicants apply to the same schools, notably Georgetown University, Boston College, and the University of Pennsylvania. All of these schools guarantee housing on campus, which seems to be a significant advantage over Villanova, according to Rosengarth.

Dean of Students Father Robert J. Martin, O.S.A., agreed that the motion is a positive step. "Ideally, it's in the university's best interest to have as many residents on campus as possible, especially freshmen," said Martin. He explained the old system of housing freshmen. "It used to be that the freshmen who were lucky enough to get on campus for their first year were guaranteed housing for the second year," said Martin.

While Martin believes that it is a good idea to house as many freshmen as possible, he does have some apprehensions. He explained, "My concern is that prospective freshmen will ask themselves whether Villanova is attractive if we guarantee housing only for their first year."

Liquor License Shouldn't be Sold

With the election of a new student body president and senators this week, one could not help but notice a common campaign promise among the candidates: a less stringent alcohol policy.

Let's look back a few years when the alcohol policy at Villanova was more lenient. If you will recall, in September 1978, the Liquor Control Board (LCB) raided a "Cat's Eye," which was a Villanova party. Four Villanova students were arrested and charged with serving liquor without a license. Since then, the University has adopted a "get tough" policy towards alcohol.

Realistically, Villanova cannot support serving liquor on campus without a liquor license. After all, it is against the law.

And to remind us that things have not changed, the LCB raided a party at Rosemont College a few weeks ago and arrested six students for dispensing liquor without a license.

So how do all these presidential and sentorial hopefuls plan to serve alcohol at Villanova? One must have a liquor license to do that.

But, wait. Villanova does have a liquor license.

Over a year ago, Villanova purchased a liquor license for the Connelly Center. Then Vice-President for Student Life Rev. John Deegan, O.S.A., stated, "We might be able to resurrect the Cat's Eye or Monday night football kind of thing." Optimism spread across campus.

But, wait again. Villanova is presently attempting to sell the liquor license.

According to Dr. Richard Neville, vice-president for student life, "It (the license) doesn't seem to be in the best interest of the students." He continued, "It would benefit too few students."

Although roughly 25 percent of the students at Villanova are over 21, that is hardly "too few" to justify a pub.

A rathskeller on campus would provide upperclassmen with a place to meet and socialize. The presence of a pub would help eliminate the need for students to go off campus to socialize. This could reduce the ever-present hazard of alcohol-related car accidents. A pub on campus could unify graduating classes by bringing them together in a relaxed social atmosphere.

A year ago, Marc Tuchman, director of the Connelly Center, said that a liquor license would be, ". . . an important improvement to the whole alcohol program and would be . . . a natural outgrowth of the program."

Clearly, the advantages of having a pub on campus by far outweigh any disadvantages.

Villanova finally has an opportunity to bring alcohol on campus legally, but is throwing this chance away.

If this year's student body president and senators want to keep their campaign promises regarding alcohol, they must act quickly before the liquor license is lost forever.

Congratulations to Women's B-Ball

Although everyone on campus is aware of the impressive performance turned in by the Villanova men's basketball team in this year's NCAA Tournament, many have overlooked the equally fine effort produced by the Wildcats of the Villanova women's basketball team.

The women captured the EAIAW Tournament crown by stopping seventh-ranked Rutgers in the championship game at the Field House. The Cats then advanced to the AIAW National Tournament at the Palestra before bowing to the Scarlet Knights of Rutgers, 83-75, in the semi-finals.

The team and Coach Harry Paretta are to be commended and congratulated for this season's exceptional accomplishments. It is indeed rare when a university is so well represented in the sphere of athletics on both the men's and women's levels. We are fortunate to have a basketball program of such caliber here at Villanova.

Letters to the Editor

R.O.T.C.

To the Editor:

Last Friday night at approximately 10 p.m. outside of John Barry Hall I observed what I consider to be an insult to this University. As I came around the corner of the building, a yellow van pulled up on the front sidewalk and out piled five or six ROTC students (Identified because of their hair and the fact that I've seen a few of them before). These people, and I use the term lightly, then proceeded to urinate on the front steps of John Barry Hall. If this is the type of respect for the University that the ROTC program teaches, then perhaps it should be sent somewhere else. The event speaks for itself.

Criticism

Dear Editor:

This letter is in response to your persecution of the two senators, Diane Sansone and Tee Hoyne, in last week's Villanovan (3/26/82). Granted, the absence of the two senators at the meeting concerning the important issue of the budget had serious consequences for the University and they are deserving of censure for their conduct. However, the vicious assault leveled at them in your paper was totally uncalled for.

We cannot speak for Ms. Hoyne; however, we are familiar with Diane Sansone's work in the Senate. You complain that they have not fulfilled their responsibilities, yet you have blatantly shirked your obligations as well. It is essential that a responsible publication present both sides of an issue or event. It is rank sensationalism to savagely assault these two people without asking them for a comment in their defense. Not once was Diane approached by your pseudo-reporting staff. Also, no mention of her past record as a senator was mentioned. Diane seriously took her role as a senator and had in fact never missed any previous Senate meeting.

Before you take it upon yourselves to act as an omniscient judge, get the facts straight. Indeed, an improvement would be to get the facts at all and give her a chance to defend herself at the same time you judge her, rather than a post-mortem a week later.

We feel the Villanovan should publish an apology and endeavor to improve its journalistic technique in the future.

Dear Editor:

The opinions I have taken show me that this paper has presented irresponsible journalism. Last week, the editors and writers of this paper had a great time humiliating two of our senators. Granted, the two senators were in the wrong, but there is something called over-doing it.

The paper gave the impression to the readers that if the two senators had been present, the budget proposal would have been rejected. Guess again. If they had been present, the proposed budget still would have passed.

What amuses me is the "true opportunity" to affect the University budget. The attitude that the outcome of this vote has a serious impact on the Board of Trustees is absurd. The Board of Trustees have the final decision. We know from past experience that the Board of Trustees doesn't always vote in favor of the students' feelings.

No doubt, the two senators should have been at the meeting. But the way in which the Villanovan blew the whole incident out of proportion, you would think the senators were guilty of a serious crime. These two senators took a genuine interest in Villanova, which is more than I can say about most people here. They have devoted a lot of time to serving the students. Contrary to the view of the editorial, the senators are only human and cannot always do the right thing. (Your track record this semester isn't perfect, either). One mistake should not overshadow their fine service to the men and women of Villanova.

Drop-Add

To the Editor:

This is an appeal to whoever is responsible for the change of our much loved drop-and-add sessions from the fall to the spring. It's a good thought, but I'm afraid it won't work.

First of all, only half the procedure has been changed. We all know that there are many cases where a student is able to take a course from another department as an elective but isn't able to get approval from that department until the fall. The reason for this is to assure that the students who need it for a requirement are able to recieve it. This is justifiable, but we also know that there is plenty of room for these students as well as those who would like to take them as an elective. Since we have to hand in a final schedule this spring and we can't get approval until the fall, we don't have those options any more and it cuts down our free electives to about half of those in previous semesters. I guess it's back to basket weaving and art classes when we could have had accounting and business computers.

It makes me so frustrated to pay so much money and recieve so much incompetency.

It's probably one of the few things at this school we get and don't ask for. Let's bring back the old drop-add.

Nuclear Symposium

To the Editor:

I was shocked, disappointed and frankly, embarrassed Tuesday evening at the symposium on nuclear power sponsored by the University. As someone who is quite concerned about the subject of nuclear energy and its inherent problems, I expected to hear an intellectual discussion of the issues. Instead I was subjected to a "roadshow" which was arranged by the Philadelphia Electric Company (PECO).

Although PECO is building the Limerick nuclear power generating station 22 miles from Villanova, the plant was never mentioned. Nor was its projected $5 billion cost, lack of cooling water supply, or newly proposed financing scheme CWIP (construction work in progress). CWIP will charge ratepayers for the cost of the plant years before it is completed or generating electricity.

We did hear, however, about the Soviet Union, OPEC, the starving millions of the Third World and the forthcoming Third World War as a result of us not "going nuclear." The tone of the discussion was very emotional, something the pro-nuclear forces often accuse the opposition of resorting to. In addition, when the subject of nuclear power was finally discussed (briefly), we were fed outright lies. For instance, we were told that a new plant constructed today (with the "unnecessary safety equipment") could provide electricity at six cents/kwh. PECO's expert witness has testified before the Public Utilities Commission that the long term cost of Limerick will be about $17 billion, or 14 cents/kwh.

To add insult to injury, the question-and-answer period was totally unfair. Instead of answering questions from the floor, cards were distributed and questions collected from the audience. The panel then chose questions and answered them with non-specific, emotional, soothing responses designed to put our worried minds at ease.

In short, the symposium was nothing more than a sales pitch for PECO and nuclear power, with no free exchange of ideas or discussion. I would like to know the interest of Villanova in promoting nuclear energy. Are they a large stockholder in PECO, or did the College of Engineering get a large grant in exchange for the opportunity to come onto our campus and force this propaganda down our throats? As stated, I am embarrassed, and the people involved in this forum should be also. It was a disgrace to Villanova.

Dear Editor:

In reference to the March 19 article, "Teller Speaks on Energy," I would like to say that I feel the Villanovan misrepresented the atmosphere of the symposium. The article says that the symposium was sponsored by Villanova University in conjunction with PECO and SE2, but it seemed clear that PECO solicited Villanova to provide such an "informative" salespitch for the benefit of the student body, and indeed paid for the extensive advertising campaign.

Furthermore, I feel that Ms. Whalen and Ms. Henry did not give Dr. Crabtree the credit due him. It was not mentioned in the article the defensive attitude taken by the panel when Dr. Crabtree made a brief speech in favor of the opposition. This seemed to provide for the only "controversy" of the evening, when Mr. Todorovich objected and actually tried to deny him the podium.

Finally I would like to say that as one of the two only "sign carriers," I resent being referred to as a "heckler." I attended the symposium with an open mind and regardless of my own feelings I was willing to listen politely to the viewpoint of the panelists, who are certainly more knowledgeable on the subject than I am; my sign spoke for itself. I was surprised at the slant of the symposium, but I did not yell out or "heckle;" the symposium only served to increase my personal feelings on the matter.

In the future I hope that the Villanovan will be able to provide a clearer account of such "controversial" issues.

Arlene M. Digan

Dear Editor:

To date, you have published only those editorials which have criticized the March 19 nuclear "symposium." Is it possible that the Villanovan, too, is presenting a one-sided argument?

I am a person who is adamantly against nuclear weapons and the so-called "arms race." I do not, however, confuse these isues with that of nucelar power. Dr. Crabtree and others should try to make this distinction between nuclear power and nuclear weaponry.

Nuclear power will lessen our dependence on fossil fuels. In turn, our country will better be able to manipulate its international economic stability. Surely most people would agree that unstable economic times increase the probability and desire of war, arms, and arms races. This fact should lead us to advocate nuclear power, which after proper implemenation will lessen international desire for an arms race.

It should be known that nuclear power plants do not "automatically" produce arms. It is possible to adopt nuclear power capability without nuclear arms capability.

The major misconception of people today, in America, is to associate arms and power generation under the common term "nuclear." There should be an effort made to intelligently differentiate between nuclear power and nuclear weaponry.

Budget Cuts

Dear Editor:

This letter should actually be addressed to our honorable President Ronald Reagan. However, in his busy day of budget cutting he would never find the time to read this letter. Therefore, I bring it to the attention of the American people.

During these times of a shrinking pie, it is apparent that we all must tighten our fiscal belts, and in many ways I agree with the virtues of supply side economics. However, more important is the course our American society is taking; that is to say that Mr. Reagan is trading off long-term benefits to hopefully obtain short-term gains. This ideology cannot survive and is disproven in industry every day. Our industry has learned that certain short-term decisions seem profitable but in the long run brought on financial uncertainties.

Mr. Reagan is willfully cutting back government support of the American educational system; however, his use of this double-edge sword will in the future prove unwise. There is so much other government waste that can be eliminated than to cut our only hope for a peaceful and prosperous future.

On Campus

By Charles Guida and Irene Smith

In light of the student government elections held this week, the Villanovan asked students on Tuesday: Are you planning on voting in the student government elections (yesterday)? Why or why not?

"Yes, I always vote. I want to see if they are going to do what they promise. They should have the responsibility to keep their promises, so the budget vote incident doesn't happen again."

Jim Aitcheson
Junior, Finance

"Yes, it's important that students be represented, and in order to be recognized, you have to vote."

Lisa Finnell
Junior, Sociology

"No, I am not going to vote. The student government is nothing more than something for someone to put on their resume, and I won't vote until the student government does something worthwhile for the students of Villanova."

Arty Wasson
Sophomore, Accounting

"Sure, because it's important to be involved in the S.G.A. elections. They are representing us, so it is important to voice our opinions in order to be represented properly."

Maureen McCafferty
Sophomore, English

"Yes, because I want to have somebody who will represent what the students think and who will take affirmative action, so we don't have another incident like last week."

Roberta Donaghue
Junior, Administrative Science

"No, because I don't think that I know the people who are running, and I don't think the functions of the offices are important to the school."

Network '82

The Director of the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce, Thacher Longstreth was next on the agenda. Longstreth, long a Philadelphia politician and businessman, discussed the impact of T.V. upon the ability of corporations to communicate.

"I envision a network of several thousand business corporations which would promote an easier mode of communication for the future," said Longstreth.

"There will be a marriage of computer and communications media," predicted Longstreth. He feels that the capacity to utilize a communication satellite will soon be available to the general public.

Longstreth also said that "television games are a bridge to accomplish this revolution in communications. Pac-man is an important socioeconomic factor in our society today."

At the luncheon, approximately ninety people turned out to listen to Inquirer Editor Guthman.

Following an introduction by Father President John Driscoll, Guthman spoke of the "on-going revolution in journalism."

"People demand more information — information that is accessible, accurate and well-presented," said Guthman. "Man cannot conduct his life intelligently and communicate without free press."

"Occasionally, we're going to have some problems," said Guthman "But, by and large, a reporter's investigation has been checked and double-checked. We must work harder. The commitment to seek the truth must be met. This is the real challenge."

Guthman, who had won a Pulitzer Prize and was an aide to the late Sen. Robert Kennedy, emphasized that the American press is the freest in the world.

Following the luncheon, the conference featured Richard Winfield and J. William Jones, both alumni and former editors of the Villanovan.

One major point which Winfield presented dealt with the increasing ability to receive remote programming by satellite. He foresees the "Marriage of satellite with cable television," and is concerned with the significant constitutional aspects involved in terms of regulating access of satellites.

Emphasizing that "education makes the difference," J. William Jones, director of information services for the Philadelphia school district, concluded the conference's presentations with a discussion of the future of public schools.

Concerning communications, Jones said, "the media, by its nature, covers controversy. The American public wants to read about sensation."

Jones made a correlation with education by stressing a need for the media to give equal coverage to the positive aspect of our school system. Jones said there is a difficulty in attaining recognition for their impressive accomplishments.

Student Life Helps Protestors

By JOHN JACKSON

Villanova University's Office of Student Life, in conjunction with the Financial Aid Office has circulated a poster urging students to write to their congressmen in protest of financial aid cuts.

The Dean of Students office is also providing paper, envelopes, addresses a form letter, and even stamps, to try and make the letter writing campaign as easy as possible for the students.

Highlights of the letter suggested by the office of student life include a plea that "The extreme loss of aid dollars, coupled with the inflation induced rise in attendance costs will force many students to leave the University. It is our firm belief that investment in the education of our people must be differentiated from the expense of government operation."

The Dean of Students office reports that the response to the letter writing effort has been medium to good, but could be better. Approximately 100 letters have been written.

Arthur Switzer, of the Financial Aid Office, said, "The letter writing campaign had to be tried, because it was one avenue that might work." Switzer continued,

"It is very important that the students and their parents write to their congressmen, because people who represent the University are not listened to; our complaints are discounted."

Switzer acknowledged that education is not the only area in the federal budget that is being reduced. However, Switzer said, "That is why the letters are so important the squeaky wheel gets the oil."

Many private colleges and universities have begun to use a student's ability to pay for his education as a consideration for admissions. Switzer said "Right now, Villanova has no such policy . . . Admissions and financial aid are strictly separate." However, Switzer mentioned that he could not be certain about the future.

Switzer also stated that small schools like Villanova are particularly affected by the financial aid cuts, for they are not heavily subsidized, like many large state schools. Instead, most of the expenses of a small private school are paid for directly by the students.

A Celebration of the Physical

By GREG ANTON

Personal Best reveals the many complexities and conflicts encountered while one searches for self-realization. This human struggle, however, has always been equated with the male's struggle. Personal Best transcends this repressive status quo and beautifully explores the equally intense struggle of the female. Robert Towne's screenplay conveys the universal element involved when one embarks on a search for self. This realistic quality makes Personal Best an extremely appealing film.

Towne uses the world of female athletic competition as a microcosm. Here the grueling demands of training and competing drain a woman so much that she must know who she is and what she wants or else all her efforts and sacrifices become meaningless. Personal Best is the story of two pentathletes, Chris Cahill (Mariel Hemingway) and Tory Skinner (Patrice Donnelly), and their four years spent together as they train for the 1980 Olympic Games. Initially, they meet as strangers at the 1976 U.S. Olympic Trials. Tory, the older, more seasoned competitor consoles Chris after she performed poorly. From here, their relationship develops and the two become friends, lovers, and eventually, competitors.

Although they do develop a lesbian relationship, the movie's main theme is not homosexuality. Rather, Personal Best is about personal growth achieved through athletic competition and the physical beauty of an athlete's body; a woman athlete's body. Discipline, determination, and desire compel these two women to achieve all that they can: their personal best. The relationship is one of love and respect; it is a romance. It celebrates the emotional and physical bond of teammates. Eventually this bond is broken by the demands of competition. As Chris matures and begins to discover her own individual identity, she breaks apart from Tory. Soon, the camaraderie and competition is transformed into a fierce and bitter rivalry.

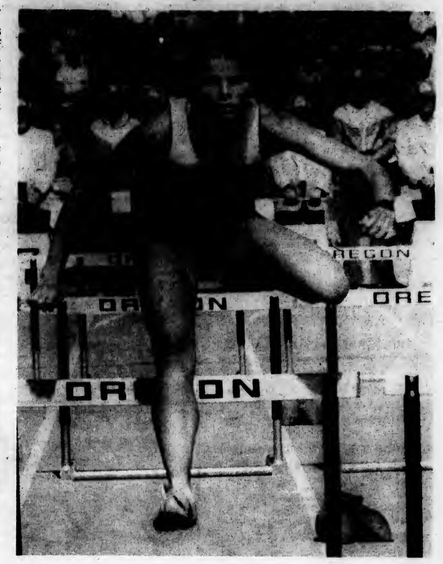
Patrice Donnelly makes her acting debut in the movie. Once a world-class pentathlete, Donnelly seemed to be a natural for the part. She convincingly conveys the embarrassment, awkwardness, eroticness, loyalty, and love Tory feels. Donnelly carries with her a powerful gracefulness that is evident in every scene in which she appears. She took on an extremely challenging, delicate, and virtually unprecedented role and gives a remarkable performance. Perhaps Donnelly can be thought of as the epitome of the strong, graceful and beautiful female athlete.

Hemingway is equally as good. Her portrayal of Chris Cahill highlights her many acting and athletic abilities. Hemingway trained for a year as a pentathlete in order to make the movie. She possesses great athletic ability, agility and flexibility. Her acting continues to improve as her young career continues to blossom. Hemingway depicts the innocence of Chris and also expresses her confusion and uncertainty. Her performance especially conveys the lack of the killer instinct in Chris. Hemingway is a very powerful actress, as well as an athlete, and her ability to successfully juxtapose this power and Chris' trepidation reflects her versatility. At times, her youthful whininess becomes grating, yet seems to add to Chris' character.

Much of Personal Best's appeal lies in its realism. The athletic performances are phenomenal and the camera captures their artistic beauty. Most of the actors are or were world-class athletes. Also, the emotions of Tory and Chris are dealt with honestly and openly. The sexual frankness throughout the movie is a tribute to the beauty of a female's body.

Scott Glenn gives a fine performance as Terry Tingloff, the women's coach who strives to bring out the unlimited potentials of the female athlete. Tingloff tries to expand the physical frontier of a woman. Glenn brings much humor to the movie and his often aloof character masterfully bridges the gap between Tory and Chris. Kenny Moore, a writer for Sports Illustrated, appears in the film as Denny Stites, a swimmer and water polo player who becomes Chris' boyfriend. He too is making his acting debut and gives a solid performance.

Towne has instilled his personal touch throughout thefilm. He directed and produced the movie so his story would retain its original context and could develop in the manner he wanted. Personal Best is a revolutionary movie which is bold and daring. It is much welcomed in this day of trivial complacency. Personal Best deals openly, honestly, maturely, and most importantly, realistically about human sexuality, athletic competition, and personal growth.



Mariel Hemingway: a blossoming lioness.

Policemen Have a Ball

By DEAN C. BALSAMINI

The Secret Policeman's Other Ball is a welcome addition to anyone's album collection. What is The Secret Policeman's Other Ball, you ask? Well, two years ago an album called The Secret Policeman's Ball was released. It consisted of various artists such as composer John Williams, Peter Townshend, Tom Robinson and John Cleese. This album, the "Other Ball," was recorded at the fourth Gala, produced biannually to raise funds for the British branch of the world-wide human rights organization, Amnesty International.

Sting, of the Police

Bob Geldof, of the Boomtown Rats

The shows are organized by John Cleese of Monty Python fame, and originally showcased Britain's top comedians. But since The Secret Policeman's Ball went over well featuring primarily musicians, "The Other Ball" features exclusively musicians. And what musicians they are!

Featured are Sting of The Police, Jeff Beck, Eric Clapton, Donovan, Phil Collins of Genesis, and Bob Geldof and Johnny Fingers of The Boomtown Rats. The album is unique in that it is a chance to hear some of today's most renowned artists playing live versions of their hit songs. Also, it is a chance to hear versions of the songs that are somewhat different than how they sound on vinyl.

As for highlights on this album, there are many. Jeff Beck and Eric Clapton perform three songs including Stevie Wonder's 'Cause We've Ended As Lovers and Crossroads. This writer has to admit that although I am not one for guitar solos, Beck and Clapton are a joy to listen to. The two perfectly complement one another. Clapton's voice on Crossroads is Clapton at his best and conjures up fond memories of when he, Ginger Baker and Jack Bruce made up that influential trio called Cream.

Eric Clapton

Phil Collins performs The Roof Is Leaking and In The Air Tonight, the hit off of his latest solo effort, Face Value. Collins, who is the lead singer of Genesis, is quite versatile. One may remember him also as the band's drummer. On this album, Collins plays piano admirably while proving that he is rather capable and a force on his own.

Donovan — remember him (?) — performs Catch the Wind and the Buffy St. Marie song called The Universal Soldier. The latter song was well-received by the audience as Donovan sings about the travesty of war and what it holds for soldiers all over the world. The song is poignant in that it is sung by a musician who lived through the turbulent times of the late 60s and early 70s, when Vietnam was ingrained in the consciences of people everywhere. Donovan was the epitome of the sensitive introspective artist then.

Phil Collins of Genesis

There is no letdown on this album as every song throughout is quite good. It's really hard to pick out one highlight over another. But if a choice has to be made, the two best are that of Bob Gelof and

'Deathtrap': A Quest for Clues

By PETE BERKERY

In recent years, the film industry has not produced many old-fashioned murder mysteries. For those moviegoers who have missed such exciting thrillers, Deathtrap is a must. The plot is extremely intricate; the unusual setting adds an aura of mystery; and the action is spellbinding. The film is based on the play of the same name, written by Ira Levin, which is the most successful thriller in the history of Broadway.

Much of the action and dialogue in the film occurs between the two main protagonists, veteran playwright Sidney Bruhl, portrayed by Michael Caine, and his young brainy protege Clifford Anderson, portrayed by Christopher Reeve. Sidney Bruhl was once extremely successful and his house is full of unusual weapons, many of which were used in his famous plays. Unfortunately, his last four plays have been flops and he is in desperate need of a hit. Clifford Anderson, who once met Sidney at one of his writing seminars, has written a very good mystery and wants Sidney to look it over for him. Sidney, who has cheerfully admitted that he would kill for a hit, invites the young Clifford over to his house, and from there the fun begins.

In adapting a play such as "Deathtrap" to the screen, the challenge for both the actors and the film's director, Sidney Lumet, is to make the characters believable. The film contains only six characters, one of whom is Sidney's lawyer, who appears for about five minutes. The remaining five characters must be convincing in order to make the film captivating and suspenseful. No detective arises to piece together the puzzle; rather, the audience becomes the sleuth who must decipher, analyze, and evaluate the various clues each character clearly and distinctly reveals which will eventually allow one to solve the mystery. Deathtrap succeeds because of the first-rate performances of the actors and captures the audience's interest and attention for the suspense continues to build until the very end. In fact, few will be able to sucessfully piece together the intricate puzzle until all of the action has transpired.

The movie starts out rather slow because the complex plot takes time to develop. However, once the action begins, the scenes become fast and furious. Several twists occur in the plot, including a surprising kiss, and one must pay close attention in order to successfully follow the sequence of events. Often the tension builds to a feverish pitch, but comic relief is timely provided by Sidney's over-active wife, played by Dyan Cannon, and Sidney's psychic neighbor, Helga. Helga appears to have mystical powers and possesses an uncanny ability to reveal facts that prove to be embarrassing for Sidney.

Deathtrap challenges the mind of the viewer and for those who enjoy such a challenge, Deathtrap will prove to be very entertaining. Thrills and chills are provided without a lot of blood and gore all at the expense of the viewer's stomach. The talented group of actors, who have many years of theatre experience, portray their characters with all the electricity, emotion, and spirit of a live performance. This rare quality makes Deathtrap an unusually engaging film.

Johnny Fingers of The Boomtown Rats and Sting of The Police. Geldof sings I Don't Like Mondays with the appropriately named Fingers accompanying on piano. If you liked the studio version (and why shouldn't you?), you'll love this version. There are no backup vocals, just that of the solitary Geldof giving an animated performance of a bewildered and angry man.

As for Sting — he is indescribable. Even if one does not care for any of the other artists, just his solo performance of Roxanne merits picking up this album. The song, already a classic, is a three-minute and six-second love-starved cry into the night. Sting is to the '80s what Peter Townshend of The Who was to the '60s and '70s.

Overall, The Secret Policeman's Other Ball is a smash album that has something for everyone. Judging by the performance given by the various artists, it shall be a secret no longer.

Nighthawks Shake, Rattle, and Roll

By PETER CAPIZZI

The Nighthawks with special guest Guitar Junior played to an enthusiastic audience on March 26 at the Bijou Cafe. No, the Nighthawks are not a new and upcoming Philadelphia band or a trendy new-wave band, they are an established rhythm and blues band from B-town, Maryland. The Nighthawks, Jim Thackery (lead guitarist), Jan Zukowski (bass), Pete Ragusa (percussion), and the eighth wonder of the world, Mark Wenner on harmonica, are all well acquainted with the world of blues. Guitar Junior, a former veteran guitarist of the Muddy Waters band, is an expert showman and legendary Chicago blues guitarist.

The Bijou provided the perfect atmosphere: a small club, a sold-out show, a fantastic band that takes control of the atmosphere from the first second they appear on stage. Jim Thackery began by showing the crowd a preview of what the night was going to be like. He opened with an instrumental. The band joined in and played two new songs, Push Comes to Shove and Dirty Deelin' Mama. Mark Wenner also showed the crowd his extraordinary talent with the harmonica. Thackery and Wenner began trading licks in Dirty Deelin' Mama which climaxed with them both playing together with fire in their eyes. They do truly enjoy their music and performing to a crowd that responds in the same manner. People were either sitting, standing, jumping, but all were screaming for more. The Hawks then broke into two more songs Back to the City and Pretty Girls and Cadillacs from their nationally released album. Finally, they broke into their rockin' version of Little Sister. Thackery again showed his versatility by displaying his ability to play the guitar with his teeth. He then jumped off the stage and paraded around the floor jamming away. He proceeded to march upstairs and kept right on playing with some interruptions with some Day Tripper and Peter Gunn Theme riffs. After these fabulous instrumentals and the end of Little Sister, Guitar Junior appeared on stage.

Chicago blues at its finest began with Lickin' Gravy, a song off of the Nighthawks album Jack and Kings — Full House. Got to Find a Way to Get My Baby Back and Hideaway revealed more and more of the band's professionalism. Guitar Junior was in rare form strutting his stuff and ripping those guitar chords. Guitar Junior led the band right into 19-years old which forced Thackery to break out the slide-guitar. What a treat it was to see and hear the impromptu slide-guitar licks from a master. They ended their set with Chicago blues played at its finest, the song is King Bee.

The encore included the old Chuck Berry song Little Queenie and Mark Wenner continued from where he left off on the first set with his razor-sharp harmonica lines. The final encore was a Muddy Waters tune 9-Below Zero done in Nighthawks style. Thackery combined all of the power in the earlier instrumentals and gave it all back in this final song. He boasted a one-handed guitar solo, playing behind his back and again showed the crowd his remarkable skill and even played the guitar with his teeth. Needless to say the crowd was sad to see them leave the stage.

Dragons Drop Laxmen

By JOE MARUSAK

Villanova's varsity lacrosse team went right along with the weather this past Wednesday afternoon.

Rain was falling on the turf at Villanova Stadium when the team took to the field against Big Five opponent Drexel. The downpour continued until shortly before the second half, when rays of sun made their way down to the bleachers. However, the gloomy clouds reappeared.

Only fifteen minutes into the game, Drexel had flooded Nova's net with four goals. The Cats made a come-back early in the second period, but it was not enough. The Dragons maintained a wide margin and returned to Philadelphia with an 11-5 victory.

Drew Cunningham, the Villanova goalie, probably would like to forget the first quarter. Drexel's top offensive performers, Scott Carruthers and Jerry Fechter, continually broke through VU's defensive zone to unleash shot after shot on the freshman. The two attackers played a part in each of their team's first four goals. Several minutes into the second quarter, Drexel added another goal.

Then, as the sun broke through the clouds, Villanova went to work. Senior co-captains Kevin McHugh fired a shot right past the Dragon goalie, Steve Nickerson.

Eight seconds later, Wildcat defender Ken Crowley passed to Dan O'Brien who brought the Cats to within three points.

Soon after, a light ran started to fall, and with it, Villanova's chances for a victory also fell. With less than two minutes remaining in the half, Drexel notched two additional goals.

Tom Miller, the freshman attacker for Villanova, opened the second half by scoring off a pass from Ken Delgato, a Lower Merion native. Drexel refused to budge, as Bruce Oswald next scored two in a row for the Dragons.

With :02 left on the third quarter clock, Delgato scored for VU. Still, Lee Stevens' team was trailing, 9-5.

Villanova did not score again. But Drexel did. The Dragons added three more to their total with scores by Oswald, Fechter and Dave Castle.

The Wildcats now must look forward to their next contest tomorrow at 2 p.m. as they host Mount St. Mary's. Hopefully it will not rain.

On the attack: Villanova laxmen took to the field this week versus Drexel in the hopes of breaking out of their early season woes.

Jumbo Elliott's Tale Is Told

By STEPHEN FALLON

James Francis "Jumbo" Elliott did more to promote Villanova University than any other individual did, or for that matter, probably ever will. It was with deep sorrow that the school said their final, "Goodbye" to their track coach of 48 years last March.

The life of Jumbo Elliott has recently been captured in a biography, Jumbo Elliott: Maker of Milers, Maker of Men. Written by Elliott's lifelong friend, Theodore J. Berry, M.D., the book manages to envision the full scope of a complex man.

It depicts James Elliott as the dedicated family man, but one who hated to miss his daily visit to "surrogate families" located in various Main Line taverns. James Elliott the man who was loved by all that knew him, but with a temper which once saw him threaten to sue the entire Pennsylvania Railroad after a baggage mishap in 1954. James Elliott the man who in 1976 was voted track and field "Coach of the Century," yet, was continually overlooked by the U.S. Olympic Committee when selecting coaches for the Olympic team.

Track enthusiasts everywhere will find Dr. Berry's book to be the consummate track account. Managing to catch every facet of the sport, the book also provides a fine history of the Villanova track program. Tracing the dynasty built by Jumbo, Berry touches on everything from the initial "superstars," George Guida and Browning Ross, to the matriculation of current trackmen, Rodney Wilson and Carlton Young. Every great moment in the illustrious history of Villanova track is relived. In fact, one of the book's finest moments comes with the story about the 1979 NCAA Indoor Championship which saw Villanova and the University of Texas El Paso go down to the final race before deciding a champion.

That is not to say that Makers of Milers, Maker of Men is only for track fans. The book has universal appeal; the story of a dedicated man who worked hard to become a winner and worked even harder to remain one. The story line may sound familiar, but the presence of a familiar face freshens it up considerably and any cliches are overlooked. Even the non-sports fan can find inspiration in Jumbo, to him winning was everything; Winning, not on the track, but in life. Jumbo saw to it that each one of his runners developed into a fine man, not just a fine runner. Dr. Berry frequently repeats one of Jumbo's favorite quotes when discussing the molding of athletes into men, "Runners make runners." Jumbo Elliott never stopped running and the runners he made carry their lessons forever.

The book also includes gems of Jumbo's philosophy on life. Jumbo Elliott on winning: "Look like a winner and act like a champ all the time. If you win, be gracious.

Keep your head on. If you lose, don't fall apart and make an ass of yourself. And remember, don't ever go out of your way to humiliate an opponent." Wise advice for any one in any endeavor, and the explanation for how such a fierce competitor could be loved and respected by everyone he knew.

Not all the philosophy is practical, however. Some is just amusing. Jumbo Elliott on appearance: "Don't forget the coat and tie champ. And smile a lot. People will think you know something they don't." It is in these fragments that the reader gets a glimpse into Jumbo Elliott; humor, tenderness, agony, and most of all, the touch of class which marked the life of this great man.

For those that did not have the privilege of knowing James Francis Elliott this book is a reprieve, a chance to be introduced to someone they wished they had known. Those that did know him are reminded just how irreplaceable Elliott was, and how much they miss the man everyone loved to call "Jumbo."

Women Tracksters Burn Big Five

By BEVERLY REILLY

After running under the sunny skies of Florida, the women's track team had no trouble in adjusting to the cold winds at Franklin Field, where the tracksters captured the Big Five Crown last Friday.

The Wildcats outran their closest rivals from West Chester with a score of 107-89.

The impressive team victory was a successful combination of eleven first place honors along with multiple second, third, fourth and fifth place scorers.

In the sprinting events, senior All-American Jennifer Whitfield captured two first places in the 100 meter and 200 meter dashes. Freshman Veronica McIntosh clung to Whitfield for a strong second in the 200 meter dash. Both McIntosh and Whitfield came back to run the 400 meter placing first and second respectively.

In the hurdles, Peggy Stewart and Patty Bradley were another awesome two-woman, two-race duo. In the 100 meter hurdles, Stewart took first followed by Bradley in second. Their roles switched, however, in the 400 meter hurdles. Bradley captured first and Stewart second. Other scores in the event were Valerie Allen and Kathy Heinbach taking fourth and fifth places.

In the middle distance events, the Wildcats continued to run-up the score. In the 800 meter run, Jane Ashton took first while her teammates Amelia Cain and Patty O'Donnell followed as fourth and fifth place scorers. In the 1500 meter run, Wildcats MaryEllen McGowan, Sue Shea, and Sue Cronin scored by taking third, fourth and fifth places respectively.

In the distance events, Shea received individual honors by placing first in the 3000. McGowan, Carol Gilsinger, and EvaMarie Berardi nearly swept the event by capturing third, fourth and fifth places behind Shea. Gilsinger and Berardi also took third and fourth in the 5000.

In the field events, Stewart jumped 5'6" to easily capture first, while Bradley followed in fourth place. However, Bradley also took a first place in the long jump with a distance of 17'-8-1/2". A new Wildcat javelin thrower, Cronin bloomed with her debut in the field event. Cronin set a new school record with a throw of 30.22 meters.

The final score was determined by the relays. The 4x100 meter relay team (Bradley, Whitfield, McIntosh, Stewart) and the 4x400 meter relay team (Bradley, McIntosh, Allen, Whitfield) both captured the gold. The 4x800 meter relay team scored by placing third.

Coach Bob Shoudt was very pleased with the women's performances. Shoudt sums up the Wildcat victory as he states, "It definitely was a tremendous team effort."

Big East Goes Big Time

By JOE BAGLEY

In the wake of three Big East teams reaching the NCAA Regional Basketball Finals and the national publicity it garnered, the Big East, under Commissioner Dave Gavitt will expand the conference in two separate ways.

First, the University of Pittsburgh will become a full-fledged member of the conference starting with the fall semester. Pitt will participate in all sports including the basketball round robin and all championship tournaments. Villanova University Athletic Director Ted Aceto stated, "If it wasn't the University of Pittsburgh being inducted, I don't think there would have been an expansion." Aceto cited Pitt's reputation and geographical location as weighty factors. "With the addition of Pitt, the Big East has a school in every major Eastern Market."

The second expansion deals with championship play. In order to follow NCAA regulations, the Big East will institute a conference championship in soccer. The teams finishing with the four best records will meet at host University of Connecticut to vie for the crown. In addition, women's championship play will expand to include basketball, swimming and diving, tennis, indoor and outdoor track (combined), cross country and volleyball championships.

Aceto is justified in feeling enthusiasm when speaking of the Big East. "I find it (joining the Big East) was probably one of the most positive moves ever for Villanova athletics. In only three years the conference has fostered a great competitive spirit. We're one of the best multi-sport conferences in the nation that also boasts some of the best learning institutions."

Aceto also commented on the increasing power the Big East is gaining in recruiting. "There was an increasing trend towards the good eastern athletes being siphoned off to the Atlantic Coast Conference or the Big Ten. In the past year, though, the two most sought after basketball players in the East, Patrick Ewing and Ed Pinckney, stayed in the East. The Big East had a lot to do with it." It's also just possible that the addition of Pitt and more championships will retain even more top grade athletes for the burgeoning conference.

Season Outlook Bright

By BOB HELLER

The Villanova women's softball team opened their season on March 22 losing 4-0 to a tough Temple University team. Despite this opening loss, Coach Debbie McKee looks forward to a very promising season.

The team this year is very young, but talented, with eight freshmen on the squad. Returning this year as starting pitcher is last year's team MVP, junior Shaula DeMarco. Joining DeMarco on the pitching staff will be two freshmen, Bonnie Bell and Andrea Lair. With the three of them, the team has a very solid pitching staff.

Also returning are outfielders Kathie Beisel, Patti Nowlan and Andrea Burton. Both Beisel, a junior, and Nowlan, a senior and the 1980 team MVP, were unable to play last year due to injuries. With both of them healthy, Coach McKee should have no worries about the team's outfield.

At the backstop position for the Cats will be junior Denise Reid. This is her third year on the team. She will be backed up by reserve catcher and second baseman Sharon Cecchi. The Wildcats infield will consist of Dona Hurley at third base, Ann Hannigan at shortstop, Brenda Walker at second and Marie Wozniak at first. Hurley, Hannigan, and Walker are returnees from last season's squad.

As a whole, the team is much improved defensely. The infield has three experienced players. The outfield has two strong players in Beisel and Nowlan. If they can remain healthy, this season could be one of the best for the team.

Pitching is the team's strong point. "This is the deepest pitching staff I have seen in my years here at Villanova," comments Coach McKee. In addition to last year's MVP, DeMarco, the team will have two outstanding newcomers.

The team will have played their second game against Lafayette on April 1. They will be playing in a doubleheader at home this Saturday against West Chester, starting at 11:00 a.m.

Final Game for Krothe, O'Malley, Ortlip and Vanderslice

Rutgers Ousts Cats from AIAW

By MARIE WOZNIAK

Villanova's quest for a national championship fell one game short as Rutgers beat the Wildcats, 83-75, in the AIAW semifinal Friday night at the Palestra.

Rutgers went on to win the championship with an 83-77 win over top-seeded Texas.

The Villanova women came back on Sunday and captured third place by beating Wayland Baptist, 91-80. Nancy Bernhardt was the high scorer with 28 points. Senior Lisa Ortlip scored 19 in her final game, and Kathie Beisel chipped in 16.

Friday night's Villanova-Rutgers game was the third between the two teams this season. Rutgers won the first meeting in January, and Villanova copped the second one two weeks ago for the regional title. However, in the first half of this tie-breaking game, it looked as if it could go either way.

The teams stayed fairly close throughout the first half until the Wildcats opened up a seven-point lead with 4:00 left. The Lady Knights then came back and erased the deficit to lead, 39-38, at intermission.

Rutgers kept the momentum going by running off six points in a row in the opening of the second half. Although Katie Beisel scored five straight to give Nova a 49-47 lead with 14:08 left, Rutgers answered back with ten straight and led, 57-49, with under 12 minutes to go. The Wildcats never regained the lead after that, and the Lady Knights were on their way to the finals.

Nancy Bernhardt led Villanova in scoring as she has done for most of the season. She scored 20 points this time, and Beisel had 19. Stephanie Vanderslice scored 18 points and dished out 12 assists and Ortlip contributed 13 points and pulled down nine rebounds.

Coach Harry Perretta commented, "They played very well, and we did too. We scored 75 points, and usually, in any of our games, we would have won with that much. They made the shots and one girl, Jennie Hall, had a perfect game." (8-for-8 in field goal attempts, and 8-for-8 from the foul line).

The game was decided on the foul line as Rutgers hit 25 of 28 free throws compared to Nova's 9-for-11, although the Cats scored four more field goals.

This season was the best ever for the women's team at Villanova. With the 29-4 final record came The Wildcats' third straight Big Five title, first Region I title, and the first trip to the final four of the AIAW.

"In the beginning of the season, I felt that we would do well as a team, but didn't really expect to make the final four," said Peretta, "Twenty-nine and four is a very good season."

The Wildcats weren't lacking in individual honors, either. Stephanie Vanderslice was named to the District II Academic All-American team, Lisa Ortlip made the EAIAW and AIAW All-Region teams and shared the Big Five MVP award with Kathie Beisel.

As Perretta concluded, "Overall, it was a very successful season. It's good for the program and for Villanova. In three years, we built the program that went from nowhere to the final four.

Vanderslice, Ortlip, Beisel, and Bernhardt will play for Coach Perretta one more time as members of the Big Five All-Star team.

Team Splits Six-Match Schedule

by DAN HEALY

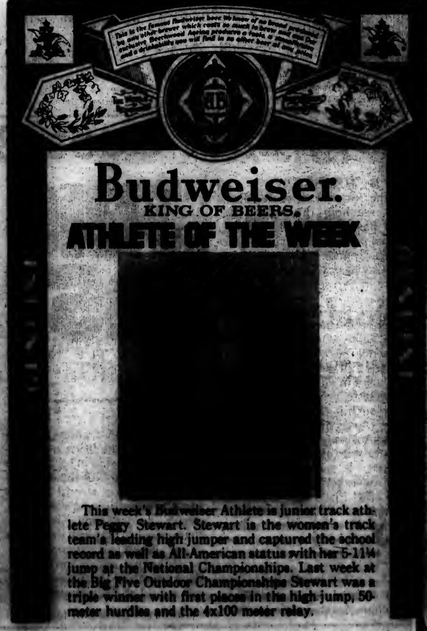
The Villanova tennis team is once again out in full swing. Coached by Political Science professor Dr. Robert Langran, the Cats are anticipating a fine season. Villanova opened its 1981-82 season in late February, participating in an indoor tournament at Lafayette College in Easton, PA. The Wildcats fared quite well, finishing tied for second in the overall standings.

After six matches so far this year, the men's tennis team stands with a record of 3-3.

Senior tri-captain Sean Friel, the team's number three singles player, won all three of his matches, while sophomore Bill Harahan and freshman Larry Gallen, numbers one and two respectively, each won two of their three matches. Rounding out the roster are the following: junior tri-captain Paul Fitzsimmons, sophomore Jon Lee, junior Ross Raggio, and senior tri-captain Bill Monde.

In their regular season opener, the Cats suffered a tough 5-4 defeat at the hands of Howard University. Later that week, however, the victory-hungry squad came back strong to beat LaSalle College 7-2, capturing all of its singles matches. In more recent action, Nova twice tasted defeat in matches versus Towson State and Franklin and Marshall before beating Haverford last Friday by a score of 6-3. Harahan, Gallen, and Fitzsimmons all turned in impressive performances in the win over Haverford.

Maintaining their very hectic schedule, the squad then travelled to New York for weekend matches against St. John's on Saturday, St. Peter's on Sunday, and Fordham on Monday. Playing exceptionally well, the Cats only loss came at the hands of St. John's by a score of 5-1. In their 6-0 victory over St. Peter's, Harahan beat Noel Ogden in straight sets (6-0, 6-0) while Gallen and Lee easily handled their opponents (6-0, 6-1). Friel and Fitzsimmons also handily defeated their opponents in their contribution to the Nova victory. In the Cats 8-1 win over Fordham last Monday, the match was already over after Nova won all six of the singles matches.



This week's Budweiser Athlete is junior track athlete Peggy Stewart. Stewart is the women's track team's leading high jumper and captured the school record as well as All-American status with her 5-11¼ jump at the National Championships. Last week at the Big Five Outdoor Championships Stewart was a triple winner with first places in the high jump, 50-meter hurdles and the 4x100 meter relay.

Tufano Elected President

By KIM RUSHTON

In a run-off election, Paul Tufano was elected Student Body President for 1982-83 on Tuesday, April 6. Tufano received 888 (63.5 percent) of the 1,399 ballots cast in the run-off to win out over John Pisano.

The run-off was held because none of the five presidential candidates received the required 40 percent of the vote in the general election held on Thursday, April 1. In that election, Pisano received 839 (34.9 percent) of the ballots cast, and Tufano received 730 (30.4 percent) Andy Guarino placed third with 482 ballots, followed by Peter Jirak with 217, Chris Young with 82. A write-in candidate, Paul Van Deventer, received 52 votes.

Elected as student senators on April 1 were: Commerce and Finance, Jim Swift and Brian Conners; Science, Gerry Malanga; Engineering, Tom Janisch; and for Arts and Sciences, Marybeth Bogan, John Gardner and Laura Moreno.

Elected as Law School senators was John Eichman, Shauneen Murray was elected Nursing senator, and Paul Van Deventer for University College.

The referendum on the ballot concerning the reinstatement of a varsity football program was favored by 94.1 percent of the voters.

There had been numerous complaints and allegations made by presidential candidates during the campaign period. One of the grievances had concerned presidential candidate Andy Guarino. Two penalties were given to Guarino by the Election Commission as a result of having campaign literature that was valued at more than the alloted presidential campaign budget limit of $100.

Another penalty was issued to candidate John Pisano. The Election Commission had decided that Pisano had been in possession of a defaced Guarino poster.

According to election commission member Bill Monaco, the election turned into "more of a war than an election." He stated that people were not aware of the true issues in the election and that the campaigns at times became "almost name-calling" situations. "It seemed every time we turned around another complaint was being filed. We had a tough time . . . we didn't like to hurt any of the candidates but we knew we had to do it," said Monaco.

Guarino commented, "Unfortunately, the campaign digressed from the important issues, and now that the election is over, I feel we should work together for the common interest of the school.

Presidential candidate John Pisano commented, "Regretfully there were inconsistencies in the way the Commission interpreted the rules and regulations, and the students were easily influenced by unfounded and self-serving accusations."

The results of the run-off were delivered in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall at approximately 9:30 p.m. by Bob Rosengarth, current student body president.

"I feel fantastic; not so much about the title itself, but the fact that I can pursue many of the goals I have worked towards this year," commented Tufano.

When asked how he would explain the upset in light of the fact that Pisano had received more ballots in the general election, Tufano stated that he was "most grateful" for the remaining three candidates endorsing him, most notably Andy Guarino.

Tufano sees his main goal as president as helping students hurt by both rising tuition costs and reductions in student aid, as well as improving communication between the students and the administration.

Zoning Meets Opposition

By LEONARD J. LaBARTH

The Radnor Township Planning Commission voted Monday, April 5, not to recommend Villanova's rezoning of the Morris Tract from Residential R-I to I-Institutional for the eastern part of the 40-acre tract.

The University has applied to change the zoning of about 20 acres to allow for the expansion of intramural playing fields. Residents residing adjacent to the tract are against the zoning change because of the possibility of university dormitory expansion.

Board member Margaret Fawcett introduced the motion, saying she had "qualms" about institutional use and that it could possibly "open a can of worms."

Villanova came before the Radnor Board of Commissioners at a March 22 public meeting that included a number of residents who could be affected by the zoning change. Appearing for the university were Attorney Thomas Witt, Father President John Driscoll, and Rev. John McKenzie, O.S.A., the University's planning director.

Both Driscoll and Witt testified that there are no other plans for the development of the tract proposed for rezoning other than the intramural fields and the possible usage of either Klekota or Donnellon Hall for academic purposes.

In an attempt to convince the commissioners that the University does not have a major building plan for the rezoned tract, McKenzie outlined the University's desire to complete development of the portion of land along S. Ithan Ave. for dorms and food service. The remaining 10 acres of the original 18, can possibly house 700-1,000 students, he said.

"Our hope is that we will have more dormitories and a cafeteria there to meet our needs on that site," reported McKenzie. "We are seeking funds from HUD (Department of Housing and Urban Development) — low interest loans."

Following the University's presentation, questions were asked by members of the board and by the audience.

John Smith, Wistar Rd., noted that if the property on S. Ithan would support 1,000 more beds, then the property up for rezoning would allow 2,000. McKenzie agreed with the numbers but said the University had no such intentions.

Smith then asked if the University would guarantee it had no intention of using any of the Morris tract for housing. McKenzie said that the University's Board of Trustees refused to accept such constraints.

Jon Sieck Jr., head of the group of neighbors in the affected area, said that a zoning change is not needed for Villanova's professed needs. He suggested that the University should seek variances and or special exemptions instead of a rezoning to accomplish its intention for the Morris tract.

"You're essentially asking for a 'blank check,' " Smith said.

"The Board of trustees is insisting on its reasonable rights in law," McKenzie responded.

At the April 5 meeting, Planning Commission Chairman William McCoy asked why the University is not requesting a zoning change for the western part of

Nominees Chosen

By LEONARD J. LaBARTH

Granted on an annual basis to encourage effective teaching on the undergraduate level, the 1982 Lindback Awards will be announced publicly at commencement exercises in May.

The nominees for the two tax-free cash prizes of $1,000 each are: Joseph L. Lucia (Economics), Fritz Nova (Political Science), Bernard P. Prusak (Religious Studies), John F. Stehle (Economics), and Burke T. Ward (Business Law). The two winners of the award will be selected by Father President John Driscoll.

The Christian R. and Mary F. Lindback Foundation makes these Lindback grants available to a select number of colleges in the Delaware Valley. The awards have been granted on an annual basis since 1951.

In the voting held March 15 and 16, 580 seniors, juniors and sophomores and 208 faculty members selected the five nominees. Dr. Joseph George, Jr., of the history department serves as chairman of the committee, which is comprised of members of the Blue Key Society.

"The qualifications are in the eye of the beholder — the voter," said George. "There is no perfect system to the voting. We have other colleges calling asking us how we do the procedure. There have been so many changes in the system. Nobody is satisfied with the system."

According to George, winning the award definitely increases chances for tenure and promotion.

This year's faculty turnout for the vote was almost identical to last year's — about 50 percent. One hundred and five more students turned out this year to nominate candidates. Faculty voting significantly increased in 1981 with the advent of mail-in voting, said George.

Those receiving honorable mention in this year's voting are the following: Emily M. Binns (Religious Studies), Sterling F. Delano (English), John A. Doody (Philosophy), Harry L. Gelman (Accounting), Michael J. Hones (Physics), James W. Klingler (B.A.), Oliver G. Ludwig (Chemistry), June W. Lytel (English), Martin J. Manley (Political Science), Thomas F. Monahan (Accounting), James J. Murphy (English), Teresa A. Nance (Speech), Gaetano N. Pastore (Modern Languages), Bernard Shanley (Religious Studies), David J. Sprowa (Math), James P. Tuck (Psychology), and Barry S. Young (Sociology).

According to Colleen Sullivan, coordinator of the week, it is an exhaustive, thorough, educational experience. "This week is dedicated to educate, to make people aware," said Sullivan. "There is just so much to know. People are not all that knowledgable.

This is needed in this country."

Sullivan, assistant to Dr. John Logue, director of the institute, has spent most of the academic year setting up the event.

"All over the country, similar movements are being sponsored," said Sullivan. "Here, there is a general community interest. Local groups are building around the event."

Ground Zero is a collection of area-wide coordinating groups all over the country whose collective efforts are geared towards making the public aware of its possible final destination point following a nuclear holocaust.

Ground Zero has published a book entitled Nuclear War: What's In It For You? which presents documented information concerning the nuclear arms race

The film, produced by Catholic Peace Fellowship, presents scientists' and doctors' views of the prospects of nuclear war. It will be shown Monday, April 19.

The Lichtenstein Circus will perform 12:30-1:30 on Friday, April 23 on Mendel Field. Along with their circus performances, the two morality plays will be presented.

Senate to Meet This Week

LEONARD J. LaBARTH
AND DAVID POMA

The University Senate will [meet] today at 4 p.m. for its last [regular] meeting of the 1981-82 [school] year.

Following approval of the minutes from the last Senate meeting, Chairman of Faculty Affairs Nicholas Roignone will present a report concerning the process of the periodic evaluation of deans. The results of the recent student go-

Dr. Richard Neville, Chairman of Rank and Tenure Committee. Jeff Page Photo

[Senate] elections will also be announced.

The area receiving the most attention at this meeting will concern constitutional changes [proposed] from various Senate committees. These changes were recommended to update and revise the Committee's operational definitions and responsibilities.

Concerning the Academic Policy Committee, there will be an [elimination] of several subcommittees — the Admissions Committee, Student-Faculty Committee [and] the University Research Policy Committee. With the implementation of these changes, Article VIII, Section 3 of the University Senate Charter will now read:

"The Academic Policy Committee shall have authority to formulate policy for the Senate in academic matters affecting more than one college of the University. This committee shall be assisted in its efforts by the following working subcommittees: Calendar Committee, Library Committee and Scholarship Committee. These committees shall continue to operate in their present form except that they shall become subcommittees of the Academic Policy Committee.

"A new University-wide subcommittee shall be established under the Academic Policy Committee: a University Curriculum Committee. The Academic Policy Committee reserves the right to revise the composition and duties of its subcommittees if it deems this necessary."

For the Rules and Review Committee, chaired by Dr. Richard Neville, Article VII, Section 1 regulating University Senate Committee Structure will be changed. To insure proper representation within the Senate, an addition will read: "In cases where elected committees contain no Senator, the Executive Committee shall add a Senator for that academic year. In these special appointed cases, the Executive Committee should exercise care to ensure the committee is properly balanced."

"The Rules and Review Committee is the watchdog of the Senate and the subcommittees," said Neville. "Changes go through us and are approved by the Senate when deemed necessary."

In addition, the restructuring last year of the Dean of Men's and the Dean of Women's offices into one office has necessitated the following change: "The Student Life Committee shall consist of four members ex-officio: the Student Body President, the Vice-President for Student Life, the Dean of Students, and the Director of Student Activities, plus five students (not more than two being members of the Senate) and two faculty members. At least two of the students must be female and at least two must be male. The committee shall elect its own chairman."

Also scheduled on the agenda for the meeting was the report from the Athletic Advisory Committee in answer to the charge to study and provide the rationale for a recommendation to the Board of Trustees that they reconsider their decision to discontinue the football program. However, an explanatory letter from the committee will ask that the report be delayed for presentation.

Both proposals, if approved, will be referred to Father President Driscoll.

Prof Speaks For Cable TV

By MARY ANNE GRANGER

Cable television, a growing phenomenon and a current issue in Philadelphia, should be used for more than just "fun and games," according to Rev. John O'Rourke, O.S.A., a Villanova professor and a former member of the Mayor's Cable Advisory Commission in Philadelphia.

O'Rourke has been involved with cable television since the 1960s. His efforts to promote cable television have received coverage in The Philadelphia Inquirer.

"I taught here in the 1960s and got involved with closed-circuit TV on campus. Raymond Wilke (a professor here) and I got together to have closed circuit television on campus. We didn't succeed and put that aside. I went to Florida, came back to Philadelphia and wanted to stay away from cable. I worked for Channel 12 — producing "Take 12."

O'Rourke was soon approached by a cable television coalition and he ended up attending several of their meetings, eventually becoming chairman of the coalition. "The city people wouldn't talk to us, so we went to court in 1973 and sued them. We lost that battle, but won the war because the franchises ran out in 1976."

However, people soon began losing interest in the project, and, O'Rourke said, "I was a coalition of one in 1978."

Now, O'Rourke said, "It's pretty much up to me to argue for citizen's perspectives." O'Rourke was named to be on the Cable Advisory Committee for Mayor Frank Rizzo in 1978.

After Green took office, said O'Rourke, the committee was never called together. "Since then I have been working with another group."

"A couple of people I know from City Council called me for advice and I said I would help if I could get my ideas in, too. I had looked at cable for four months and compared it to other cities. I became the citizens' advocate — what will the people get out of cable? Practically nobody else had been involved in cable all of this time."

O'Rourke has several ideas for how cable can best be used. "One plan I'm working on is to build it so we have different levels of the community involved, both in making and watching shows. My concern is that people develop and maintain a sense of identity and community. As much as 20 percent of cable will be for the people. My worry is that if it is not planned, we'll lose it."

Though O'Rourke says the "fun and games" possible with cable TV will come eventually, there is a bigger function involved. "In the future," cable TV will take over newspapers, through a "teletext" system. Catalogues and such will also be handled through TV, so local stores and merchants also need a way to reach out to neighborhoods."

O'Rourke believes cable TV can also have a role in education. "Connecting campuses is still a possibility. Instructional TV is something I'd like to get into — here on campus." O'Rourke would like to see Villanova connected with Cabrini College and Rosemont College.

"Many courses don't even bother with the media," said O'Rourke; "and if we don't use the media in formal education," people won't be able to learn from it in their ongoing education."

O'Rourke foresees Villanova students obtaining internships with cable TV companies in order to learn the business, and said, "We've made some contacts in Wayne and Merion — we could use that as training for students, maybe next year. I've met with people there and they seem interested in letting us get involved."

O'Rourke also thinks students may eventually have cable on campus in dormitory rooms, and, he added, "We could have a nightly newscast here, produced by students, every night."

Logue Campaigning

By JOHN JACKSON

Dr. John Logue, a Villanova University political science teacher and a candidate for the U.S. Senate, has recently opened a new campaign headquarter at 809 on Lancaster Avenue in Villanova.

Logue, who currently has 20 students working on his campaign, said, "The office is now manned full-time, the students are really helping out."

In early January, Logue announced his intention to seek the Democratic nomination, and thus try to take the seat in the Senate currently held by Republican John Heinz. Heinz intends to seek re-election.

Logue explained that Heinz has an advantage with his campaign, for Heinz is very wealthy and can use his own money on his campaign. Logue explained that even if he (Logue) found somebody with unlimited money to back him, he would be restricted by law to only accept 1000 dollars from a single contributor. However, Logue stated, "I think that Heinz is beatablt . . . no matter how much money you have, you cannot deny the condition of the state."

Logue also sees the interest rates, along with the national debt, as two major causes of the Nations sagging economy. Logue even stated that "The budget gap is a scandal."

In a letter circulated to 67 Democratic county chairmen, Logue challenged his opponents, particularly Allegheny County Commissioner Cyril Wecht and Slipper Rock State College Professor Cyril Sagan, to a series of five debates, on five different subjects, in five different regions of Pennsylvania. In his letter to the Democratic county chairmen, Logue stated, "A Democratic U.S. Senator can have a real impact on restoring jobs, lowering interest rates, and preserving peace. A Democratic U.S. Senator will be able to do a great deal to help Governor Alan Ertel and Lt. Governor Jim Lloyd get the kind of federal assistance that Pennsylvania is entitled to." Logue also pointed out that since 1944, the Democrats have elected only one person to the Senate. Logue then stated, "I suggested that one of the reasons that we (Democrats) have done so badly is that we have paid far too little attention to the choosing of candidates for an office which deeply affects the lives of Pennsylvanians."

Logue believes that America needs an "imaginative government," whose policies will help expand the job market in Pennsylvania and the U.S.A. Logue calls for a "Demand Side Economics," which will put money back into the pockets of Americans. Logue also feels that the government must do a little "pump priming" to get many industries, such as the housing and auto industries going again.

Logue feels that many of Reagan budget cuts are bad for the country, particularly in the area of education. "Education is not only important to the individual, but it is also important for the entire country," Logue said.

When asked about his motives for running for U.S. Senate, Logue replied, "I really think that I can help the U.S. and the world, and I think I can win."

Zoning Reques

the tract. McCoy questioned whether rezoning the eastern portion first was an attempt to "drive a wedge" that would lead to institutional zoning for the remainder of the tract in the future.

Concerning the amount of traffic that would result if there is a rezoning Driscoll said that, in his opinion, the rezoning would not "notably increase" use of the N. Springmill Rd. bridge of Rte. 320 which is crossed by 1,000 to 1,200 students daily. Hazardous conditions posed by the N. Springmill overpass are now under study by the Public Utilities Commission. A hearing judge has recommended that the PUC order construction of a new bridge with sidewalks.

In response to an audience tion, Driscoll said that to bridge up and expect stud use it is imposible. "Stude alist on taking their own l their hands. They will s bridge. They will cut thr fence," Driscoll answered.

Following 15 years of on off-again negotiations, Vil purchased the land that in five buildings for $750,00 university pays in excess of in property taxes to the tow just on the eastern portion Morris tract zoned R-1.

The commissioners must a final decision on the rezo one of their regularly M meetings within 90 days public hearing.

Tenure Evaluated

By BILL MOORE

A resolution mandating student input to be included in the rank and tenure process has been passed by the Rank and Tenure Committee and approved by University Senate.

Last November, an evaluation revealed that there was serious lack of student involvement in the procedure of evaluating professors eligible for tenure and promotion. Article VI, Section 6 of the University Senate Charter reads: "Student members shall be elected by the total student body for a two year term. To be eligible to serve, student members at the time of election must be in the top 10 percent of their college class, have at least a second semester status and be in good standing."

Rank and Tenure Committee Chairman Rev. Lawrence Gallen, O.S.A., drafted a set of sample instructions for faculty members that was later revised and agreed upon at a subsequent meeting.

According to Gallen, "The basic idea is that the faculty member seeking promotion or tenure has to make his or her own case for teaching effectiveness, and must solicit broad based student input to document his or her case."

Rev. Lawrence Gallen, O.S.A.

Under the new plan, student input must be included in any application for tenure or promotion by means of standard college or departmental course-teacher evaluation.

If an applicant wishes, he or she may devise a questionnaire. However, to insure that it corresponds with committee standards, the faculty member must first confer with his or her chairperson or dean before its implementation, said Gallen.

The increase in student participation is an addition to the three existing criteria already employed in evaluating rank and tenure applicants. They are: service to the community, active participation in University committees and programs, and service to their own professions. Student input is also present on the committee itself, as two students are involved with the policies the committee enacts.

Newsbriefs...

Writing...

Villanova University's Office of Student Life, in conjunction with the Financial Aid Office has circulated a poster urging students to write to their congressmen in protest of financial aid cuts.

The Dean of Students Office is also providing paper, envelopes, addresses, a form letter, and even stamps, to try and make the letter writing campaign as easy as possible for the interested student.

Highlights of the letter suggested by the Office of Student Life include a plea that "the extreme loss of aid dollars, coupled with the inflation induced rise in attendance costs will force many students to leave the University. It is our firm belief that investment in the education of our people must be differentiated from the expense of government operation."

The Dean of Students Office reports that the response to the letter writing effort has been medium to good, but could be much better. Approximately 100 letters have been written.

Arthur Switzer of the Financial Aid Office said that the letter writing campaign had to be attempted, because it is one avenue that might work.

"It is very important that the students and the parents write to their congressman because people who represent the University are not listened to, our complaints are discounted," said Switzer.

Switzer acknowledged that education is not the only area of the federal budget that is being reduced. He said that is why the letters are so important. "The squeaky wheel gets the oil," Switzer said.

Many private colleges and universities have begun using ability to pay the bill as a consideration for admissions. "Villanova has no such right now," Switzer stated. "Admissions and financial aid are strictly separate." However, Switzer did say that he was uncertain about the future of that policy.

Pell Grants...

According to Department of Education Secretary Terence Bell, improved management of the Pell Grant Program saved $21 million in interest last year and enabled the department to recover and return to the U.S. Treasury an additional $66 million over a two year period.

The Pell Grant (formerly the Basic Educational Opportunity Grant) program was authorized in the education amendments of 1972 and the first awards to students were made in the 1973-74 school year. Since that time, more than 13.4 million grants totaling more than $10.5 billion have been awarded to financially needy students for postsecondary education.

At the beginning of each Pell grant award period, the Department of Education "banks" with a federal disbursement system the amount of money an education institution is estimated to need for initial payments to students. As needed, additional funds are banked for subsequent payments.

Through a more careful analysis of the amount needed for initial payments, only $1 billion of the available 2.4 billion was credited to institutional accounts at the beginning of the 1980-81 grant period. In the year before, they had been credited with $1.4 billion — a $400 million excess.

The $66 million returned to the Treasury Department came from unused Pell Grant funds remaining in school accounts.

Drop/Add Period Should Be Revived

With the first semester of course registration under a totally revamped system drawing to a close, it is time to evaluate just how effective this new system is proving to be.

Let's start with the good points.

First, the new registration has eliminated the time-consuming and inefficient pre-registration process. Under the revised registration, one has been able to complete the entire process in one day, rather than having to pre-register and then wait for weeks before discovering that a desired class had hundreds of people applying for about 30 seats. At least now one finds out immediately if a course is closed.

Second, the new system has gone far in getting rid of the string-pulling to get into closed classes which was rampant in past semesters. It used to be that the well-connected student had a distinct advantage over everyone else in obtaining admission to a popular class, even though the system was supposed to provide an equal opportunity for all. Now this is a reality rather than a farce.

It is a shame, however, that these two very admirable improvements are over-shadowed by one major flaw: the discontinuance of the drop/add period.

Drop/add was originally instituted in response to students' wishes to have greater scheduling freedom and flexibility. Now, students are no longer allowed this freedom; instead, they are locked into schedules made up far in advance of the semester with no formal method of altering them. Of course, University officials are privately admitting that some form of a drop/add period will have to be held in the fall. Still, this informal drop /add will be available to very many students and will not in any way aid the bulk of those who want, for whatever reason, to amend their schedules.

All students ought to have the right to pick the courses, teachers and times of their own choosing, and drop/add has been an effective means to accomplish this. After all, the students are the ones who are paying thousands of dollars to attend Villanova; drop/add, while it may have been an inconvenience to some administrators, was a mechanism which greatly enhanced a student's chance of getting a satisfactory schedule.

By cancelling the drop/add period, University administrators are assuming that students are making well-informed and knowledgeable class selections at registration time and that they will have little if any reason to want to change their schedules once the semester had begun. How erroneous.

Most students sign up for a certain class either because the time happens to be convenient or because a particular professor is recommended by someone they know, not because they've made a carefully-weighed choice. The problem is only compounded by the rather haphazard system of faculty advisement here, rather than rectified as it should be. Consequently, it's illogical and unwise to suppose that students have no real need for drop/add.

Again, the new registration system started this semester contains a great many improvements over the old one. However, in their zeal to get rid of the bad aspects of the previous form of registration, University officials have discarded a vitally necessary element as well. The drop/add period, at least until a better way is devised, has to be revived.

Congratulations

After a relatively exciting election, the Villanovan would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the new student body president, Paul Tufano. We'd also like to extend congratulations to the new student senators: Jim Swift, Brian Connors, Gerry Malanga, Tom Janisch, Marybeth Bogan, John Gardner, Laura Moreno, John Eichman, Shauneen Murray, and Paul Van Deventer.

The job of representing the student body is often time-consuming, frustrating and unappreciated. Yet it still is an incredibly important task, and must be taken very seriously if anything is going to be accomplished for the students. We hope the new president and senators will keep this in mind.

Letters to the Editor

Basketball

Dear Editor:

As the basketball coach of your great university, I would like to sincerely thank the Augustinian Fathers, faculty and student body for all their support to the basketball team during the course of the year. This is something that I will never forget. Without your support and tremendous enthusiasm, it becomes just a game. Your sincerity makes it all worthwhile. It's really a pleasure to be associated with such wonderful people here at Villanova.

On behalf of our team, my assistants and myself, thank you for a great year.

Election

Dear Editor:

Last week's election of a new student body president proved to be one of the most fiercely competitive races ever. Now that the tension and controversy of the past three weeks are behind us I would like to publicly thank my supporters who stood by me and experienced both the excitement of a first ballot victory among with the disappointment of our ultimate defeat. While I was not the nominal victor, because of the sincerity and enthusiasm all of you showed on my behalf in some regards I still consider myself the winner. Also I would like to thank the many students who gave me a moment of their time in considering my candidacy as I campaigned door to door. From this experience I came to one consideration, Villanova's students are not apathetic — they are frustrated, yet obviously concerned and willing to work for a change should they be given the proper motivation.

Finally, I would like to congratulate Paul Tufano on running one of the most upstanding, issue-oriented campaigns possible. While Paul and I have differed on the approach necessary to confront our problems I am convinced that his sincerity and determination will win him the respect of the entire student body.

John J. Pisano

Dear Editor:

Now that our student body elections are finally over and the excitment had died down, I would like to point out a serious problem in hope that the fiascos of this year's election do not repeat themselves in the future. The elections for Student Government officials should be a time for serious debate and consideration of the issues and became one of lies and accusations of every kind; a virtual mud slinging contest which was only encouraged by an extremely inconsistent elections commission.

It is a shame that such an important aspect of our student life is left with such a bad image. The fact is that is we all tried working together instead of against one another, something might actually get done. But, despite all, this year's election was not a total loss. We do have a capable president in Paul Tufano and, if this election has done nothing else, it has reiterated the fact that we, the students, really do deserve better. Perhaps if we give them a chance, our student government will see that we get it.

Nuclear

Dear Editors:

Dr. Crabtree's letter deserves an adaquate response, but I don't know where to begin; he seems to have a strange ability in relating a symposium at Villanova to "oppressive military regimes in Latin America" (one wonders if Dr. Crabtree includes the popularly elected government of El Salvador, fighting the intervention of the Soviet Union) to a thermonuclear "inferno."

A scenario of escalation leading to nuclear war is presented in his letter; while this is a viable scene, there is a more probable and dangerous script: a nuclear attack resulting from the failure of America to defend herself and her allies.

As La Pasionaria said, "it is better to die on your feet than live on your knees." In our case, America must not live on its knees in fear of the Soviets and be tricked into a freeze on strategic weapons, which allows Soviet superior. This freeze would be a serious miscalculation since the Soviets believe that a nuclear war is different from a minor violent rebellion in El Salvador only in degree, not in kind (from the writings of late Marshal Grechko.) The most reasonable action for sensible Americans should be the support of the Warner-Jackson resolution (S.J. Res. 177) to freeze nuclear weapons an equal basis.

Thanks

To the Villanova Community:

I would like to thank all of my dear friends at Villanova for their cards, prayers, and good wishes. It was a source of great comfort to know that so many people cared. Words cannot express my deep appreciation for your thoughtfulness. Once again, many thanks to a super group of people.

...ollowing is a copy of a letter ...the Office of Residence Life.

Mr. Janosik:

...residents of Fedigan Hall ...like to bring to your atten... ...dismay in the Residence ...failure to recognize and ...the deficiencies of Fedi... a Villanova housing facil... though the housing lottery ...fair in theory, in practice ...Fedigan residents were ...o stay in the dorm for the ...school year. In real fair... ...tudents of all dorms should ...ended blanket equality in ...conditions of facilities ...es of what lottery number ...n. Then, perhaps there ...t be unsuccessful yearly scrambling for better rooms.

Unfortunately, Fedigan Hall has been neglected and is in need of improvements throughout the building. We are grateful to hear of the rumored installment of a new plumbing system in the bathrooms, since it is often that Fedigan residents are without hot water. As for the alleged new windows and frames, we are quite satisfied with the visibility we get from the old ones and think that other areas of the dorm are in more need of improvement. Besides, we wonder if we will be subject to the late-night noise of workmen on our own windows as we were to those window repairs made on Tolentine Hall throughout this year. We would hope however, that window panes that have been cracked since our arrival in September might be repaired this summer.

The following is an itemized list of what high-paying Fedigan residents feel are more basic improvements needed to make Fedigan a satisfactory housing facility.

1. New Desks: Current desks (without any drawers) serve as a bureau top for books and personal belongings, and as well serves as a work area. Most often, adequate study space cannot be facilitated without moving many of these items off the desk.

2. New Desk Chairs: Although this seems to be a minor, hair-splitting request, if one looks at these uncomfortable chairs closely enough, he will realize that these are class-room desks with the "desk part" sawed off!

3. Well Budgeted Closet Space: Though enlargement of these one-foot deep closets seems impossible, more shelves could be added so as to waste as little space as possible. As the closets are now, the position of the clothes racks cause a total waste of about two feet of width space. We would also appreciate closet doors or perhaps new shower curtains to replace the mustard ones that currently serve as closet doors.

4. New Wall Colors: Whether the existing wall colors are a result of poor taste or (as most residents have heard) part of a test to determine whether students work better in florescent green, orange,or blue rooms, we are not willing to be used as guinea pigs and universally agree that we would not paint walls in our own homes any of these colors. Why must we be subject to them at this very expensive university? Four white walls would suffice and be welcomed by all residents of Fedigan.

5. New Bunk Beds: This is one problem that really should be attended to. Not only are these beds rickety and (unintentionally) collapsable, they match our florescent walls. Many residents have already made repairs on these beds in order to insure sleeping safely. The relaxed springs in these old bunks cause the frames to shift and now quite a few of us have broken-off bars and towel racks from these beds lying around our rooms. Will we be charged for these at the end of the year?

6. Need to Exterminate Insects: Unfortunately, the only residents who are satisfied with living conditions in Fedigan Hall are our cockroaches, ants, and other unidentifiable insects. The insect population at Fedigan far exceeds the human residency and the bugs live quite well in our shower stalls, closets, heaters, sinks, and toilets. We probably would not mind them if they were paying as much as we are to live in this cockroach hotel.

Although we realize that some of these problems exist in other dormitories, the residents of Fedigan Hall think that we have not been compensated for any of these deficiencies. Even residents of Corr Hall have beautiful room furniture and only have to live there for one year . . . guaranteed. Residents of Fedigan don't have the convenient option of inviting friends and relatives into our lounge since its condition is even more embarrassing than that of our rooms' (and it is truly embarrassing when these guests remark at the uncontrollable cluttered appearance of these small rooms or laugh and sometimes gasp at the color of our walls.). Perhaps, the lounge could be converted into a much needed laundry room.

The residents of Fedigan Hall welcome any housing authority to personally examine the workmanship that has gone into improving these rooms or to get a better view of how imperative better living conditions are in those rooms that have not been renovated at all.

Although, as incoming freshmen, we were told to bring certain items that were lacking in the Fedigan Hall rooms, by no stretch of the imagination did we expect to encounter such inadequate living conditions. Thank-you for taking the time to read this rather cynical approach to what we think are serious problems. We hope to be hearing from you soon.

Many people in the United States are concerned with the crisis involving the Falkland Islands. We decided to ask the students for their opinion. "Do you think the Falkland Islands crisis will lead to a war? If not, what do you think the outcome will be?"

"I think it's going to lead to war. I think that the British didn't know what they were getting into. By threatening war, the British have put themselves in a bad situation. They are going to have trouble coming out of the whole thing without losing their dignity."

Bill Gold
Junior, Marketing

"Hopefully it will not lead to war if negotiations continue. It's a no-win situation for the United States because Britain is one of our biggest allies and we should help them, but if we do that, we could end up in war."

Molly Roach
Junior, Economics

"I think that it will lead to a war and I think that Britain will be successful in taking over the island."

Liz Neary
Junior, Biology

"Yes, I think it will lead to a war. I think also that both sides have a lot at stake and it might escalate into a world wide crisis."

Frank Satterthwaite
Sophomore, Business

"No, I don't think it's going to lead to a war. The United States government aid between the two countries will be a major influence in preventing a major war."

John Yeomans
Senior, Economics

"I hope not. There might be a few minor battles, but I don't think there will be a war. I think there will have to be some changes in the governmental structure down there."

"It's The Most"

Among the many distinguishable, entertaining, and perhaps even enviable traits that Villanova students possess is a tendency towrds heavily using their own brand of language. Of course, we all speak in basically the same manner, but many students here have found that they can greatly lessen the necessity to know a wide variety of words by consistently using the same words, over and over again. This is not to say that their language lacks color; indeed these typical Villanova words have their own sort of "preppie" personality. They say nothing, yet they say everything. And, in addition to knowing, using and even inventing certain words, students here must know the right places to be on campus for whatever activity is desired. Considering the veritable plethora of both words and places that Villanova students have in their vocabularies, it is not too difficult to come-up with a semi-complete round-up of these "Nova" words:

preppie — an obvious, of course, but one that must be noted, if only because it is a useful word in describing almost anyone on the Villanova campus. Check your outfit: If you have anything on that is pink, green, corduroy, alligator, or Brooks Brothers-inclined, you at least lean towards being a preppie. If not, what are you doing here?

cute — or, really cute — see above. Blue Key members are "cute."

really — enhances almost anything you say. A typical response to anyone that bores you — you simply say "Really?"

totally — as in, "It was totally cool." Also, completely, really (as above), together. Professors who take no attendance are "totally" cool. And the word means "totally" nothing.

cool — a summer breeze down by the ocean is "cool," but in this case, it means something deeper. Missing class and yet missing nothing is "cool." Those professors without attendance sheets are "cool." Going to Kelly's is "cool." You might even be "cool."

bummer — too bad, you lose. Getting "C's" is a "bummer." Not getting into Kelly's is a "bummer." And, by the way, if you didn't get in, you're probably not "cool," either.

aced — as in, you "aced" the test. You did well, got it all, in fact, you're "cool!" And so is everything else.

pink — see cute.

to the max an especially sickening preppie, Blue-Key, Villanova-type expression that, again, means abolutely nothing, but just sounds like "the most." In this case, you took it all the way,really made it, like wow!

the most — belonging to the Blue-Key might be "the most," but then again, maybe not. If something is "the most," well, then, by golly, it really is! It might even be totally "cool," or "to the max." And, of course, anything preppie is "the most."

Kelly's — see "cool." This is really the place to be. Maybe. Unless you don't like being spilled on, pushed, squeezed, and even picked up. That's all assuming you got into the place to begin with, in which case, you have every right to consider yourself "cool."

barf me out — really gross, man. Said to originate from Georgetown, this expression may indicate your feelings for just about anything, and isn't it a cute thing to say?

it's a bust — see "bummer."

unreal — the Villanova alcohol policy is "unreal," incredible, unbelievable and unacceptable. You may also just be tired of the topic and say "unreal." In other words, get away from me, you're boring. "Really" boring.

sloshed — drunk. You know. If you don't, don't bother looking at "cool."

Connelly Center — or, the C-Center. Go here if you're an Arts student with nothing to do. It's "cool." But, you'll be even more "cool," if you hang out in front of this stylish construction of cinder blocks. In the sun, of course.

Mendel Cafeteria go here if you're an engineer. Otherwise, don't.

Falvey Library — a nice place to chat. Not much else.

Pie Shoppe— the original name for that room in Dougherty with the television. You can watch General Hospital here, and boy, is that "the most."

zero — some people are "zeros." Boring, do-nothing people might qualify. You might say "really?" to them a lot. Or this whole article might be a "zero," but, in any case, it is "totally" that way, right? Far out!

green — see pink.

The Killer Monday

By J. HART

Monday at Villanova, or any other place for that matter, is not that thrilling a day. But certain Mondays stand out from the rest as being pitifully poor.

There is one Monday I remember as being a killer.

I am a commuter, and that means to ready myself for a full day of academia, I must get up at least two hours before my first scheduled class. Granted, my first is at 10:30, and that means I only have to get up at 8:30, but that is still very early.

I know there are some of you who don't think that 8:30 is too unreasonable a time to be rolling out of bed, and I believe that those of you who do feel that way belong in one of the following three categories: 1) You have not been in college long enough to break yourself of that dreadful habit of rising at 6:30 to go to high school, 2) You are not in the true college frame of mind, when 11:30 a.m. is still the middle of the night, or 3) You are mentally deranged. Take your choice.

What made this particular Monday even worse was the fact that my first class was on the third floor of Tolentine Hall. At that hour of the morning, nothing could seem closer to the Tower of London.

The class was an interminable 50 minutes of lecture on the migratory habits of Canadian geese. To add to that, we were experiencing close to steam-bath conditions, thanks to the wonderful heating facilities for which Tolentine is known.

Following that, I had to trek across campus to Bartley for an 11:30 class. As usual, I was late, and the class had already begun. The professor shot me an "if looks could kill" stare, as I cringed into my seat.

As the class and professor droned on I found it increasingly harder to keep my eyes open. I began to pull stubble from my unshaven face in an effort to stay awake, but it was to no avail.

Soon, my head slumped and my eyes closed. I wasn't even aware that I had dropped my pen on the floor and didn't awaken until my forehead hit the desk with a thud. When my eyes cleared, they met the stares of not only the professor, but the whole class as well.

Half of them eyed me with disgust; they considered it sinful to sleep through a discussion on the history of East Tanzania. The other half looked on in envy; they wished that they could have had those few fleeting moments in dream in spite of the consequences.

My final class was equally as impressive, and as could be imagined, I sighed in relief when it and my school day came to an end. But my Monday still trudged on.

I was fired from my job; my girlfriend broke up with me; my car began its endless series of collapses; my bank informed me that I was overdrawn on my account, and not only were they demanding compensation, but they were also fining me $100 and terminating my account. What more could I ask for?

As I crawled the three flights of stairs to my apartment, preparing to drown my sorrows in double-fudge brownies, I reflected back on my life. Without a doubt, this had been my worst day.

I knew I had reached my ultimate low-point in life and that now things could only be better. I knew that never again could or would my troubles be as large. I knew that I could live my life assured that it was a downhill ride from then on . . . at least until the next Monday.

Pre-Meds Honored in AED

By CATHERINE SHEILS

Villanova's Pennsylvania Zeta Chapter of Alpha Epsilon Delta (AED) hosted the Region I convention from April 1-3. AED is a national pre-medical honor society for students preparing for health-related careers. The society has divided the country into four regions. Every two years some chapter in each region sponsors a convention. This is the first time Villanova has been given this honor.

Of the twenty-six chapters comprising Region I, only seventeen chapters sent delegates. A total of eighty students from various schools participated in the convention. Villanova's delegate was Diane Catania, a senior biology major, who was recently accepted to Pennsylvania's School of Optometry. The delegates reviewed the constitution and by-laws of the society. Each chapter discussed its policies for admittance and activities sponsored. Also, the activities of the magazine the Scalpel and the national AED Newsletter were evaluated. In this manner, the major objective of the convention, to gain an understanding of what AED represents, was fulfilled.

Santa Johnson, the coordinator of the program comments, "Since the majority of AED members are planning to attend medical school, speakers chosen for Thursday and Friday were centered around this theme. Saturday's panel discussion represented all of the medical disciplines, including dentistry, osteopathy, podiatry and optometry."

Dr. Richard A. Passon of St. Joseph's University stressed the importance of a liberal arts education for those interested in the field of medicine. Warren Lang, M.D., of Jefferson Medical College of Thomas Jefferson University, discussed the total experience of medical school from "application to graduation." Students found his talk which included requirements from college grades, MCAT scores to teachers recommendations, quite helpful. Further he discussed common problems faced by medical school students and residents. Hugh D. Bennet of Hahnemann Medical College refuted the position that there will be an overabundance of physicians in the 80s. He pointed out that this proposal was based on misleading and insufficient evidence. Finally, Mary Ellen Hartman, M.D., of the Medical College of Pennsylvania discussed the role of "Women in Medicine."

Saturday morning the forty new initiates to the Pennsylvania Zeta Chapter of AED were inducted. Also, Phillip J. Stephens, M.D., a biology professor, was initiated as an honorary member.

Also, the new officers of AED were installed: William A. Borrelle, president; Louise M. Correnti, vice-president; Carol D. Bowes, secretary; Francisca DiLenoardo, treasurer; Fred Pescatore, Editor of the Historian; and Joseph Fanelle, Scalpel Reporter.

On Thursday, April 22, Campus Ministry will host its annual Balloon Day at Kennedy Mall and the Connelly Center Plaza from noon to 5 p.m.

"It will have a carnival atmosphere with booths of food and games, and entertainment on the lawns in front of Dougherty Hall. There will be folk music, guitarists, and the Pep Band. It will be a fun time for the Villanova community," said Jeannie Cribben, who with Jim McGann and Steve Timinskas is a chairperson of the event.

"We will also be selling balloon tags for $.50 and Balloon Day T-shirts for $4.50," Cribben added. The tags are pre-stamped with Campus Ministry's address and the instruction for the eventual finder of the tag to return it to Campus Ministry and state where it was found. Those who purchase balloon tags write their own local address on them for identification. The tags are attached to helium-filled balloons on Balloon Day and gathered under a huge net until the Balloon Launch at 3 p.m.

The balloon which goes the farthest, as indicated by the returned balloon tag, will earn a $25 prize for both the person who bought the balloon tag and the person who returned it to Campus Ministry.

"The tags are available from now until Balloon Day and will be sold on Balloon Day, too," said Cribben.

In explaining the goal of Balloon Day, Cribben stated that it is parallelled to the Hunger Awareness project. All the money raised goes to a World Relief Agency — Oxfam. The money will go to medical relief for refugees in El Salvador."

Cribben pointed out the Villanova community is offering great support of Balloon Day. "Many different organizations — fraternities, sororities and other societies are sponsoring and organizing the different booths.

Frat Defends Title

By SHARON WINTERS

The Greek Week activities have come to a close with fond memories of community fellowship and spirited competition. The April games consisted of nine events, including chariot races, near-beer chugging, volleyball and swimming.

The winners for the overall competition were defending champions, fraternity Lambda Chi Alpha (LXA), and sorority Phi Beta Delta (PBD). Each received a permanent trophy from the local Genesse distributor, Kunda Beverage of King of Prussia. Also, the fraternities or sororities that won individual events were given permanent trophies by Kunda.

For the fraternities, the near-beer chugging was the telling competition in the overall scores. "It was LXA and TKO neck and neck. Going in to the chugging event one and one-half points separated the two teams. We won the chugging and that clinched it," said Jim Batsides, anchorman of the chugging team.

The winning sorority in the chugging event was Delta Kappa Nu (DKN). DKN could have placed third in the men's competition, according to Gary Bonas, assistant director of student activities. The men must drink 16 ounce near-beer; the women drink the 12 ounce size. The competition involves a ten-person team. The first person drinks beer and in relay the others down the line chug. The tenth person, the anchor, must drink two beers in a row, as the relay continues back to the first. Various time penalties are given for things like spilling beer.

Another competition during Greek Week was the chariot race. Each group had to build their own chariot. The basic model had to consist of a two-wheeled platform with a rod. Competitors had to make four trips with different passengers: such as the lightest, heaviest, prettiest or oldest.

Sun Sense

By JOI CUTILLI

We have become a nation of sun worshippers. Our pursuit of the sun has exploded into a year-round pre-occupation. Regardless of the season, we go where the sun is to ski, swim, play tennis, golf, boat, garden, bike, fish, or simply stretch out in its warmth.

Many people think a suntan makes them look more attractive. Perhaps that's true; it certainly is the fashion now to have a tan. But it wasn't always. Fifty years ago Americans prized fair, delicate-looking skin. Today some people think soaking up the sun makes them healthy. In general, that isn't so. Except for sometimes helping to relieve such conditions as aching joints, acne, and psoriasis, the sun's health benefits are primarily psychological. The bedrock truth is too much sun is harmful.

Cancer's Early Warnings

- A sore that does not heal.
- Change in size or color of a wart or mole.
- Development of any unusual pigmented area.

Most often these will not be cancer, but only a doctor's examination can determine that. If found early enough, skin cancer can be removed with little trouble. Found very late or left untreated, serious scars and, very occasionally, death can result.

Skin Saving Tips

. . . You're not fully protected in the shade of a beach umbrella. Ultraviolet rays are only partially deflected by the umbrella and they are also bouncing toward you from all directions — off sand, water, patio floor, deck.

. . . Don't count on being safe on a cloudy day or even under water. Seventy percent to 80 percent of the ultraviolet rays' burning power penetrate clouds and haze, and the rays can even search you out three feet below the water. A wet t-shirt can also deceive you. Water droplets funnel at least half of the ultraviolet power to your skin.

. . . You're better off bicycling or playing golf than lying immobile on a surfboard or riverbank. A moving target is harder for the rays to find than a motionless one.

. . . Avoid sun reflectors. They expose the most delicate facial areas, under the chin, eyelids, earlobes.

. . . True, sunshine is a source of vitamin D, but so is a well-balanced diet.

. . . Geography is a factor. There is proportionately more skin cancer in southern and southwestern states than elsewhere in the country.

To sun or not to sun is a question sunworshippers have to work out for themselves. Knowing the effects of repeated overexposure will help you decide whether the careless pursuit of a tan today is worth tomorrow's damaged skin, or the threat of skin cancer.

It's A Whole New Game

By Kathi Iannacone

In the game of baseball the rule is three strikes and you're out. Fortunately, in the game of life after three strikes you're still in the game. John Adams, Paul Clarke, and Dave Errico are living proof of this when after being cut by the Villanova Varsity Baseball team they came together and formed a Baseball Club so they could continue training and keeping in shape for next season's tryouts.

The two sophomores and one freshman explained that they just love th game and want to play. It was Errico that set up the schedule for the season. There is a 20-plus game schedule set up. They will battle such teams as La Salle, Ursinus, Haverford and Eastern College.

The team was recruited by its three founders who "just went around to guys we knew were pretty good and we knew were interested," explained Clarke.

Interest is a big factor among the club members since the team is not sponsored by anyone. All funds for uniforms, traveling, and equipment comes out of the team's personal pockets. However, the team, clad in powder blue and navy jerseys are enjoying a game without pressure and with equal playing time.

The members don't have an official field to play or practice on since they are not permitted to play on the Varsity team's field. Adams commented, "We only wanted to use the field when the Varsity team wasn't using it but we were denied our request on the grounds that St. Joe's has priority over the field when theirs is in poor condition.

What the team was able to achieve, through their determination and persistence, was the use of a field in Rosemont. The field was provided by Radnor township for the team's home game use.

Practices for the junior Cats range from two to three hours on non-game days. The practices are supervised by the three founders even though they also play. The team is thriving on experience, and the "coaches" count on each member to use his own judgment when it comes to plays and quick reactions.

With a 4-3 record the team has "pretty good offense although we are working hard on defense and hitting," commented Clark.

Clark and Adams further commented, "As a team we have one hope, that is to play a scrimmage with the Varsity team.

Spread Some Sunshine

By BETH BONINA

The Fourth Annual Sunshine Day will be held on Saturday, April 24. The festivities will be at St. Mary's Field beginning at 11 a.m. and continuing until 3:30 p.m.

According to Maureen Taylor, chairman of Sunshine Day, there will be approximately 100 mentally handicapped children from various social service organizations in the Philadelphia area. "This is a day of recreation, entertainment, and companionship for these children." stated Taylor.

The children will participate in games and activities such as sporting events, carnival-type games, and sing-alongs, according to Colleen Colburn, chairman of games and activities. Ellen Walsh, chairman of the entertainment committee also stated, "We will have a puppet show and a magician to entertain the children. There will also be clowns present to help out with the entertainment."

The next meeting for volunteers will be held on Wednesday, April 21, at 7:30 p.m. in Bartley 110. "Even though we have a number of volunteers already, we could always use more," stated Taylor. "It is a wonderful feeling to know that these little children are truly having a great day.

Applications are also being taken for volunteers in the Social Actions office, located in Tolentine 121.

Chapters In The Field House History

The following is a re-print from the April issue of "The Spires."

This month marks the 50th birthday of the Field House.

If its walls could talk, they would tell endless stories of the social, cultural, political and athletic events of their 50-year history.

Predictably, they would tell stories of some now world-famous athletes.

They would also talk about the time the Field House served as the Big Top for a circus. And they would mention the year after World War II when portions of the structure were converted to a makeshift dormitory to house the students who left school to fight a war and were returning to complete their studies.

When the Field House was opened on April 1, 1932, it was touted as a "monument to athletics." The facility was known as the "gymnasium" at that time, but later became known as the Field House.

During its 50-year existence, however, it has become a social and cultural center for the Main Line.

Chapter I

It was like walking into another world on that April evening in 1932.

The brand new "gymnasium" opened only that month had been transformed into a magical wonderland reminiscent of the grandest ballroom.

They were only paper, but the blue and white streamers cascading from the ceiling could have been the satin swags that deck royal pageants.

To make it even more exciting, the new sound, the big band sound, had found its way to Villanova. On the stage playing for the dancers was one of the rising bands and it was led by a chap named "Ozzie" Nelson. Like every good band, it had a vocalist. Her name was Harriett Hilliard. (Later they would be the Ozzie and Harriett of radio and TV fame).

Times were tough that year. The Depression was raging and the money for a night like this was hard to come by. But for Villanova's class of 1933, the expenditure was worth every penny. The junior prom provided an escape from reality.

Bill Driscoll and his date, Mary Avil (now Mr. and Mrs. Bill Driscoll) were caught up in the dream world that only the junior prom could create. Gently guiding Mary onto the dance floor, Bill encircled her slender waist with his arm and twirled her across the dance floor.

Soon, more than a hundred couples were gliding across the stardust-strewn floor — handsome men in black tuxedoes and starched white shirts, and beautiful women in ravishing ball gowns with dance cards dangling from their wrists.

The night flew by as most special evenings do. But even the cool, damp air that chilled the couples as they departed could not dampen their spirits.

Chapter II

The sea of microphones seemed to dwarf the black man of medium build standing at the Field House podium.

But nothing could lessen the impact of the words being spoken by Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

It was January 20, 1965. The enactment of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 had placed that issue at the forefront of every American's consciousness only a year before. Now, a standing-room-only crowd listened as this Nobel Peace Prize winner and civil rights leader issued "The Challenge of a New Age."

He spoke as an evangelist, holding his audience captive with explosive delivery and enveloping gestures.

After more than an hour of Dr. King's inspiring words, the Field House rang silent.

The silence remained for a moment as the listeners sat awestruck by the significance of the moment.

Then the applause thundered.

The crowd rose to its feet, and the cheering went on and on. Even after Dr. King left the podium, the audience was reluctant to leave and disrupt the sanctity of the evening.

No one present could have known the cruel irony of one of Dr. King's statements that night. "Every man must have something he is willing to die for."

Chapter III

Quiet chatter rippled through the audience as the tuxedo-clad musicians tuned their instruments for the September 20, 1967 opening performance.

When the hour of eight o'clock sounded, the house lights dimmed and a moment of silence descended on the Field House auditorium. All eyes were turned to the side curtain.

Slowly, the stage lights went up, and Eugene Ormandy, the famous conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra, walked proudly onto the stage. Hearty, but polite applause echoed through the concert hall as Mr. Ormandy took the customary bow before the well-dressed and quiet, reserved audience.

A breathtaking suspense filled the air for the few seconds between the time it took the orchestra to get into the ready position and Mr. Ormandy's signal to begin the performance.

With a downward swoop of the conductor's baton, the concert began with Ormandy's orchestral transcription of Bach's great Toccata and Fugue in D Minor, lulling the audience into a world of musical enchantment.

Chapter IV

The Secret Service men and White House staffers arrived on campus October 22, 1976, five days before the presidential visit.

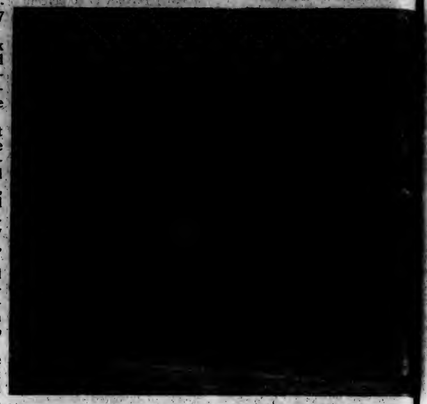
Every nook of the Field House was inspected before the Secret Servicewould give security clearance. By October 27, 1976, the campus ws ready for a visit from President Gerald R. Ford.

The presidential motorcade of 25 cars, including buses carrying nearly 250 members of the news media who were following his campaign trail, arrived at the Field House about 2:15 p.m.

President Ford stepped from his limousine into a secluded area just behind the Field House, where he was greeted by Father John M. Driscoll, university president, and James Nolan, a junior from Pittsburgh, Pa., who was president of the Political Union, the sponsor of the chief executive's visit.

Accompanied closely by Secret Service agents and members of his personal staff, President Ford went directly to the visitor's lounge upstairs in the Field Ho for a moment of relaxation.

At 2:30 p.m., he came do stairs, joined Father Driscoll, to the strains of "Hail to Chief," both men walked out the main floor and up the step the stage.



Hundreds of guests pour out of the Field House onto Lancast Ave. after the Centennial Mass in 1942, celebrating Villan va's 100th year of existence. The Field House was only years old then.

The Dead Keep Riding That Train

By CHRIS SLAWECKI

"It must have the perfections that escape analysis."
—Yeats on Art

"So I got myself a bottle and a girl that's just 14."
—Mexicali Blues

A critic's job is to dissect and categorize a work. Their perceptions of that work are tempered first by the assumptions they make regarding the "type" of work it is; once an artist is classified as "folk" or "surrealist," then the work can be judged according to the critic's standard of whatever category the work is in. This is why critics hate bands like the Grateful Dead.

Are the Dead a blues or a rock or a country or a dance or a jazz or a mellow space or a something-else band? Yes. They are especially something else. There are a few bands that sometimes sound like the Dead, for example, Dire Straits or the early New Riders of the Purple Sage, but these sound like only one of the Dead, not the whole thing. To double the critic's trouble, Dead Heads, like the band itself, are a breed apart; a potpourri of headbands, peasant skirts, glitter, flannel shirts, thinkers and rockers, some of whom have seen their band over 100 times and in over 22 states (either of the Union or of mind). The Dead show on April 6 in the Spectrum was this reviewer's first exposure to the band in concert, so if you are a Dead Head this story will probably sound superficial and obvious and you should not read any further.

The show started promptly at 7 p.m. (when was the last rock you concert you went to that started on time?) and, with a mid-show half-hour break, they played for three-and-a-half hours. The first set had a little more relaxed feeling to it than the second, thanks to a wandering Candyman and a tranquil Looks Like Rain, into which Bob Weir catapulted a compelling vocal climax. The tremendous sense of pacing the Dead have from their 16 years on the road was demonstrated when they shifted the first set into higher gears with a rockabilly It's All Over Now and a Weir-fronted C.C. Rider that sounded like its roots were closer to New Orleans than Nashville. This first half of the show was also made more enjoyable by the way Mama Tried spilled over into a bubbly Mexicali Blues and the endearing manner in which bassist Phil Lesh wiggled his behind.

The band seems like they would be great people with whom to get drunk. Jerry Garcia, the source of those cosmic guitar twinklings that make Dead tunes sparkle, reminds one of an onstage cross between a laughing Buddha and Chong (of Cheech and). This is not meant to imply that Garcia is nothing more than a dribbling, giggling old tripster; the old loin still has more than a few bites left in his roar and claws in his leads. He does not move very much onstage — the Garcia equivalent of Pete Townsend's windmill is when he taps his foot or dips with his guitar — so Weir, who along with Garcia fronts the band, is much more animated. Brent Mydland on keyboards, bassist Lesh, the double-drum club of Billy Kreutzmann and Mickey Hart, along with Garcia and Weir, are the Grateful Dead.

Shakedown Street, the title track disco Dead album produced by the late Lowell George, was as clean and cookin' a rendition of that song as any version the Dead have played in Philadelphia. Garcia and Mydland both chipped in solos, Jerry being especially slick by squeezing his lead back into the bridge after the break. Terrapin Station, the obscure title opus from that LP, was the midpoint of this second set; Kreutzmann and Hart unraveled in it a 20-minute drum solo that sounded like the hammer of Thor coming to reconstruct the building.

After Terrapin, there was simply no turning back, as the Dead unleashed the enormously popular Truckin', Sugar Magnolia, and Sunshine Daydream. Never before has this reviewer seen the dancing, the good feelings and the joy that these tunes detonated in Philadelphia that evening. One young lady with a wreath of roses in her hair squeezed a nearby muslin-shirted friend, while a young man in white skullface, wearing a black velvet top hat decorated with a longstem rose, whirled in dervish circles in time with the riffs. Besides the overall quality of the show, Dead Heads were given an extra-special treat — Morning Dew — a tune which lately has been a rarity in Philadelphia Dead shows and one which could have not been more aptly named. It slowly drifted down from the stage to settle on the crowd like a fine sunrise mist. If you have been reading this carefully, you will have noticed that the words used most often are "Dead" and "special". They sure are.

Bob Weir of the Grateful Dead.

Richard Pryor
Growing Up In Public

By CHRIS SLAWECKI

Richard Pryor Live on Sunset Strip documents this comedian's first public performance since his near-fatal accident last summer. If any readers have forgotten, Pryor badly burned himself while freebasing cocaine. Since coke is, of course, highly illegal, this was a situation which could (and may) have been highly embarrassing for a public performer.

To use his own word, Pryor found fire "inspirational," and this same word describes most of this movie; those of us worrying about preparing a face to meet the faces that we meet should find inspiration in a man cleaning his clock in front of who-knows-how-many people with such honesty and wit. It may be that Pryor is growing up in public; never an easy task, but one which, if done well, has its professional and personal rewards. This film is one of them.

He is not limited to just sex and dope jokes anymore. He can do them still, and he does, with rapidity and effectiveness. But there is another dimension to the laughter now. The trip he took to Africa must have been the site of some metamorphosis. During this section of his routine, he juxtaposes what a black man feels while walking in white America suburbia with the expressions on the faces of the white people he saw in Africa. He mentions a hitchhiker he and his wife picked up and had to subsequently leave off because the smells of their respective cultures were just a little too much for the other to take. His imitations of lions and cheetahs stalking gazelles in the veldt is a good showcase for the remarkable physical comedy at his command, when it had previously been subjugated to the twitches and half-gestures of junkies. He also mentions his thought that because there are so many blacks in Africa there are no niggers there.

Thus exorcising the term "nigger" from his comedic vocabulary, and urging his audience to do the same, Pryor also puts Mudbone to rest in this film. Mudbone is a grisly, wise old black Mississippi farmhand who likes only booze more than women and only talk more than both. It is quite refreshing to see Pryor, through Mudbone, relish the opportunity to "rub sunshine all over my face" when he so often previously sought happiness in a pipe full of smoke.

The closing half hour of the film, in which Pryor delineates his addiction, accident and recovery, is simply priceless. It is close to unbelievable that Pryor, first of all, goes into his addiction, painting himself as desperately craving his high at the expense of everything. It is even closer to unbelievable that he is willing to show how weak and depraved and badly messed up he was.

What makes this film unbelievable is that Pryor chooses to do so ONSTAGE, through a business full (too full) of egos. Richard Pryor Live on Sunset Strip is the most important work of his career, regardless of ticket sales or critical acceptance or anything. Pryor has grappled with the psychological roots of his addiction and has wrenched them out of his being for everyone to see. This is something, usually, that we only show our family or our friends or our shrink. There is a place somewhere in which the lines between what is profane and what is profound disappear. Richard Pryor lives there now.

The Jam: Consider Them a Gift

By GREG ANTON
and CRAIG GILMAN

"Cause time is short and life is cruel
But it's up to us to change
This town called malice."
Paul Weller

To label the Jam as merely another post-punk band from Britain is to do a great injustice to this extremely talented group. They belong neither to the class of frenzied, rebellious yet pointless musicians who think that nihilism is art, nor are they of the top-ten, pop musicians who commercialize their music in order to achieve financial success. Rather, they blend together various elements of many styles, past and present, creating explosive, powerful, and provocative music. Instead of adhering to routine standards, the Jam continues to be the trend setter, giving direction to the music world.

The Gift, the latest album by the Jam, fuses together cynical, stinging lyrics with their most diverse and driving music to date. As in the past, many of the Jam's songs deal with life's oppression, depression, and inhumanity. Paul Weller, lead vocalist and guitarist, packs hardhitting messages in his songs. His ability to comment on everyday life and convey the feelings of many can indeed be called a gift. Weller seems to be driven to his best as the problems in England become more urgent; his art is fueled by the sufferings and hard times of the common man. This universal and realistic element adds to the band's popularity. Currently, the Jam is the number one rock and roll band in England and have reached a higher popularity there than the Beatles, the Rolling Stones, or the Who ever did in their respective eras.

Just as these other extremely popular bands have done, the Jam provides an anthem to the young, the troubled, and the oppressed, hopefully allowing them to overcome their apathy and complacency. Yet the problems in the United States are not as acute as in England and so the Jam's music packs less impact here. The Jam does enjoy a large, loyal following of fans in the states, but it does not compare to their following in Britain. Weller has never hid his contempt for the American public and their great like for the seemingly meaningless and talent deprived music of the American rock and roll artists. Although realizing the huge amount of money that widespread American popularity would bring to the band, the Jam refuses to cater to the tastes of the American public.

Amidst the deluge of stale, imitative albums being released, the Jam has released an innovative and talent ladened album. The Gift is unquestionably the band's most diverse album, yet it is also their most homogeneous work. The band meshes together, forming a tight cohesive group. Various types of music, ranging from harsh metal to acoustic, calypso to hard driving rock and roll, are featured on the album. The group has expanded musically and has introduced a new horn section on eight of the eleven tracks. Also included on the album are various instruments not used on previous Jam albums, such as steel drums and synthesizers. All the diverse sounds beautifully blend together, making The Gift a musical masterpiece.

One message runs rampant throughout the album: the world is in a mess and we had better start shaping up! Weller seems to have become fed up with the hatred and prejudice prevailing in his homeland of England. Before the opening bars of the album, Weller states, "For those of you watching in black and white, this album is in technicolor." The theme is carried over onto the opening track, Happy Together. The most bitter and vengeful song is Running on the Spot. Here Weller proclaims that we are "just the next generation of the emotionally crippled." Yet he is hopeful for the future and believes that we all have the ability and the responsibility to start making some progress and to start shaping the future now.

Also included on The Gift is the band's number one single (in England of course), Town Called Malice. This is one of the best pieces the group has ever done. Bruce Foxton leads with a strong bass as heavy synthesizers and drums drive the song in a furious pace. However, even this quick, spirited, happy sounding song is underlined with the same reoccurring theme.

The music is strong, the message is clear, and The Gift is profound. It is a tribute to the Jam's integrity and to their artistic dedication. They continue to grow and mature as artists with each album for they are not afraid to experiment with new, different, and often untried sounds. One can be certain the Jam will always refuse to sell out. All that remains is to patiently await their next gift — their U.S. tour which begins in May.

Rock Kihn Roll at Its Hiatt

By DEAN C. BALSAMINI

Before you go out and buy the new Van Halen album (no, fellas, Valerie Bertinelli is not on it), listen to it, then melt down the vinyl, here's a suggestion: pick up John Hiatt's All of a Sudden and Greg Kihn's Kihntinued and give them a listen. Both LPs are worth your time.

If you've never heard of John Hiatt, you will now. All of a Sudden is a hot album. Hiatt, who has been recording since 1974, has never received commercial success, althugh his last two albums, Slugline and Two Bit Monsters, received near-unanimous critical acclaim.

Produced by Tony Visconti, who, among others, has worked with David Bowie, All of a Sudden contains twelve tracks that are raw and not sterile like many of today's albums. Hiatt brings back the sound that made new wave interesting before it became what it is today, very businesslike. Side One is really a treat, as there isn't a bad song. The two best are Look for Love and This Secret Life. Hiatt's sound is familiar to that of Elvis Costello and Graham Parker, containing the same passion without the anger. Jack Sherman's guitar playing gives the band its backbone.

Side Two is lighter than the first. Hiatt delves into the blues-/rockabilly with Doll House. Mary Anne is a funny song about a fast girl who has settled into a droll but secure life. Hiatt's lyrics are more cute than witty, but are not pompous and self-aggrandizing ("Mary Anne, why did you marry that insurance man?").

Greg Kihn, on the other hand, has not had problems with commercial success. His last album, Rock Kihn Roll, signaled Kihn's arrival in the marketplace. Kihntinued (the man likes puns) will keep him there.

Produced by Matthew "King" Kaufmann, Kihntinued doesn't really break any new ground; it's just good old fashioned rock and roll. That's what the Greg Kihn band does best. Happy Man, the first cut on Side One, is a driving song that sets the pace for the album. Everyday/Saturday and Tell Me Lies end Side One at breakneck speed. Every Love Song is the best song on the whole album. It contains tambourines and laid-back drums that remind one of T-Rex. The song also displays Kihn's versatility in successfully shifting gears if he so desires.

Side Two is more of the same. Testify is a sure hit. The band also does a cover version of Gary Jackson's Higher and Higher. If you'll remember, several years ago Rita Coolidge made this tune into a big hit; Kihn's version is superior in that he replaces Coolidge's polish with much-needed energy.

So, if you're interested in the original new wave sound, then John Hiatt's All of a Sudden is a must. If good rock and roll is your fancy, then Greg Kihn's Kihntinued will satisfy your musical palate. Although their styles are dissimilar, both provide aural arousement.

Springfield Woos Crowd

AND JEFFREY PAGE

The high pitched, pre-pubescent screams never let up during rocker Rick Springfield's recent Spectrum premiere.

Springfield ran onto the stage clutching his guitar and started immediately with "Calling All Girls," a single off his new album, Success Hasn't Spoiled Me Yet. The rock star, known and lusted after by many as General Hospital's Dr. Noah Drake, had a repertiore consisting mostly of songs off his new album and his recent platinum album, Working Class Dog. A notable exception was his humorous song, "She Called Me Bruce," which parodied the problem of people mistaking him (and his name) for Bruce Springsteen.

With the stage set consisting of little more than amplifiers, for visual effects Springfield relied on kicking cups of water off the stage into the audience, and high energy movements aimed at accenting his biceps. The audience, which was made up of ¾ adolescent girls and ¼ parents, loved every minute of it.

The mixture of songs from the two albums included a variety of mellow, ballad-like numbers and the more usual fare of his billboard rock-beat style singles.

"April 24, 1981," which Springfield did perched on a three-legged stool in the center-stage spot light, cast a hush over the audience.

Springfield showed the depth of his musical ability when he performed "Inside Silvia," a ballad off Working Class Dog, at an organ on the side of the stage. "Kristina" also proved to show Springfield's talent.

A rock number that really got the audience excited was "Red Hot and Blue Love." When Springfield sang out, "We'll smoke a joint, jump in bed, and do it, do it, do it all night," a piercing screech filled the Spectrum.

Springfield saved the best for last. He started the finale with his new hit single, "Don't Talk To Strangers." Then he introduced the song which brought him recognition as more than just another pretty face, "Jessie's Girl." At the conclusion of this lengthened version he called out, "I'll be right back."

Moments later, the band started vamping "Jessie's Girl" again, and Springfield slid across the stage in a yellow and black jumpsuit to finish the song.

Never missing a beat, he went right into his hit single, "Love Is Alright Tonight." By now the audience was out of control, standing on their seats, screaming, singing and dancing. When Springfield rocked right into "I've Done Everything For You," the audience reached a frenzied level.

As he ended the song, bowed and said goodnight, there was no plea for an encore. For the audience knew there were no more "hot hits" to be sung. The concert — and their night with Rick — had ended.

As the fans reached up, Springfield rocked and bopped the Spectrum with his recent hit, "Love Is Alright Tonight."

CULTURAL FILM SERIES

World Premiere at Vasey Theatre

For the final production of its 1982 spring season, Villanova Theatre will present the world premiere Chameleons by Emmy-winning playwright Patrick Nolan. James J. Christy will direct the play, which will run April 14-17 and 21-24.

Chameleons is a powerful statement about contemporary values, crackling with wit and dramatic energy. Three married couples rent a luxury home together on a remote Caribbean island. Soon personal and marital frustrations erupt with savage intensity. Dangerous games are played, leading to complex transformations and regression to primitive ritual.

Patrick Nolan achieved national recognition for his 1979 television drama, "The Jericho Mile," for which he was awarded an Emmy for "Outstanding Writing for a Limited Series or Special." Dr. Nolan has taught playwriting and is currently a professor of English at Villanova University. Chameleons, says Nolan, is about "life lived without red lights." His characters, in their need to refute limitations, are "losing themselves — and as a result opt to put on as many skins of identity as they can."

Chameleons will run Wednesdays through Saturdays April 14-17 and 21-24. All performances will begin at 8 p.m. in Vasey Theatre on the Villanova campus, Lancaster and Ithan Avenues, Villanova, PA. Tickets are $5 on Wednesdays and Thursdays and $6 on Fridays and Saturdays, with student and senior citizen discounts and group rates available. 'Cat People': A Sensual Horror

By JOHN F. LYNCH

Cat People is a fantasy thriller produced by Charles Fries and directed by Harold Schrader. The film deals with the bizarre lives of a brother and sister (played by Malcolm McDowell and Nastassia Kinski) who are tormented by their troubled family history.

You see, Paul and Irena are the result of a "marriage" (many generations ago) between a woman and a black leopard. The soul of the woman was transformed to the leopard during this encounter. The leopard in turn became human but returned to an animal state whenever sexually aroused. In every generation since then, reproduction has been achieved through an incestual relationship between brother and sister.

As the film begins, Irena is at New Orleans Airport where she is meeting her brother for the first time in several years, for they were separated at an early age. He has searched every conceivable orphanage to find her and his search has finally ended. Paul is a religious fanatic who seeks freedom from his "cat curse" by having relations with his sister. Whenever he turns into the leopard he kills someone, so he needs Irena to free him.

Irena lives with Paul in his house until, (after turning into the leopard and attacking a hooker), Paul is captured. Irena is drawn to Paul who now resides at the New Orleans Zoo. One night while she is "visiting" him, she is startled by one of the zoo curators named Oliver (played by John Heard). She is fond of Oliver and he gets her a job at the zoo's gift shop.

Paul, on the other hand, kills one of the zoo keepers and escapes from the zoo. From there he searches for Irena to "mate" with her. She is now staying with Oliver, and unwilling to fulfill Paul's needs. One night, while Paul (as the leopard) is attacking Oliver to get to Irena, Paul dies by jumping out of the window.

Since Paul is now dead, the power to transform from human to animal is now passed on to Irena. She cares for Oliver and after making love to him, she turns into the killer animal that she really is. Her story is a tragic one and the ending is sure to chill you to the bone.

Best-known for her role in the film Tess, Kinski is excellent as the sensuous, but mysterious, Irena. Throughout the film, her presence is a joy to behold. Her physical sense of innocence combined with her piercing eyes makes the character Irena very desirable. Kinski is the key to the success of Cat People for her captivating personality keeps the viewer interested throughout the film.

The character Paul is played by Malcolm McDowell (known for his roles in Caligula and Clockwork Orange) McDowell is perfect as the possessed and oversexed Paul. McDowell is convincing in depicting a "being" who may have the appearance of a human but the soul and desires of a ferocious animal.

Finally there is Oliver (played by John Heard). Oliver is your average zoo curator who falls head over heels in love with Irena. It is only at the end of the film that Oliver discovers the "problem" which his love has. Heard plays an adequate role of the clean-cut, nice guy character of Oliver. Oliver is like you and me in the audience. He cannot believe what is happening before him but unlike the audience, he loves Irena in a deep, and passionate way.

Cat People is a fine thriller to sit through. It has the same elements which made movie's like The Exorcist and Carrie so popular. The acting by Kinski and McDowell is excellent and the special effects will leave you on the edge of your seat. Cat People is a movie truly worth seeing.

Movie Review: Quest For Fire

By JACK SALTA

Jean-Jaques Annaud's film-Quest For Fire poignantly and realistically recreates early man's struggle for survival. The film transports man from a worshipper of fire to master of it and uses this transition to illustrate primative man's world where he is both the hunter and the hunted.

Quest For Fire captivates the audience with a panoply of violence, mirth and sensitivity. By juxtaposing such diverse feelings, the tenuity of early man's existence is graphically related. Although the violent scenes seem overindulged, they are necessary in the light of cinematically hardbitten audiences in order to relate man at a point where he is barely more than animal. Quest For Fire affords the viewer a serious look at the man/animal condition without the comfort that unbelievable science fiction provides.

The cast of Quest For Fire has the difficult task of performing without the use of intelligible language. However, with the help of brilliant direction, this gifted troupe of unknowns enthralls the viewer, breathing life into otherwise stock characters.

The film rises above typical documentaries because of its simple yet believable plot in which man ventures out into the world for the salvation of is fellow men. In his quest for fire, he not only finds a source of fire, but also learns how to create it and is thus transformed. The film ends as it begins with a view of a vast landscape and a lonely fire; this ending understates the relevence of what has transpired, and rightly so, for it blends the story back into the scheme of what man has yet to accomplish.

AIAW: The Last Hurrah

By MIKE HEALEY

The Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women (AIAW) was born in 1971 along with the advent of Title IX for the specific purpose of governing women's collegiate athletic programs. Now in 1982, the AIAW is dying a slow and painful death which many attribute to the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA).

Mary Anne Steenrod, coordinator of women's athletics

The AIAW had been for the past 11 years or so the only organization for women's intercollegiate athletics available. There was no other alternative for a college with a newly-thriving women's sports program. Championships in sports were offered only by the AIAW.

But just recently, the NCAA began to offer championships for women's sports. The NCAA claimed that colleges and universities should have the choice to decide between the AIAW and itself. A long-brewing rift began to surface.

As a result of the NCAA's actions, AIAW leaders declared that the NCAA was trying to put them "out of business." The AIAW believed the NCAA's move to be a power play, with money as the bottom line. Since the NCAA had and has more money than the AIAW, it followed that the AIAW would lose membership from its schools.

And if the statistics are studied, that is precisely what happened. As of December, 1980, 35 percent of the AIAW member institutions has switched allegiances to the NCAA for 1981. Of the 228 schools that competed in the AIAW Division One Basketball Tournament, only 130 returned. Among the missing were all eight of the quarter-finalists.

There have been lawsuits and counter lawsuits since then, and the fate of the AIAW is still uncertain. Whatever side one takes in this thorny issue, the fact is that many insitutions have been affected. Villanova is among these institutions.

Mary Anne Steenrod, the director of women's athletics here at Villanova, has taken a realistic approach to the whole situation. "The fight's over," she says, "and we have to deal with the situation as it is. We (the AIAW) are married to the NCAA now so we just have to hope that it works out for the best."

> "If the NCAA provides for women what it provided for men, then fine. But I'm certainly not going to cry over it..."

Villanova is making the leap from the AIAW because it has no other option. In doing so, it will be beset by several problems, the most crucial of which is money. "Villanova has been very generous in its funding of the women's programs," says Steenrod, "but with today's economy, you just can't go from Division II to I in all sports (a requirement of the NCAA) and not feel it financially."

Perhaps the major drawback involved with the switch is that Villanova's womens teams must all make the monumental jump from Division II to I in a single year. Since Division II teams are allowed only six athletic scholarships and Division I Teams 12, next year Nova wil be competing against teams with double the talent. Thus, as Steenrod states, "Our won-loss record won't be that affected, but our chances of excelling in post-season play will be pretty slim."

Despite the fact that so many schools switched allegiances the past few years, Villanova was one institution that stayed with the AIAW until the very end. "The reason that we stayed with the AIAW this year," says Steenrod, "was because for so long, it was the only organization around.

"I also strongly felt," she continues, "that we owed them our commitment when things weren't going so well. I didn't want to jump ship." The final factor was that by holding off, Villanova was able to play one extra year of Division II in preparation for the trials and tribulations of next year.

Villanova will assuredly be tested in the next few years because of the competition. But Steenrod remains optimistic, if guardedly so. "If the NCAA provides for women what it provided for men, then fine," she says. "But, she adds, "I'm certainly not going to cry over it because that's the way it's going to be."

Squad Splits Double Header

ER . . . OUT! Villanova's Ann Hannigan steams towards a me plate collision in the Wildcats' 4-3 victory over the Uniersity of Pennsylvania yesterday. Charles Guida Photo

By BOB HELLER

On a cold and slightly snowy Palm Sunday afternoon, the women's softball team took on the Rams of West Chester State in a make-up doubleheader. The Cats were looking for their first win and their first run of the season, having been shutout by both Temple and Lafayette in their two previous games.

West Chester State started things off right away in the first game, scoring two runs in their half of the first inning. The Cats came back in the bottom half of the inning with a leadoff single by Patti Nowlan, a one-out double by first baseman Kathie Beisel, and an RBI single by catcher Denise Reid before the Rams were able to get three outs.

In the third inning, the Cats, trailing 2-1, scored three times to take a 4-2 lead. Kathie Beisel started things off with a single, the second of her four hits in the game. After a sacrifice by Reid, third baseman Donna Hurley hit a double, scoring Beisel. The Cats had runners on second and third when Brenda Walker hit a two-out single which scored two runs for Villanova.

West Chester State bounced right back, scoring one run in the fourth and one in the fifth inning to even up the score 4-4. In the bottom of the fifth the Wildcat bats came to life. The scoring was again started by Kathie Beisel. She got her third hit of the game with a home run down the third base line. Her run proved to be the game-winner for the Cats. Singles by Reid, Hurley, and LuAnn Fare and a two-out double by pinch-hitter Marie Wozniak gave the Cats a 7-4 lead. This was how the score finished to make the Cats proud owners of a 7-4 victory.

Beisel went 4 for 4 with a double, a game winning homer and RBI. Also outstanding for the Cats was starting pitcher Shaula DeMarco, holding the Rams to just four runs and pitching superbly.

After a short break to allow the girls some time to warm themselves, the second game commenced, as the temperature got even colder.

Both teams remained scoreless through three innings with flawless pitching by Villanova's starting pitcher, freshman Bonnie Bell, and some excellent defensive plays by Beisel at first base. In the bottom of the fourth inning the Cats got on the scoreboard with a one-out single and stolen base by Fare, a sacrifice by Walker, and a two-out RBI hit by outfielder Andrea Burton, scoring Fare.

In the top of the fifth inning the Cats defense completely collapsed, allowing the Rams nine runs and an almost insurmountable 9-1 lead. The Cats, down but not out, came back with three runs in the bottom of the fifth. A walk to Patti Nowlan, and some mistakes by West Chester, allowing Ann Hannigan and Beisel to get on base, helped set up the first two runs of the inning. RBI singles by Reid, and Hurley, and a single by Fare loaded the bases with two outs. The West Chester pitcher proceeded to walk Walker for the other Cats run.

The Cats did not score in their half of the sixth and had only one more chance to catch West Chester. Kathie Beisel started things off again, with a single. She moved to second on a West Chester error, and to third on a single by Reid. When Reid tried to steal second, which she did successfully, Beisel promptly stole home, making the score 9-5 West Chester. The Rams of West Chester were victor-ious 9-5, and the Wildcats had to be satisfied with a split of the doubleheader.

Again, Kathie Beisel was outstanding for the Cats. In spite of the fact that she had only one hit in four times up, she managed to get on base the other three times with a walk, error, and a fielders choice. Defensively, she made some brilliant plays at first base. Also looking good defensively for Villanova were shortstop Ann Hannigan, catcher Denise Reid and outfielders Patti Nowlan and Andrea Burton.

Tracksters Capture Honors at Dogwood Relays

By RAY ENGLER

The Wildcats opened their outdoor track season in sunny California at the Martin Luther King Games held at Stanford University on April 2 and 3. Fine individual performances by Rodney Allison were turned in by many runners, often qualifying them for the IC4A meet.

In the hurdle events Rodney Allison took 3rd place in the 110 meter high hurdles in 13.74 seconds which qualified him for the IC4A meet and the NCAA Championships, Craig Morris took second place in the 400 meter intermediate hurdles with a time of 52.11 which also qualified him for the IC4A meet.

John Borgese and Mike England ran within tenths of a second of each other in the 800 meter run with England posting a 1:48.9 and Borgese clocking 1:49.5, a personal best.

Senior Ross Donoghue ran the distance in the 5,000 meter run to post a personal best of 13:39.2.

But the best individual performances by Villanovans were in the mile run won by Marcus O'Sullivan in 4:00.1, an IC4A and NCAA qualifying time and only one tenth of a second off the magical four minute mile. John Hunter ran a 4:04.2 in the same race which also qualified him for the IC4A's.

The relay events, where Villanova is perennially strong, provided the trackster's best showing of the meet. Running in two relays, the Wildcats managed to set Stanford Stadium records in both. In the 4x800 relay, Ken Lucks (1:52.6), Borgese (1:50.4), O'Sullivan (1:51.3), and England (1:49.7) combined for a best-in-the-world in 1982 time of 7:24.0. The best way for the Wildcats to augment that was with the distance medley relay victory which combined the talents of John Marshall (1/2 mile, 1:51.8), Young (1/4 mile, 46.2), Hunter (3/4 mile, 2:54.8) and Donoghue (one mile, 4:04.2) to record the fastest distance medley time posted in two years, 9:37.0.

The Wildcats also ran last weekend at the Dogwood Relays hosted by the University of Tennessee. Again junior hurdler Wilson ran well in the high hurdles to capture the event in 14:07.

As yet unheard from freshman Tony O'Reilly ran a personal best, IC4A qualifying time of 14:11.2 in the 5000 meter run.

Again, however, Villanova really shone in the relays. The Cats captured first in the 4x1500 meter relay and the spring medley relay and were edged at the line by 0:00.12 by Tennesee in the two-mile event.

Seniors Ross Donoghue (1:52.8) and Hunter (1:48.3) and sophomores Borgese (1:50.7) and O'Sullivan (1:48.9) going into the anchor leg, but Hunter's high calibre time was not fast enough for Tennessee's Dave Patrick, who edged him in the gun lap.

In the sprint medley event, freshman John Marshall, running only his third race since February, ran the anchor 800 meters in 1:48.2 and led the team to victory over Ohio State.

Villanova's 4x1500 meter win may be a prelude to the Penn Relays next weekend. Hunter, England, O'Sullivan and Donoghue topped second place Indiana by more than ten seconds posting a winning time of 15:16.13.

Race For The World Series

By DEAN C. BALSAMINI

The snow has finally melted and school is almost over. The calendar says that spring begins on March 21. But if you are like this writer spring began on April 5, the first day of the 1982 Baseball Season.

This year should be much more enjoyable than the last as the only strikes that will be called will be on the field and not off. In this writer's opinion last year's campaign never occurred with the Phillies being baseball's last real champion. Added excitement will be that of several "name" players switching uniforms. Reggie is now an Angel (wasn't he always?). Dave Collins, Ken Griffey and George Foster are humming "New York, New York," and Vida Blue is now a Royal pain in (to) the A's.

As for the pennant races, to borrow a phrase, the more things change, the more they remain the same. Let us first take a look at the American League East:

Once again the New York Yankees should prevail. George Steinbrenner's Bronx Bombers are now The Men of Steal. "The Boss" has rebuilt the New Yorkers around speed, adding Ken Griffey and Dave Collins to his star-studded team. Recently acquired shortstop Roy Smalley may spell the end for Bucky Dent. The bench is the deepest in baseball. The loss of Ron Davis should not hurt the relief corps as ex-Mariner Shane Rawley is first-rate. Then there's Goose Gossage. This team has an over-abundance of everyday players though. Look for Kito make another trade — especially if the Yanks start out slow.

The Baltimore Orioles should finish as runners-up in Earl Weaver's final year as manager, with the Milwaukee Brewers third. Boston, Detroit and Cleveland will battle for the next three spots as Toronto once again will look like an expansion team.

Over in the West, look for Oakland to nip the White Sox at the wire. Chicago is vastly improved with the addition of Steve Kemp and Tom Paciorek. But Billy Martin's A's are the most fundamentally sound team in baseball. The pitching staff finished with the most complete games in the bigs over the past two years and Martin has added Dave Lopes, Joe Rudi and Dan Meyer to a once thin bench. The only glaring weakness is the bullpen, where Dave Beard must emerge as the stopper. Kansas City will finish third with Reggie and the Angels of California coming in fourth. They have absolutely no pitching; expect many 10-9 games. Texas, Minnesota and Seattle will fill the last three spots.

In the Senior Circuit the Los Angeles Dodgers will be the best in the West. Their pitching featuring Fernando "Mas Dinero" is as strong as any staff in the league, save Houston. But Houston does not have the bats that the Dodgers have. Mark Belanger has been added for defensive purposes while the bullpen is led by Dave Stewart. Houston, Atlanta, Cincinnati and San Diego should follow with San Francisco occupying the cellar. (They traded every one of last year's starting pitchers) Can you name their pitching staff?

Finally, the Montreal Expos will reign supreme in the National League East. The Phillies will once again fall short this year. Dick Davis and George Vuckovich have yet to prove they are everyday players. The same can be said for catcher Bo Diaz (excellent defensively), who has never played more than 120 games in his young career. Many teams will pitch around Mike Schmidt, baseball's best all-around player. The pitching is suspect as only Steve Carlton can be depended on. This team is talented but erratic. Expect a second place finish unless the Phils can swing a deal for Dave Parker (at press time a trade was being discussed). Look for the Mets to finish third, with Dallas Green's Cubs, Cardinals and Pittsburgh Pirates rounding out the second division.

Baseball Team Suffers Blizzard of Defeats, Drops Two More

By JOE MARUSAK

The rain and snow which hit Villanova University shortly before Easter break might have bothered most people, but probably not Larry Shane.

Shane's varsity baseball team was a dismal 1-9 going into the weekend of April 3-4. They needed a chance to regroup.

The weather provided the perfect respite. On April 3, heavy rains cancelled Nova's game against William Patterson. The downpour continued into Sunday, when the Wildcats were scheduled to play a doubleheader against Georgetown.

Then came the snow, which blanketed the campus on the day of VU's next scheduled game, April 6 against St. Joseph's. Hopes of playing the next day against Navy sank when once again, the weather interfered.

Finally, as Passover began, the Wildcats got in a game. Several games at that, as Villanova traveled to Catholic University and then back home for a doubleheader gainst Niagara. They escaped with a 1-2 record.

Disaster then struck when Temple University visited the Cats this past Monday. In the final four innings of the game, Villanova relievers gave up six home runs as the Wildcats fell to the powerful Owls, 17-2.

Phil Ortolani, a freshman, was the first Nova reliever to fall prey to Temples potent bats. He came on in relief of Steve Balmer, the team's starter, in the sixth inning. With one out, Derrick Dempsey clobbered the Owls' first homer. In the next inning, it was Dave Wollner's turn to round the bases.

In the eighth inning, Cliff Carter smacked one off Ortolani. Four batters later, Rob Eller knocked a three-run shot over the fence. In came reliever Basil Castrovinci, who yielded two home runs in the ninth — to the catcher John Marzano and to Wollner.

At the end of five innings, the score was relatively close at 5-2. Temple had jumped out to an early 4-0 lead, scoring two runs in both of the first two innings.

Villanova struck back in the bottom half of the third. Ray Paparella led off with a single against the Owls' starting pitcher, Bill Mendek. The next batter, John Corbin, lined a shot past the centerfielder, Carter. Paparella scored.

Two outs later, the VU catcher, Mike Esposito, reached first on a high chopper mishandled by Mendek. Corbin came home with the second run.

It was to be the Wildcats' final run of the day, as the lefty Mendek handled Villanova's batters the rest of the way.

After Balmer gave up those initial runs, the 6-3 righthander did rather well. In the third inning, he struck out two and assisted on the third out. The Newtown Square native struck out the side in the fourth, and in the fifth he allowed one run on a hit and a sacrifice fly.

After that, the relievers appeared and Temple proceeded to pound out sixteen hits and score 12 runs.

Running down the Villanova roster, you will find two seniors, three juniors, six sophomores and ten freshmen. Of the seven pitchers on Shane's staff, five are freshmen including Balmer, Ortolani and Castrovinci.

In an interview last week, Shane stressed the relative inexperience of his club. "We are relying on guys right out of high school. In past years, we had a nucleus with which to work. This year we just don't have that nucleus."

Inevitably, such a situation can present problems. As Shane explained, "Everything happens a lot quicker (in college ball). The freshmen need time to adjust."

Dante Santoni . . . From Bench To Base

By ANN GUIDA

In the fall of 1979, Coach Larry Shane held baseball tryouts for the upcoming '79-'80 season. And along with the scholarship players came an assortment of athletes each attempting to display his baseball prowess for those last remaining positions on the bench; among them, a sophomore by the name of Dante Santoni.

Santoni, who tried out for the team his freshman year, and was cut, decided to try again the following year. "I thought that if I had a good season in my summer league and everything went well, that I'd try out again my sophomore year. I figured I had nothing to lose," says Santoni. And go well it did. Dante found himself in the starting line-up by the eighth game of his sophomore year.

But that was only the beginning of Santoni's outstanding three-year venture. At the end of his sophomore year he was named to the ECAC Southern Division All-Star team at third base, finishing the season with a .342 batting average, fourth best on the team.

With junior year underway, Santoni was to see a great deal of action. Playing 32 of 32 games in the '80-'81 season and swatting .345 (again, fourth best on the team), Santoni was again rewarded for his performance by being named to the Philadelphia Journal All-Area team.

Currently a senior, Santoni has rightfully earned his position as co-captaian of the 1981-82 Wildcat squad. As one of five upper class veterans left on the team, Santoni will be facing a challenging year with a young team at his side. At present he is batting .161 after nine games and leading the team in RBI's. He comments, "We're starting out very slow, we have a lot of young guys on the squad. Being on this losing streak, we're making too many mistakes."

Senior baseball star Dante Santoni

But when the chips are down, Santoni can be counted on. As Coach Shane puts it, "Dante is an aggressive, dedicated ball player. he tries all the time. He's a good team leader who is always giving 100 percent." And Santoni has definitely proven that.

Santoni, who will be graduating in May, plans to work in the accounting field, and will be seeing only occasional action in summer baseball league.

Tracksters Grab Gold

By BEVERLY REILLY

In a pool of eight teams, the Wildcat women tracksters were the first to rise to the surface. Villanova outscored their host team, George Mason, by five points at the George Mason Invitational, Fairfax, Va., two weeks ago.

Although it was a cloudy and rainy day, the sun shone over the Wildcats. At the end of the rainbow, there was more than a pot of gold for Villanova. Besides bringing home a team award, the tracksters collected 18 gold medals, four silver medals, and three bronze medals. An individual award was also presented to sophomore All-American Patty Bradley for her outstanding performance in the field.

Bradley acted as a strong catalyst in the Villanova victory. Her fine performances on the track and in the field gained her two individual first places with two new school records. In the field, Bradley took first in the long jump setting the new school record at 19-2. In the track events, Bradley ran the 400-meter hurdles in 1:01.4 to capture first and another school record. Bradley also placed a close second in the 100-meter hurdles.

Senior All-American Jennifer Whitfield also gained individual honors in the 800 meter-run by placing first. All-American Veronica McIntosh ran a close race in the 400 meter run taking second. Another All-American, Peggy Stewart, captured the gold with her first place in the high jump. Stewart also racked-in the points with her third in the 100-meter hurdles and fourth in the 400-meter hurdles.

Other first place honors were obtained in the distance events. Seniors Sue Shea and Carol Gilsinger tied for a first in the 5000-meter run. Both Shea and Gilsinger doubled to place second and fifth respectively in the 3000-meter run. Freshman Mary Ellen McGowan won the 1500-meter run as her teammate Eva Marie Berardi followed in third. In the 10,000-meter run, Beverly Reilly placed third with an EAIAW qualifying time of 38:50.5.

In the relays, Villanova captured first in the 800-meter relay (Stewart, McIntosh, Bradley, Whitfield) while setting a new school record at 1:46.7. The 4x400 meter relay (McIntosh, Bradley, Berardi, Whitfield) and the 4x800 meter relay team also took the gold.

As if the medals, team plaque, and individual trophy weren't enough, the Wildcats still managed to bring home more profits. The invitational was sponsored by Converse and all first place winners received a pair of sneakers. The tracksters definitely burned rubber in this meet but it undoubtedly was replaced as the athletes returned home with 18 pairs of shoes. With all the hardware, shoes, school records, and individual honors, the George Mason Invitational proved successful for the women tracksters.

Lax Slump

The Villanovan Laxmen fell to Mount St. Mary's in a 7-6 sudden death overtime defeat last weekend. The Lacrosse squad held the Mount to seven goals, well below their average 16 per game.

Coach Lee Stevens was pleased with the effort but cited mistakes late in the game as the reason for the loss. "We made key mistakes late in the game," he said, "but we played a good game. With so many freshman starting, we're bound to make mistakes."

Scoring two each for Villanova was senior Tom Kelly and sophomore Tom Gravina. Senior Kevin McHugh had one goal and sophomore Paul Campenelli had one goal and two assists.

Alumni Demand Driscoll Resign; Driscoll Responds: 'No Way'

By CHARLES GUIDA AND JERRY ARTH

At a press conference held at the Presidential Apartments on City Line Ave. on April 15, the General Alumni Association of Villanova, acting on behalf of more than 20 individual alumni clubs, called for the resignation of the University's president, the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A.

Father President John M. Driscoll, O.S.A. Jeff Page Photo

Doug Murray, president of the General Alumni Association, the official alumni group of Villanova, listed six reasons for the surprise announcement: the closing of the Alumni House, now the Augustinian Provincial; the closing without notice of the alumni newspaper, The Villanova Alumnus; the transfer of responsibility for the Annual Fund, without alumni consultation, from the alumni to the University; the elimination of any reference to alumni in the Mission Statement; the lack of elected alumni representatives on the Board of Trustees; and, possibly the most important reason to the alumni, the unexpected dropping of Villanova's football program last year.

Alumni Statement

According to the statement read by Murray, the call for Driscoll's resignation "is not the opinion of a handful of alumni but represents the feelings of thousands of alumni throughout the country." Murray further went on to say that "The alumni's major complaint is the University's unwillingness to discuss important issues that directly affect the alumni with alumni representatives and the inflexible and dogmatic style with which the alumni is treated."

Also, Murray said, "It is felt that the divisiveness created within the University by the current administration is counter to the best interests of the University," and that consequently, "It is with great regret but total resolve that the alumni now ask Father Driscoll to step down as President of Villanova."

Alumni Meet with Trustees

The news conference came two days after the association met with and presented their grievances to the Board of Trustees, and asked for them to be resolved within 24 hours. A letter to Murray following the meeting from Joseph E. Walters, vice chairman of the Board, said that because of the "complexity and gravity" of the demands they could not be decided upon within the 24-hour time limit. But, the letter continued, the Executive Committee of the Board would meet with the alumni within the next two weeks for "further discussion."

Murray said that this was unacceptable to the association, and thus it was decided to call the news conference.

"The alumni definitely did not wish to go public with this, but we're tired of being ignored by the University except for giving," Murray stated. Present with Murray were the 12 officers and directors of the General Alumni Association, many of whom are also active in the Committee to Restore Football and various alumni clubs.

Murray, after noting that Driscoll had already received a vote of confidence from the Trustees, said that he was not really expecting that Driscoll would resign right away. However, Murray did say, "We shall continue to require his resignation. The effort will grow rather than diminish." Murray also said that he thought there was support for the alumni's call among the students and faculty. "It is my impression that the student body is not overwhelmed by Father Driscoll," he said.

Murray would not directly say that if Driscoll did not resign, the association would then ask alumni to withhold financial support for the University. However, he did state, "We're not saying that publicly, but you can figure that out."

Regarding the re-instatement of football, Murray added that the Senate Supports Driscoll

By LEONARD J. La BARTH

Expressing "outrage" at the Villanova General Alumni Association's request for Father President John Driscoll's resignation, the University Senate voted its support of the president's intentions by a 17-3-6-1 vote at its April 16 meeting.

Following general business that included the finalization of several Senate resolutions and announcements and correspondence, a motion to support Driscoll was proposed in a rationale prepared by Warren O. Richardson, chairman of the University Senate.

Richardson stepped down from the chair, relinquishing his responsibility to impartiality and proposed motion US 8182-7-5.

Citing that he was "embarrassed by the airing of university problems publicly" and that Driscoll is being asked to resign "because he recommended that the football program be dropped," Richardson said that the statement presented by Douglas Murray, president of the alumni association, does a disservice to many of the alumni who do not agree with the statement.

"In offering my motion today, my intent is to set the record straight — Villanova stands for quality education. I therefore urge you to reaffirm the Senate's commitment to quality education and to support my resolution."

Following Richardson's proposal, the senators spent about one half-hour either defending or refuting Richardson's motion.

John Blatt, an alumnus who voted against the proposed resolution said the "university should provide a social education in addition to academic excellence." Blatt said he supports Doug Murray in what he did.

The other two "no" votes were cast by student senators Vic Falvo and Gerry Malanga. Falvo later suggested an amendment which was refused.

Paul Tufano, student body president elect for 1982-83, said at the meeting that he went to the alumni conference denouncing Driscoll not knowing what was going to happen.

"I want to express my concern about what is taking place today by voting for this," said Tufano. "I don't know if voting for the resolution means that I'm saying that football shouldn't come back. I feel that there are some deeper implications to this resolution than is apparent at first glance."

Dean of Nursing M. Louise Fitzpatrick cited steps taken by the administration to maintain and continue to pursue excellence in education, especially in new programs: the M.B.A., Computer Science Program, masters in nursing, development of West Campus, data information system and computer facilities.

A highly emotional Senator Patrick J. Rice stated he felt "a sense of betrayal." "We know different than what is being given out as the gospel truth. Father Driscoll has sat in the presence with the alumni representatives and described how we could make other plans and make free to them other places in the face of the situation."

Richardson further supported his resolution by quoting a Chronicle of Higher Education article which stated that when money is cut, sports should be the first to go. "Funds for athletics should be the first to be cut when budget reductions are necessary according to a majority of colleges and universities surveyed in a national study conducted by the Center for Study of Higher Education."

"The meeting was highly emotional. There was a feeling of outrage expressed by the senators," reflected Richardson later. "I do not think that Murray spoke for all the alumni. Villanova is about education — as I said in the motion. Students come here for quality education, not football."

Rev. Patrick J. Rice Charles Guida Photo

Richardson, who as cnairman of the Senate is to remain impartial and abstain from voting, stepped down because he felt the issue had to be addressed. In stepping down as chairman at the meeting, Richardson gained a vote as a faculty member and was eligible to participate in the debate. Senator Angelo Armenti assumed the chairman's position and did not vote.

Preceeding the debate and vote, correspondence from Driscoll regarding Senate legislation was read.

Senate resolution US 8182-3-8 was accepted by the administration. The resolution reads: "That

Peoples

A coalition of more than 100 welfare, labor, women's rights, black, student and other organizations have planned six days of "national resistance" to the Reagan administration's domestic and foreign policies, to be climaxed by a march on the nation's capital on May 1.

The All-People Conference is a national coalition of various organizations joining forces together in opposition to Reagan's "right-wing policies."

In Philadelphia, the action has been endorsed by the Welfare Rights Organization, Rev. Robert Coombe, national vice-president of the Methodist Federation for Social action, student organizations from Temple University and others.

All-Peoples Conference national coordinator Monica Moorehead, who will be organizing in Philadelphia until May 1, believes that the effort will show that "the vast majority of people in the area, as well as the nation, oppose Reagan's programs."

"We feel that his policy of putting the Pentagon before the people is both costly and dangerous," said Moorehead.

Alumni Want Resignation

alumni would like to see it returned to Villanova as soon as possible. "I would like to see football played at some level here in 1982."

Driscoll Responds

In an interview with the Villanovan this week, Driscoll flatly rejected the alumni association's demand for his resignation. "No way," he said, "and you can quote me on that one. I've received a vote of confidence from the Board of Trustees, the Senate, the student government, and there's a clear indication of faculty support." Driscoll also said that he has gotten "substantial" support from individual alumni.

Driscoll in the interview also addressed some of the grievances listed by the alumni.

Regarding the closing of the Alumni House, he explained that it was "swapped" with the Augustinian order in exchange for facilities in St. Mary's Hall which the order previously used. He said that he has promised the alumni another house on the Morris Estates. "As soon as our zoning problems are resolved, they'll have a building."

In the area of the Annual Fund, which the alumni association wants restored to alumni control, Driscoll disagreed, saying, "It's properly in the hands of the (University's) Development Office, as it is in over 80 percent of the colleges and universities across the country."

Driscoll did admit that the alumni's complaint about omission from the University's Mission Statement was valid. "It was an oversight and mistake on our part," he said, "which should and will be remedied."

Football

But in response to the demand that football be restored, Driscoll dismissed the idea completely. "I as president would attempt to resolve any of the issues, with the one exception being football. The Board of Trustees has firmly rendered its decision on that, and there will be no attempt made at restoration in the immediate future."

Driscoll also stated that he personally did not feel that the alumni could carry out any attempt to dissuade individuals from donating money to the University. Referring to the alumni who held the news conference, he said, "This group is certainly not representative of all alumni — they can't prevent all alumni from giving." He added, "Even though the University needs the full and generous support of the alumni, it is not likely that the actions of this group will seriously damage the University's financial position."

Driscoll, commenting on his past relations with the alumni, characterized them as "open, friendly and cooperative," but added that "I'm disappointed with these people." However, he said, "I would hope that our differences can be readily and quickly resolved through continued dialogue. I have no personal animosity to any of the alumni."

Senate Gives Vote-of-Confidence

In a move related to the call for the president's resignation, the University Senate last Friday gave Driscoll a vote-of-confidence by passing a resolution introduced by Sen. Warren Richardson.

The resolution read: "Be it resolved: That the Villanova University Senate reaffirms as the primary pursuit of Villanova University, academic excellence sought within the Judeo-Christian tradition and supports those steps taken by Reverend John M. Driscoll, O.S.A. to achieve that goal of excellence."

standardized and computerized results be reviewed for accuracy before dissemination (course-/teacher evaluations)."

US 8182-4-2: "To increase access support facilities such as Falvey Library and the Computer Center, consistent with a reasonable cost/benefit analysis" has also been accepted.

Driscoll's report read that he will be happy to see that the Librarian reviews the hours that the library is open during the week and see that student access can be increased if this does not entail undue expenses.

Concerning the 1982-83 budget, passed by the Senate at its March 19 meeting, the Board of Trustees took no action on resolution US 8182-6-3 that asks the Board to "examine the budget to find areas other than salaries and benefits in which more austerity can be applied with savings directed to student aid and loan programs and/or an overall reduction in tuition increase." According to the Board of Trustees rationale, the proposed budget is a reasonable one "incorporated with a level of austerity consonant with the level of educational and support services required to accomplish University objectives."

The report from the Athletic Advisory Committee, chaired by Dr. Joseph Desjardins, was to be read at the meeting but was not available due to the committee's problems in getting access to some information including budget projections from other schools.

The committee is providing a rationale for a recommendation to the Board of Trustees that they reconsider their decision to discontinue the football program.

Concerning elections of senators, Justin Green and Eleanor Fenol Strack were re-elected. Miriam Vosburgh was elected to an Arts seat and William B. Ferguson has returned as the Engineering Senator. The two alumni senators, John Blatt and Robert Blatt hath both been re-elected.

Senators Joseph George, Jr., Alain J. Phares and William J. Rice will not return as senators next year.

Winners Named

By LEONARD J. La BARTH

Dr. Fritz Nova and Dr. Bernard Prusak have been named the recipients of the 1982 Lindback Awards.

Granted on an annual basis to encourage effective teaching on the undergraduate level, the awards will be presented publicly at commencement exercises in May by Father President John Driscoll. Driscoll selected the two winners of the tax-free cash prizes of $1,000 each from five nominees.

In the voting held March 15 and 16, 580 seniors, juniors and sophomores and 208 faculty members selected the five nominees from the original list of 22 faculty members nominated.

"In many ways I am grateful," said Nova, a professor in the political science department. "I'm more surprised than anything else." Nova has taught at Villanova for 29 years. He received his Master's Degree from Haverford College and his Ph.D. from the University of Pennsylvania.

"I've always felt that there should be some kind of objective way of testing teaching," said Nova. "All professors give their best intentions. Over the years I think I have developed a better ability to reach the student. I think that I can communicate with them and the students can communicate with me."

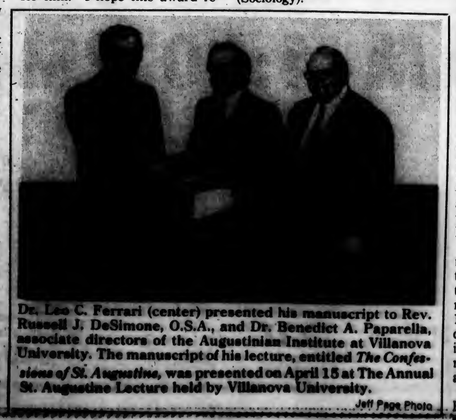
Prusak, in his 13th year as a professor in the religious studies department, is grateful to the students and the faculty who voted for him. "I hope this award reflects a confidence the students have in my teaching ability. Hopefully, it is a sign that the teaching has had some impact."

Prusak received his B.A. from Seton Hall, the S.T.L. at Gregorian University and the J.C.D. from Lateran University (Rome).

"This award is something I share with my colleagues. It is a reflection of what the department is trying to do in relation to the purpose of the University." Prusak also attributes his success to his ability to make students think. "I try to engage the students to think through issues."

The Christian R. and Mary F. Lindback Foundation makes the Lindback grants available to a select number of colleges in the Delaware Valley. The awards have been granted on an annual basis since 1961.

Those receiving honorable mention in this year's voting are the following: Emily M. Binns (Religious Studies), Sterling F. Delano (English), John A. Doody (Philosophy), Harry L. Gelman (Accounting), Michael J. Hones (Physics), James W. Klingler (B.A.), Oliver G. Ludwig (Chemistry), June W. Lytel (English), Martin J. Manley (Political Science), Thomas F. Monahan (Accounting), James J. Murphy (English), Teresa A. Nance (Speech), Gaetano N. Pastore (Modern Languages), Bernard Shanley (Religious Studies), David J. Sprows (Math), James P. Tuck (Psychology), and Barry S. Young (Sociology).



Dr. Leo C. Ferrari (center) presented his manuscript to Rev. Russell J. DeSimone, O.S.A., and Dr. Benedict A. Paparella, associate directors of the Augustinian Institute at Villanova University. The manuscript of his lecture, entitled The Confessions of St. Augustine, was presented on April 15 at The Annual St. Augustine Lecture held by Villanova University.

Drop & Add Will Be Revived

By KATHY McSHEA

According to Rev. Lawrence Gallen, O.S.A., acting vice-president for academic affairs, the office of the registrar intends to reinstitute some type of drop/add for next semester. However, at the present time university officials are not certain what form the new drop/add will take.

Although all students were sent letters along with registration materials in the second week of March expressly stating that there would be no drop/add, at the time the letters were sent it was common knowledge among University officials connected with the matter that some type of drop/add would be necessary.

"We said there was no drop/add just to get everyone in there and get what they want," said Gallen, who initiated the decision to do away with the previous form of drop/add." We're going to have a very limited drop/add.

"When I got this position I was determined to do something about the mess of registration," explained Gallen, who has just been appointed to his post this year. Highlighting the necessity for a change with the process of drop/add, he recounted; "Three semesters ago there were 10,000 drop/adds and we have less than 6,000 students."

In the future, registration should be a much smoother process than Villanova has known in years past, according to Gallen. At appointed times students will present their tentative schedules to operators at computer terminals. As their selected classes are keyed in to the computer, the students will know immediately whether they are in the class or are closed out of it.

This type of registration process was designed in part to eliminate what David Smith, registrar at the University, characterized as a system "where 'who you know' controlled everything."

The University, according to Gallen, has spent over $1 million and 15 months time in bringing the academic computer up to top quality and upgrading the administrative computer. Gallen also noted that the funding for this new computer system is coming out of the capital budget of the University and therefore is not in any way paid for out of the student's tuition.

Rev. Larence Gallen, O.S.A.

In the process of installing this computer, Gallen conceded that, "The University almost closed down, we couldn't get anything off that computer". Once the computer has been successfully installed, however, the computer system and the registration process specifically, promises to be "much more efficient."

Gallen said that alterations of schedules for next year will be possible at the beginning of the semester "if the student has a good reason to change it." At the present time the Registrar's Office plans to deal with next year's drop/adds as individual cases.

Smith said that the new system is an attempt to satisfy the majority of students, and commented that there have been more compliments than complaints with the new registration. Yet he also acknowledged that there are academic flaws within the departments that have not been answered. "It is not perfect," said Smith, "You can't be. Some people have to take the dregs."

IBS Sponsors Fest

By JACK McHUGH

The International Business Society sponsored an International Business Conference commemorating the silver anniversary of the European Economic Community with all day activities at the Connelly Center Wednesday, April 14.

Organized by Dr. Adolph Butkys, a panel of speakers was headed by Dr. Franklin Root of the Wharton Business School at the University of Pennsylvania, an expert on the EEC; William Gaillard, head of the media delegation of the EEC; Mrs. Dansel Spengler, press attache for the French Embassy in New York; and Richard Humbert of the U.S. Department of Commerce's section on International Trade Administration.

Governor Richard Thornburgh, although in the Philadelphia area, could not make it but sent a letter in lieu of his presence. The German representative called in sick and the British representative was forced to cancel due to the Falkland Islands crisis.

Root spoke first, giving a summary of the EEC from its formation until the present. According to Root, the EEC experienced a period of sustained growth in the 1960s, but in the 1970s there was a decline of productivity characterized by fluctuating exchange rates, skyrocketing energy prices and "stagflation."

Because of these problems, "the EEC is turning its back on its founder's dream of a 'united Europe,' "said Root. He believes the EEC could be a third superpower if united, but feels this is highly unlikely in the future unless Western Europe is threatened and forces the unification.

Root proposed several questions of the EEC which all basically questioned whether the EEC should improve on its achievements of the past two decades of high growth and a "free trade area" or should continue to drift apart toward protectionism — "national solutions."

After a 30 minute film on the history of the EEC, Gaillard spoke, highlighting the economic problems of the last three years' record unemployment, declining production, etc. These problems, according to Gaillard, have weakened the EEC voice somewhat. "The EEC will come out of it intact, however," said Gaillard. "The community will solve its trade problems with the U.S. and Japan."

Gaillard also refuted Root's charge that the EEC has turned its back on the concept of a "united Europe" but did admit the process was slowing down and does not foresee it happening in the near future.

Spengler spoke from the viewpoint of the French on the EEC's problems. Spengler said that the French government feels the EEC must invest in the third industrial revolution (robotics, computers

Fedigan Gets No Reply

By BETH BONINA

The residents of Fedigan Hall sent a letter last week to the Director of Resident Life, Chris Janosik, complaining about the inadequate living conditions in that dormitory.

The letter, which appeared in last week's issue of the Villanovan, cited the Residence Office has failed "to recognize and act upon the deficiencies of Fedigan as a Villanova housing facility."

Janosik refused to comment on the letter.

Included in the letter was an itemized list of improvements that they feel are necessary to make Fedigan a satisfactory housing facility. Matt Devine, a sophomore engineering major, and a resident of Fedigan commented, "This dormitory is in desperate need of renovation. It is unbelievable that we pay so much money for room and board, and yet we are forced to live with conditions that are practically subhuman."

Some of the complaints that the residents of Fedigan have expressed are the need for new desks and desk chairs. According to some residents, these are so uncomfortable that it is difficult to sit and study.

Also noted in the letter was the need for well-budgeted closet space. According to the residents, "As the closets are now, the position of the clothes racks cause a total waste of about two feet of width space." The residents also cited the need for closet doors, which they are currently lacking, or new shower curtains to replace the ones which are currently serving as closet doors.

According to the letter, a serious problem that should be corrected is the lack of safety of the bunk beds: "the relaxed springs in these old beds cause the frames to shift." Devine commented.

Devine further stated that he hoped that these corrections can be made as soon as possible. "It is very embarrassing when parents come here to visit; when I asked if they wanted to sit down, they said that they would rather stand."

and micro-processes). "The EEC is experiencing a crisis in confidence due to the high unemployment now experienced in every country in the EEC."

Butkys' next gave the German point of view, speaking in place of the absent German representative. According to Butkys, the Germans have benefitted in three ways from the EEC. The first way has been through trading opportunities. Secondly, it provides a special relief of the country's war guilt by allowing the country to "hide" in the EEC. Thirdly, it provides a political equality between a conquered country and its conquerors. "All this makes West Germans the most responsive to the EEC and its possibilities," said Butkys.

In conclusion, Humbert spoke on the U.S. developing trade with the EEC. "The U.S. and the EEC have large investments in each other and carry on more than one-third (36 percent) of the world's trade. They are also each other's biggest markets," reported Humbert.

Butkys later said that the only thing he would do differently in the future would be to ask the other Commerce and Finance faculty for imput and their cooperation in releasing their classes to come to the seminar.

"All of the guests were pleased and the only complaint came from Dr. Root who wished more students had come," said Butkys.

Tentative plans have been made for the next seminar which will probably be held in October with Senator John Heinz as the featured speaker.

Dorm Proposed

By DAVID POMA

Villanova University is studying plans to build a new residence hall near Stanford and Good Counsel Halls, according to a high-ranking administration official.

If the final plans are approved by the Boad of Trustees, the dormitory will cost about $7 or $8 million, and it will be built east of Stanford and Good Counsel Halls.

According to Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president for student life and a member of the Senate Student Life Commitee, "The Board of Trustees has approved preliminary work on the feasibility of building a new residence hall."

According to Neville, the University will decide on specific requirements for the new building and then commission an architect to design it. Neville said, "The University will suggest details for the dorm: how many students it will house, optimum structure, the number of lounges it will need and whether it should have dining facilities.

"At this point, we're looking into how we can fund it," said Neville. "There is Federal money available for residence construction," he added. Neville also commented that the residence could be funded through endowments or a University bond issue. In late 1981, Villanova's application for a $3.5 million loan from the Federal Department of Education was rejected. Neville does not believe that tuition increases will be needed to fund the construction of the dormitory.

It is not known whether the building will house men or women but it will not be a co-ed dorm, according to Neville.

He hopes that the dormitory is approved by the Board of Trustees, and that it can be completed by September 1984. "We desperately need it," he added.

Negotiations are Imperative

In a stunning press conference last week, the General Alumni Association publicly vented anger and frustration at University administration by calling for the resignation of Father President Driscoll and by presenting a list of six grievances. The discontent, which had surfaced only sporadically during this past year, has expanded into a full-fledged show-down between Driscoll and many of Villanova's alumni. Unfortunately, in this instance, there will only be losers.

An open clash between a university president and some of its more prominent alumni is one of the most detrimental situations that a school can face. From a public-relations standpoint, this sort of feud is disastrous. Not only does it severely taint the University's image in the surrounding area, but more important, it rents the University community itself as the rift spreads to all levels. At times like this, when colleges and universities nationwide are experiencing such problems as sky-rocketing costs, cuts in federal aid and declining enrollment, it is imperative that they be unified internally. A school which is plagued by internal conflict cannot possibly turn its attention to other far more grave external matters.

The alumni reaction of last week is understandable in light of the intractability and stubborness displayed by the University administration in refusing to negotiate on certain issues. Sooner or later the administration and the alumni are going to have to get together to discuss their differences rationally and in good faith. The administration's refusal to talk about issues like football, to view such issues as irrevocably closed, is what left the alumni with no recourse but the drastic step of demanding that the president resign.

Half of the grievances raised by the alumni ought to be relatively simple to resolve. Surely, the administration can find a place for a new Alumni House. And surely the alumni should be given back their "voice" with their own newspaper. And, already, Driscoll has stated that mention of the alumni in the Mission Statement will be forthcoming. These three problems are not at all difficult ones.

Two of the others are a bit more complicated, but not unsolvable. The responsibility for the Annual Fund was taken from the alumni and placed under the total control of the University. Wouldn't it be feasible to equitably divide the responsibility between both? Giving the alumni elected representation on the Board of Trustees is an inconceivable idea, and should be worked out between the Trustees and General Alumni Association.

And then there is football. Obviously, it would be almost impossible to restore it immediately. But this is not what most of the alumni are asking for; rather, they would settle for an announcement by the Board that it was willing to look at the feasibility of restoring football. This isn't even a demand for re-instatement, but simply a call for a consideration of this volatile subject, which would cost so little yet go so far towards mollifying alumni anger.

What it all boils down to is this: the problems between the alumni and the administration themselves are not insurmountable. The solutions don't need to be drastic.

Letters to the Editor

Bureaucracy

Dear Editor:

Please warn the students of Villanova to be careful or else they will become part of the bureaucratic mixup that is commonplace here.

Last Thursday, April 15, I was in the Alumni Hall lounge, where maintenance has repeatedly failed to fix our lounge chairs. Unaware of this fact, I stood on a cushion. The cushion flipped, and I fell and was badly bruised.

I spoke to Chris Janosik, director of residence life, about the cushions. Mr. Janosik told me that he would look into the situation, and that it might be fixed "sometime next semester." This leaves our lounge still broken and increases the chance of someone else getting severely hurt.

Monday morning, I went to see Dr. Boyle at the infirmary because my bruised leg was now draining into my foot. Dr. Boyle sent me and another student to an "x-ray specialist." He failed to mention that seeing this "specialist" would entail borrowing someone's car to drive for half an hour to Lansdowne. This was totally unnecessary since the van normally takes students to Bryn Mawr Hospital for x-rays. A waste of my time and a friend's gas occurred so that Dr. Boyle could do a favor for a friend and, I suppose, get a "favor" in return. The van ride to Bryn Mawr may not be glamourous, but is surely more practical.

Now, I am limping around campus. I still have no idea of my x-ray results. There are, however, other results, such as the lounge situation, which we may have to wait forever for. For now, I wish to thank the infirmary nurses and my friends for their help. I only hope that something will be done to rectify the situations in our lounge and infirmary policies so that no one will have to go through this run-around again.

Reply

To the Editor:

In reference to a letter to the editor in the Villanovan (April 2, 1981) entitled "ROTC," I found several things to be disturbing. It is true that this incident was off-color, but to condemn 250 people for the actions of "five or six" and to ask if the NROTC unit condones this sort of behavior is totally obscene. Of course the NROTC program does not teach disrespect for the University or anything. It is obvious that this unit is a military installation that teaches many things — especially respect. The military is run on respect and without it the armed forces would be a shambles.

The NROTC program is of great value to this University. There are many fine students walking on this campus who are midshipmen. Many outstanding members of fraternities, intramural sports teams, varsity teams, and other university activities are midshipmen. There is also the National Champion Drill Team, Whiskey Company, that brings honor to Villanova. Midshipmen carry their pride in Villanova with them into the active Navy and Marine Corps. The success of these Villanova-commissioned officers brings much prestige to this NROTC program and the university as a whole.

The suggestion to remove the NROTC program because of the actions of so few of so many is the same thinking that burns crosses on front lawns and exterminated millions in Nazi Germany. Aside from the fact that this person is uniformed about the qualities of this fine organization, I find it hard to respect the opinion of a person who lacks the courage to sign his/her name.

Campaign

Dear Editor:

The young of today were raised in the realities in the 1960s and educated of the excesses of the 1970s. Stout in spirit and rich in drive they are the future for America.

But for many young Americans their way is blocked, their will diminished, their sense of historic purpose lost. To make education accessible to all young Americans is to providee greater national security and clear their way for the future. To capture again the imagination of each young American is to rediscover that youthful idealism and restore their will to succeed. To remember the achievements of young Americans is to furnish a promising future and regain their sense of purpose.

We support John Logue in his campaign for the Senate and will work for him throughout the campaign and on election day.

We are currently soliciting campus speaking engagements for our candidate. Please contact us for additional information.

Homosexual

Dear Editor:

Almost since the industry's inception, the motion picture business has sought, through the films it releases, to provide more than simple entertainment. It has acted both to influence societal thinking as well as to comment on or reflect upon the cultural and social trends it perceives. During World Wars I and II, a host of prowar films were released that were intended to arouse and confirm the patriotic sentiments within and among the American people. The 1950s and 60s were witness to several films whose themes centered on the improperties of racism and prejudice. Certaily most of us can agree that this was a noble and beneficial aspect of this medium's character. But, while we can agree on the benefits derived from a medium that is pursuant of high ideals, as in the promotion of patriotism or the abolishment of prejudice, it is important to realize that this same medium can exert a similar influence on darker themes as well.

Today there exists an entirely unwholesome amount of films whose bogus content nearly establishes them as a new and morally decadent genre. I am of course addressing the popular release of such movies as Personal Best, Making Love, Victor-Victoria, and even Deathtrap, which boast as their plot or as a subplot the advocation of a homosexual lifestyle. The constant and repititous presentation of anything can and does act to condition non-independent thinkers to regard as socially acceptable what was once very much morally objectionable.

It is also certain that we make a mistake when we tolerate the portrayal of morally bankrupt ideals under the guise of pursuing a deeper understanding of such things. If we stop attending movies of questionable content, Hollywood will stop making them. . .

Sports Criticism

Dear Editors:

Reading the Villanovan sports section each week is becoming quite an adventure. One never knows when one will see articles on Major League Baseball, or Wayne Gretzky, while much of the Villanova sports scene goes unreported.

A perfect example of this was the story of Villanova tennis coach Robert Langran, and his 300 career victories. One picture does not do justice to a man who has given Villanova sports thirteen years of his time.

As a statistician and co-manager of Villanova's baseball team, I also wish to point out several errors in Joe Marusak's recent story on the team. Villanova's game with Navy was not cancelled; we also split a doubleheader with Catholic University. The doubleheader with Niagara, however, was cancelled. In the Temple game, Mike Esposito was the designated hitter, not the catcher.

In conclusion, the Villanovan states on its masthead that it is the "Newspaper of record for Villanova University." As such, the sports section should live up to that task as well. Perhaps the Villanovan can get away with rewriting sports information press releases, but the Villanovan sports section owes more to the community than it is currently giving.

Alumnus Defends Driscoll

To the Editor:

It is with a deep sense of regret that I have followed the recent series of articles, news releases and interviews concerning Villanova University and its Alumni Association. The impression that one would gather is that the one thing that all of us who have spent four years under the tutelage of the professors and staff of one of the oldest Catholic universities have to show for it is an overwhelming appreciation of the sport of football. I would prefer that this image be put in its proper perspective, or better yet, laid to rest.

I believe that the University had its origin not on the football field, but as an institution of higher learning which strives to, as far as it is able, be dedicated to the development of the total human being. The academic life of the University must be the overwhelming priority and the Board of Trustees, administration, alumni and student body must make and/or support decisions based on that priority.

The place of sports as an extracurricular activity to add to the total development of the students should be encouraged, but we must recognize that a sports program is not the essense of Villanova. It is an extra, and it should take its proper place in the University life.

The interviews with Mr. Doug Murray seem to indicate that his position stands for the majority of Villanova alumni. I believe that his position represents a small minority of alumni and that if a poll could be taken, the academic life of Villanova would emerge the victor.

The next few years will force Villanova to make many difficult decisions. With a declining population, rising costs, a cutback in Federal aid to students these decisions must be based on a firm set of priorities. If Villanova University is to survive, we must work together to support it as a center of learning. The publicity that Villanova has received this week has not helped any of us. I believe that we should reexamine what has/is happening and reflect on the real reason that we are proud to call ourselves Villanovans.

Election

Dear Editor:

Now that this year's election of a new student body president is a rapidly fading topic of consideration, it is of the utmost importance that the students be given an objective insight of what actually caused the final outcome.

In the aftermath we have all witnessed the formalities of post-election pledges of unity and congratulations for the winner. All the candidates should be commended for abstaining from unconstructive criticism of the real facts behind the ultimate outcome. Yet, due to their restraint we have all been denied a true account of what actually took place.

During the past year our current student body president, Bob Rosengarth, has come under increased criticism for being unassertive, apathetic and all too indifferent. One might think that these characteristics truly surfaced during his capacity as Elections Commission chairman. On several occasions, a lack of decisiveness on the part of the Commission's leadership was more than apparent. This was displayed both in the poor organization of the debate and in the unfair imposition of an infraction on one candidate for a technicality that had obviously been committed by several other candidates, yet went ignored. Despite, as a penalty, the removal of all of this candidate's advertisements, his campaign still obtained the highest number of votes — just five percent short of a first-ballot victory. The now-obviously unfair infraction was not enough to destroy his candidacy, but the exploitation of it on the front page of the Villanovan turned his candidacy in the run-off from shoe-in to long-shot. The Villanovan's obvious lack of regard for the candidates involved was all too consistent with its past record of tasteless exploitatio of athletes and other campus figures who have positively contributed to our community. It is a sad but true commentary that the Villanovan has resorted to sensationalism at the expense of others in order to entertain is readers.

This is not written with malice towards our newly elected president, but as a realistic analysis of the lack of professionalism in two of our most important organizations, which ultimately deviated last week's run-off from one of discernment of two highly qualified candidates to a sensationalized, trumped-up scandal which ultimately influenced a highly impressionable student body.

On Campus

By ELISE VALADE and STEVE SKROBALA

This past week the General Alumni Association called for Father President Driscoll's resignation. We asked the students how they felt about this issue: "What do you think of the General Alumni Association's proposal concerning Father President Driscoll's position?"

"I don't know whether it should be a decision of the alumni, but I think it is something the students would agree with."

Liz Schlegel
Sophomore, Liberal Arts

"I think it is a good idea because it shows that there is a lot of support for football among the alumni. I really don't think that anything will happen because the Board of Trustees are the ones with the power and they don't want football."

Ed Sullivan
Junior, Communications

"To get rid of one administrator would not solve Villanova's problems. The problem lies in the policies of the administration, although it is excellent to see that the Villanova alummni are becoming more involved in the student life."

Michael Butler
Junior, Accounting

"Yes. It is unfortunate that he has to be the scapegoat, but we have to start somewhere since the Board of Trustees won't listen to us."

Donna Zito
Junior, Nursing

"I can't say whether or not it was a wise decision, but I can say that it is a good sign that the alumni care enough about the University to take such a stand."

Al Goeciniak
Junior, Mechanical Engineer

"I agree with their decision. It's about time that the alumni became involved with University affairs. It shows that they still care about Villanova."

Jim Dunn
Junior, Finance

V.U. Admissions Rise

By JIM DeLORENZO

Villanova University received just under 7000 applications for the 1982 fall semester, and accepted 3,700 of those who applied. According to Rev. Harry Erdlen, O.S.A., director of admissions, "The number of applications received is well above the average for the last four years.

"We need to accept two times the number of students we want, because many students make multiple applications," Erdlen added.

Erdlen feels that one reason students apply here is that, "Villanova has a positive image. Visitors are impressed with the friendliness, the genuine warmth of the students. They are impressed with the buildings and the cleanliness of the campus. This is a big selling point."

The number of applications to the colleges of Engineering and Commerce and Finance has had a "marked increase," according to Erdlen, while the colleges of Liberal Arts and Sciences, and the college of Nursing, have both experienced a slight decline over the last two years.

Of the criteria used in accepting an applicant, "We place the most emphasis on an applicant's grade and rank," Erdlen stated. "The SAT is used to refine the decision, to narrow it down.

"The competition is greater for acceptance now," Erdlen said. The SAT score requirement is higher now "for all colleges." This year, the average score for applicants was 532 verbal, 584 math, while the average last year was 511 verbal, 563 math. "These numbers vary for each college," Erdlen added.

As to the future of Villanova, Erdlen commented, "There won't be a drastic decline in applications. Although there are fewer eligible students out there, we still have enough of a pool to draw on. Overall, the caliber of students has improved. It is an optimistic picture."

Of those accepted to the University, the ratio of men to women is usually 60-40. This year, 57 percent of those accepted were men. Financial aid is desired by about 50 percent of the applicants. However, Erdlen notes that "the vast majority of those accepted are from middle to upper-middle class families."

In comparison with other universities, Erdlen said "We are better than many, but it depends on who you compare us with. Our acceptance rate is 60 percent of those who apply."

At present, there are 933 beds allocated for freshman on-campus residents. Of those who are accepted to the University, 82 percent desire on-campus housing. "We have saturated the commuter market," Erdlen stated, "so we then have to expect 150-200 students to come here as off-campus residents.

"We tell students from the first that they must be willing to come here as off-campus residents, but very few want that status," Erdlen said. "Their next question is always 'when can I get on campus?'" Erdlen feels that student body President Bob Rosengarth's proposal to house all freshmen on campus is a "viable option."

"It's hard to get many to agree to off-campus residency," said Erdlen. "If we had another 150-200 beds, there would be no problems."

Many local residents who are not accepted to Villanova University choose to attend the University College. "There has been an increase in those who attend the University College," noted Erdlen. "When we don't accept a local resident, we suggest the University College to them. Those who attend the University College will not be housed on campus, however, for there is no where to put them up."

Rev. Harry Erdlen, O.S.A.

The Admissions Office is also trying to project the University's image to possible applicants through an audio-visual cassette package. "It's available to many high schools," Erdlen said. "We are also recruiting more in Europe and South America by means of this package, trying to appeal to American living abroad."

OBLIQUITIES Graduates In Law

Paul Lauricella, creator of "Obliquities," has been on the Villanovan staff for three years. Since he is graduating from the Villanova Law School this May, the Villanovan thought that it would grab this golden opportunity to have "A Few Minutes with Paul Lauricella."

Q: Where do you get your ideas?

A: Most of my ideas come from college memories and TV shows. I get a lot of the ideas during unusually boring Administrative Law classes. I also steal a lot of jokes.

Q: Why did you start drawing cartoons?

A: It's a good way to meet girls.

Q: Why did you decide to go to Villanova?

A: I liked the brochure.

Q: What do you strive for in your cartoons?

A: I strive for "bizarre-ness." I like to think that the cartoons are kind of unpredictable. You know, your basic talking TV sets, flying students, dancing Political Science professors . . .

Q: Where did you get the name "Obliquities?"

A: I originally wanted to call the strip "Billy Nova" but that name was taken. My next choice, naturally, was "Obliquities." I've never really been sure of what it meant. I don't think it's a real word.

Q: Who are your artistic influences?

A: Warhol, Mort Drucker and Jim Marks.

Q: What is your philosophy of life?

A: Everybody dies first in a nuclear fireball, but nobody doesn't like Sara Lee.

Q: What is your favorite food?

A: Chocolate chip cookies and Quiche, (together preferably).

Q: Do you consider yourself a good artist?

A: No. I consider myself a bad writer. I think I'm the first mediocre artist on campus. Next?

Q: Do you pay by check or by cash?

A: Neither.

Q: What are your hobbies?

A: Law — Jack Abbott was framed.

Q: What are your favorite TV shows?

A: "MacNeil-Leher Report," "Tic Tac Dough," "Password", (the re-runs with Allen Luden). "Joanie loves Chachi" is one of my new favorites.

Q: What are your plans for the future?

A: I plan to see "Chariots of Fire."

Q: What do you think of the Villanovan?

A: It's a rag. They don't deserve me.

Q: What are your plans for the future?

A: You already asked me that question.

Q: We're running out of questions.

A: I plan to see "Chariots of Fire" twice.

What Looms Across The Tracks?

By MARY ANNE GRANGER

The standards are very high and the work is very hard. Nobody expects to have an easy time here. People are friendly with each other, but a competitive feeling always exists. This is life for three years. This is the Villanova law school.

Set apart from Villanova's main campus, the law school is something of a mystery to many undergraduates, who rarely venture over to the small building that holds approximately 640 law students. And the law student themselves do not find too much time to socialize with undergraduates or anyone else.

"The demands are rigorous," said law school Dean J. Willard O'Brien. "There are reasons for this — our people are being trained to help other human beings. That being the case, it is essential that they acquire the skills needed to represent people properly."

The first year of law school is supposed to be the most difficult. Students say that if you make it through this year, you will get through law school. "My first year was a horrible experience," said Tony Cadiz, vice president of the Student Bar Association (SBA). "I was compulsive and I studied more than I needed to. I would wake up at six in the morning and study all day. This year, I'm more relaxed and I know I will get through."

"First year students must acquire knowledge in a new way," explained O'Brien. "Many undergraduates acquire information directly from their professors. In law school, the system is somewhat different. Students themselves must acquire information by reading actual cases from the courts." This new method of learning, said O'Brien, may take getting used to by the students.

Students must also become used to the Socratic method used in law school, a teaching tool in which professors and students engage in quick question answer period to test the students' comprehension of the subject. "Some students take this as a bruising form of personal attack," said O'Brien. "It is not that at all. It is training."

Though the Socratic method is used extensively in scenes from "The Paper Chase," a television show dealing with law school, O'Brien does not believe the show is an adequate representation of Villanova's law school. "I see it as an unrealistic program, although each school does have its Professor Kingsfield (the much-feared professor on that program). Our law school uses a lot of methods to teach — the pure Socratic method is only one of them." But, said O'Brien, when that method is employed, "The intellectual inquiry is vigorous and unyielding. It has to be because we're training people to help others."

"There is one professor here like Professor Kingsfield," said Ronnie Cubit, president of the SBA. "Some classes are like that, not all."

For most students, the most frightening time of the year is at finals. "I wasn't scared until finals. They involve a lot of work, but more time-consuming than frightening. I just decided not to let myself get too upset over the situation." said Cubit.

Frightened or not, law students must do well on finals to pass. According to Cadiz, final grades count for up to 80 percent of the total grade, with mid-term grades counting only 20 to 25 percent.

Law students must also participate in moot court while in law school. Moot court gives students a chance to put their knowledge of the law to use in a courtroom. "Students are given hypothetical cases that have been decided by a lower court and the students argue the case as they would in a real court," said O'Brien. All students must participate during their first year, and then again in either the second or third year. The experience according to Cadiz, was "the best of my life, frightening as it was."

The moot court competition is judged by some of the finest legal minds in the country, perhaps adding to the students' nervousness. Justice William Hutchinson of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court was one of the judges of the moot court Competition held this month. And, said O'Brien, "The judges left our school persuaded we had an excellent program with superior students."

Getting into law school is hard, so hard that only one of every ten applicants is accepted. "The competive pressure to get in to law school is very high," said O'Brien. "The University of Pennsylvania and Villanova are where we get the most students from. The academic credentials are very high."

Once accepted and enrolled at Villanova, most students simply work as hard as they can to stay here, but a few don't make it and drop out. One student estimated that around 20 students dropped out last year, not all of them because they were failing. Some just cannot take it.

"I had a friend here my first year who was definitely smarter than I am, knew more law than I did, and he dropped out," said Lou Magazzu, a third year student and former president of the SBA. "Emotionally, he couldn't take it. I think about him sometimes. I'm going to graduate and I think how he should be here with me."

Magazzu says his biggest regret here is that he has not had more contact with the undergraduate side of the school. But, he said, there just is not time. "You want to give it all you can."

Magazzu already knows where he will be working when he graduates, something that is not true of all third year students. "I think Villanova is as competitive as any law school," he said. "But I bet only 30 to 40 percent of my class has jobs, and that makes everyone very, very nervous."

"If you're in the top ten percent of the class, people will come to you. Otherwise you have to look. And the market is tight," said Magazzu.

But you do not have to be at the top of the class to find a job, or to be successful, said O'Brien. "The fact of the matter is that any graduate might become an extraordinarily successful lawyer. There are all sorts of reasons not connected with capacity for not getting good grades," he said.

Not every law school graduate is looking for his first job, either. A good proportion of the students have returned to school after working in other fields for several years. "I graduated from Villanova in 1974 in C&F," said Joe Del Raso, a second-year student who also found time to get married this month. "I was vice president of a construction company. Working took a lot of time. Here it takes about 40 hours a week to study, but I was used to those hours since I worked."

Del Raso also found that he could deal with the pressures of law school, saying "If you make a mistake it doesn't kill you."

Law students find little time for life outside of law school, but, said Cadiz, "When we party, we really party." Most students live in apartments and attend off campus parties or go to Houlihan's in King of Prussia. Kelly's is not popular with law students. "We don't go there much," said Magazzu.

Students spend the majority of their days in the library or in the classroom. A typical day of classes involves three to four hours a day. The rest of the time is spent studying, with a little time for socializing. "It's not a cut-throat atmosphere," said Del Raso. "We're competitive, but at a friendly level."

Faust Speaks Goethe's Language

By DIANA MARIE MURRAY

Commemorating the 150th anniversary of the death of the German playwright Johann von Goethe, students from the University of Connecticut performed the play Faust last Saturday, April 17, in the Corr Chapel.

An audience, consisting of Villanova students and faculty, invited guests, and German students and teachers from area colleges attended the play, which was performed in German. The student actors and actresses were received enthusiastically. The play, to be performed at a number of places throughout the northeastern part of the country, was a tremendous success.

The play was produced and directed by Professor Herbert Lederer of the Department of Germanic Languages at the University of Connecticut. Kendall Smith played Dr. Faust, a man who was discontented with his life and, despondent, made a pact with the devil sealed in his own blood. Sergio Bunin played the dramatic Mephisto, the devil who helped Faust swoon a young maiden, murder her brother, and shared with Faust the secrets of the spiritual world. Cathy Dudley played Gretchen, the unfortunate maiden who fell in love with Faust, and was later condemned to death for murdering her illegitimate child.

According to Charles H. Helmetag, chairperson of the modern language department at Villanova, "For a span of a few hours these American college students were Goethe's great characters with just the right gestures and movements for their roles. The sets were functional and imaginative. Above all, Goethe's immortal poetry was delivered in flawless German, an effective way for American audiences to experience a foreign language and literature."

DKN Goes National With The Kappas

By CAROL ALKONS

Last week, Delta Kappa Nu (DKN), the oldest of Villanova's three local sororities, colonized into the 111th chapter of Kappa Kappa Gamma (KKG), one of the leading sororities in the nation. The first national sorority to establish itself on Villanova's campus was Delta Delta Delta, last September.

Kathy Henneberry, president of the new chapter of KKG explained that "DKN has been discussing affiliating with a national (sorority) for a number of years. Until recently the discussion was not real serious. We formed a committee to research national fraternities in September. We were then invited by a number of them to investigate more seriously.

"We decided to affiliate with Kappa Kappa Gamma because they seemed to fit our sorority in their goals and purpose, in the service and social aspects. We feel that we are not really changing — with the exception of our name."

One of the ways in which joining a national sorority will be beneficial to the group, (DKN), according to Henneberry, is the network of support maintained by the sorority's national headquarters.

"There is more of a backbone in KKG in the sense that we have constant support from the alumnae in the surrounding chapters. By that, I mean each officer has an advisor who works with her throughout the year. As the sisters graduate there will be more communication with the remaining sisters at Vilanova," said Henneberry.

Gary Bonas, assistant director of student activities, was actively involved in the decision process.

"I am very pleased with the change. Kappa Kappa Gamma has taken an excellent and strong group and will be making it even stronger. It is clear that DKN is an organization with high ideals, and that they will make the move to KKG without losing anything," said Bonas.

The actual colonization of the chapter took place last week: "We were initiated as pledges on Wednesday, April 14; we received pledge pins and met many of the alumnae officers of KKG. Last weekend we visited Lafayette College in Easton, Pa., which has a chapter of KKG," said Henneberry.

As pledges, the new members must learn the history of the sorority; next November they will become sisters of KKG. As Henneberry pointed out, "The only problem I can see in affiliating with a national sorority is adjusting to the new name, KKG. Some people will always know us as DKN — and that is a good attitude because essentially we will continue to be as we are now."

Bonas, cited KKG as "one of the top sororities in the nation today" expressed that "to have them on Villanova's campus is a real pleasure." He added that three other Greek organizations on campus — Delta Pi Epsilon, Zeta Rho, and Alpha Nu Omega — are currently considering joining with national fraternities.

"It has become evident that a national organization offers a great deal of support and continuity to their chapters — and let's face it — they have the dollars (to do so)," Bonas elaborated.

Bonas added, "I'm not against a fraternity remaining local. I would not discourage a local from existing. As long as a local exists, I will support it and help it grow; but I certainly would encourage it to consider affiliating with a strong national."

Bonas stated that Villanova is "definitely not" considering a mandate that would require all fraternities and sororities to affiliate with the nationals.

He remarked, "I have pledged my support for them (the local fraternities and sororities) just as I have pledged my support for the nationals."

The Blue Book Is Revised

by DAVID RIDER

The Office of Student Activities is now working on a pleasant surprise for all Villanova students. Earlier this year, Gary Bonas, assistant director of student activities, organized a special editorial committee that has now designed a completely new Blue Book for next year. This new edition is not just an updating of the familiar old Blue Books of years gone by. It represents a new emphasis on practicality.

Next year's Blue Book will be a smaller, spiral bound, plastic-covered edition in the format of a weekly appointment calendar. To make it even more practical, the editorial committee has decided to give copies of next year's Blue Book to all Villanova students, not just the freshmen. Furthermore, the present text has been abridged and arranged in an outline fashion to allow for more information in a better organized layout.

The committee that designed the new edition was composed of representatives from Villanova's students, faculty, administration and staff. They were selected by Gary Bonas who is responsible for designing the Blue Book. According to Bill Clark, a student representative on the editorial committee, "the students for the first time have had real influence in designing the Blue Book." Also, says Clark, "for the first time there will be pictures of the Board of Trustees and brief biographies of each."

Among the many other new features of the Blue Book, perhaps most important is the weekly appointment calendar. Every other page will be a calendar of the week. The dates for all the sports and other important events will be written in. Also, there will be sufficient space for students to write in their assignments and testing times, as well as any other events they may wish to note. According to Jeff Page, another student representative on the editorial committee, "the new Blue Book will be much better than last year's, 100% more useful and hopefully a great success."

Forego The Classrooms

By MARY T. GREGORY

More and more students are discovering the value that comes with the experience of an internship. Not only are interns able to explore new territories, but they're also given the opportunity to develop and put new found knowledge in their academic fields to good use.

Dr. Albert J. Dorley of the history department is coordinator of the internship program here at Villanova. He is more than willing to offer his services to interested Arts and Sciences students who have reached their second semester junior year and have a grade point average of 2.5 or above. Since the program began in 1977, over 200 students have elected to intern. "They speak of the challenges and glorify the results," says Dorley. "No one has come away regretful or disappointed."

Washington D.C., New York, Boston, and the Delaware Valley are all areas open to interns. In Washington, the program provides housing for students. "We have placements," adds Dorley, "but a student may also come in with his own ideas. As long as it's legitimate, he's free to go where he wants to." Many often work for a company near home and commute to work. They receive 15 credits for the semester which fill both elective and major area requirements.

Among other areas, programs may be in federal, state, and local agencies, public interest groups, community projects, and the private sector. "The value of this program is mutual for both the student and the agency," says Dorley. "The intern is treated professionally and given a true flavor for what he's in store for in the future. It's one of the most important ways to gain experience employers look for."

Anyone interested in learning more about Villanova's internship program may make an appointment in 102 Vasey to see Dorley. "Check it out," he encourages. "It may be worth your while."

If you think a "one-piece shell" is an oyster lover's nightmare, you're not ready for Memorex.

On an oyster, a one-piece shell would be big trouble.

But with Memorex cassettes, it's a big benefit.

Using ultra high frequency sound, we sonically weld the two halves of every Memorex cassette to form a single, solid cassette shell.

This single-unit construction gives Memorex cassettes a structural rigidity which is critical to precise tape-to-head contact.

Test it yourself. Hold a Memorex cassette on both ends and twist. Notice how rigid the cassette is. How it resists flexing.

Remember, even the slightest variation in cassette shape can alter the way the tape comes in contact with the head. Which can drastically affect sound reproduction.

That's why we prefer sonic welding.

It keeps our cassette structure as true as our remarkable sound reproduction. Which, thanks to our unique tape formulation and an extraordinary binding process called Permapass,™ will remain true to life play after play. Even after 1000 plays.

In fact, a Memorex cassette will always deliver true sound reproduction, or we'll replace it. Free.

So put your next recording on Memorex. In HIGH BIAS II, METAL IV or normal bias MRX I.

Each has a one-piece shell.

Which, on an oyster, is a bad idea.

But on a cassette, it's a real pearl.

Tom Tebbens, Len March, and William Whalen in "Chameleons"

By DEAN C. BALSAMINI

"Chameleons," written by Patrick Nolan and directed by James J. Christy, is an uneven play that fails in its attempt to convey contemporary values and relationships. Billed by the Vasey Theatre as a "world premiere," "Chameleons" tells the story of three married couples who rent a luxury home together on a Caribbean island. From here each character goes through several "transformations." This is where the play gets its name.

The problem with "Chameleons" is that from start to finish one detests the characters. It's obvious also that the characters despise each other. One is never told why these couples go on vacation together in the first place. By the end of the play one does not care as there is nothing which we can relate to. Author Patrick Nolan, an English professor here, has each character go through many changes, but, in effect, there are none. Also Nolan (unconsciously or not) borrows from several other works, including "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?" and "The Emperor Jones." One has great expectations at the play's beginning; the stage setting is impressive. But as time goes on, one feels great disappointment.

"Chameleons" also fails because it is unrealistic. The audience is bombarded with a plethora of cliches and "profound" statements. This greatly annoyed this critic simply because people do not hold conversations and talk to one another in this manner. This is self-defeating in that the play is "supposed" to be about people and how they act.

The language is often vulgar and is used purely to shock the audience. The intensity that is supposed to run throughout the play is not present. Coarse language does not make for tension.

Besides its disjointedness, "Chameleons" features a cast not capable of saving a bad script. Noah, played by Jim Pomlio, is a quiet Vietnam veteran ready to explode. Charlie (Len March) is the spokesman of the "husbands." He is supposedly the "muy macho" tough guy, but one would never know it by his performance. March is so bad that one never takes him seriously. Eve, Noah's domineering wife, is played by Carol Florence Schwarz. Schwarz's performance grates on one's nerves in that she tries hard to be Elizabeth Taylor in "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?" The one performance worth mentioning is that of Kendall, portrayed by Susy Furey-Lloyd. The character is the most realistic, and Lloyd does not fall prey to over-acting.

The best thing about "Chameleons" is its stage set. Elisa Loprete has put together an impressive set complete with wicker and Polynesian backdrop. The problem that surfaces here though is that there is not enough room allotted for the actors to perform.

Overall, "Chameleons" is a sloppy, disjointed play with a bad script. Nolan, who won an Emmy Award for "The Jericho Mile," should take ten laps around the track for this one. Only the words of the domineering Eve can sum up what this critic was mumbling to himself throughout the play — "This is getting fantastically boring."

An Object to Desire

By GREG MIZII

Michael Frank's latest album, Objects of Desire, contains some of today's greatest session musicians such as drummer Andy Newmark who has worked with George Harrison, Eric Clapton, and many other top flight recording stars. The veteran session guitarists on this album include Larry Carlton, Hugh McCracken and Steve Khan, each of whom have a list of album sessions that is held in high esteem. But the major highlights on this album are the moving lyrics of composer-/vocalist Michael Franks, set to soothing and calming songs.

The opening tune on the album, Jealousy, is played with a medium tempo and a funky staccato-filled backdrop. Luther Vandross shares vocals with Franks as Franks' poetic juices come to the fore in this song about a shattered relationship. Jealousy, along with other songs on the album such as No Deposit Love, No One but You, Tahitian Moon and Love Duet, all deal with the theme of a broken heart. In describing the style of the music on this album, it can be said that it is reminiscent of the posh Northeastern sound that abounds in Lou Rawls and Van Morrison.

Although Franks has a weak voice, he makes up for it by limiting his range. Love Duet is a tasteful tune where Franks yields most of the lead vocals to female recording artist Renee Diggs. This orchestrated piece is similar to the hit, The Look of Love where mellow female voices set a romantic mood. Another song that he shares vocals with a female (this time Bonnie Raitt) is the easy going Ladies' Nite which contains more of Franks' pointed lyrics about romance.

The mellow mood the album sets is relaxing while the arrangements and songwriting of Michael Franks make Objects of Desire one of his best. Professional recognition of Franks' songwriting abilities has continued apace, adding to a dossier of covered songs that includes work by the Carpenters, Manhattan Transfer, Melissa Manchester, Ringo Starr, Dee Dee Bridgewater, and Patti Labelle.

As far as musical creativity is concerned, Objects of Desire

Book Review:

The Seasons of Life

By SHARON WINTERS

Winter Count a collection of interesting short stories by Barry Holstun Lopez, is like a lush watercolor, awash with deft hues. The excellence of the composition lies in the brief, sparse, but cautiously-placed images. Lopez, like the watercolor artist, fashions lucid pictures by avoiding the two deadly extremes: shallow emptiness and muddled clutter.

Lopez posts insightful, revealing experiences occurring in the lives of ordinary, everyman individuals. "Restoration," the first story, recounts the tale of a 20th-century tourist who discovers and solves a 100-year-old mystery. In ten pages, Lopez makes a graceful transition from the real to the mystical.

The tourist is fascinated by a mansion built in the desolate American wilderness by a French family. Only one member of the family ever occupied the house for extended visits; the lone Frenchman spent several solitary winters there, leaving in the spring.

"Restoration" brings the tourist to an enlightening experience: a precious moment where he communes with nature in a subtle, unexpected way.

It is the story of all life that is holy and is good to tell, and of us two-legged sharing in it with the four-leggeds and the wings of the air and all green things; for these are the children of one mother and their father is one Spirit.

Black Elk

Lopez, capturing important moments in the lives of his characters, calls forth natural powers in answer to mysterious events. A seemingly simple tale about a man waiting for his love, "Winter Herons," becomes a celebration of the land, the air, the four-leggeds, the wings and all green things. Although the man is situated in New York City, his mind travels to the plains, the wide-open spaces that he so loves. His reverence for the "unending sky" invokes American Indian mythological symbols.

In a similar vein, "The Orrery" describes a younger man's journey to meet an eccentric hermit. The young man is drawn by memories to this hermit. The older man sweeps a path in the dirt near his hut, only to arrange pebbles manually in a seemingly random pattern. Magic, power in the wind and the sky, makes the stones at one with the universe, delighting the awed young man.

In another tale, a historian finds himself disgusted and even frightened at a seminar about Indian studies. The others construct simplistic, singular explanations for past events. "It is too dangerous for everyone to have the same story. The same things do not happen to everyone," the historian believes.

Lopez utilizes this concept in his stories conjuring highly personal images for each character. The character has something special, a notable life event that will never be historically accounted for; yet, the episode becomes part of the magical fabric of the character's life. The story will be repeated over time, becoming a part of an individual lore, a myth for an everyman.

Franks—

succeeds brilliantly, proving Franks' assertion that creative experimentation need not be at the expense of an artist's integral qualities — in Franks' case, an exuberant eclecticism wedded perfectly to a stylistic virtuosity encompassing jazz, R and B, funk, classical pop, and all stops in between. Fans of Michael Franks' special musical gifts need have no fear, Objects of Desire, both lyrically and melodically, is a work of art.

Vasey's Summer Season

Dr. James J. Christy, chairman of the theatre department, has announced plans for the coming summer season. His summer repertory company has changed its name and will now be known as Contemporary Shakespeare Company. Dedicated to the development of a modern approach to Shakespeare and the classics, actors and directors will combine emotional commitment and dynamic physicality to bring classic plays to original life.

The 1982 summer season will include productions of "Twelfth Night," "Henry V," and an evening of songs, sonnets and scenes entitled "Lovers and Madmen." Shows will run in repertory beginning June 22.

Special events are planned to coincide with the season on stage. A music series featuring Renaissance music performed by Philadelphia artists is scheduled for four Sunday afternoons in July and August. An exhibit of Shakespearean and Renaissance artifacts will be housed in the Vasey Theatre lobby for the season by special arrangement with the Folger Shakespeare Library in Washington, D.C.

Villanova faculty, students, staff and administrators will find a special package subscription rate available only to them which will represent a tremendous saving over single ticket prices with special discounts at local restaurants and shops. A call to 645-4760 will provide all the details necessary.

A Case of Mistaken Identity

By JACK SALTA

Victor/Victoria, Blake Edwards' latest brainstorm, is a lifting comedy studded with high camp and entertaining wit. This ever-complexing film describes the climb to fame of two "down and out" performers played by Julie Andrews and Robert Preston. Together they transform Andrews from obscurity to stardom by passing her off as a female impersonator. Preston lands Andrews an engagement at a posh nightclub where her performance is witnessed by a Chicago nightclub owner who is played by James Garner. Garner is captivated by Andrews as the glamorous Victoria is really a woman, who is playing a man, who is playing a woman, but he has his suspicions. Because he cannot deal with the possibility of his having been attracted to a man in woman's clothing, Garner probes to determine what is really going on beneath that dress.

Victor/Victoria is by no means merely an evening of comedy, devoid of any redeeming significance. Rather, the film deals with a delicate social problem; the hazards of socially imposed sexual roles. Through the composition of his plot, the viewpoints of his characters, and the subtleties of his direction, Blake Edwards relates the barriers and the confusion that adherence to such doctrines imposes.

Andrews as Victoria is unable to gain employment as a female performer because of the lack of bawdiness in her stage presence. Without the old bump and grind she cannot fit into the narrowly restricted role of women in the entertainment world of the 1930's. However, by donning the guise of a gay female impersonator, she becomes subject to a different set of social standards. As Count Victor Grazinski, imitating a woman she gains the success that as a real woman she is denied. But in perpetrating the deception, Victoria does not overcome the social barriers; she hides within them. As a result, this makes her newfound success contigent upon personal compromise. Offstage, Victoria must remain trapped within her role as Victor, the gay Count. Since, if her real sex became publicly known she would lose her career, she faces the choice of keeping her career or her womanhood.

Victoria is not the only victim of society in the film. As the object of her affection, Garner is manipulated to extremes. The anxiety generated by his inability to accept his attraction to Victor instigates the upheaval of his sexual consciousness.

Contrasting these characters is Toddy (Preston), Victoria's gay cohort who appears to be the most stable of the lot. As an open homosexual, Toddy has the ability to enjoy life in the light of social predjudice because of his honesty to himself and the low regard with which he holds shame.

By illustrating these circumstances in a comic setting, Edwards reveals the ludicrousy of sexual barriers. The viewer cannot help but laugh at characters whose lives are controlled by foolish pride and the perpetuation of self compromise. What could be more ludicrous than Julie Andrews trying to pass herself off as a man? The disregard that Edwards' direction displays towards making Andrews a believable male impersonator exposes the futility of empowering doctrines which induce dishonesty to oneself.

Julie Andrews provides an adequate performance if only by virtue of her inability to impersonate a man. Although she periodically overacts, such moments magnify the ludicrousy of her character's situation.

Robert Preston, on the other hand, protects his character's relevence by maintaining a respectable distance from stereotypes. James Garner's performance makes one increasingly aware of his talent for inserting the same personality into everyting he does.

Victor/Victoria is a film worth seeing, not only for its comedic merit, but because it supplies a view of a social problem without alienating the viewer.

Garner and Andrews in "Victor/Victoria."

THE THEATRE DEPARTMENT

In a League by Themselves

By STEVEN HELMETAG and GREG MIZII

Dare, the latest record from The Human League, offers the latest in progressive electronic pop music. Currently holding a top thirty album and single, this band is rising on the charts.

It is just another song about love gone bad, but The Human League thrives on these simple but catchy melodies and lyrics.

The nucleus of The Human League formed in 1977 when two computer operator shift-leaders decided to get together and experiment with symthesizers. They found a vocalist, Phillip Oakley, working as a porter in a plastic surgery operating theatre. In March of 1978 they recruited Phillip Adrian Wright, the band's visual director who occasionally adds a synthesizer line while complementing the band's music with visual energy.

Before Dare, the band recorded two previous albums, Reproduction and Travelogue. With these discs the band had a distinct sound, sans guitar — something very unusual for today's bands. This is now becoming a sort of trend in Britain and, to a certain extent, in this country.

The band displays its acquired professionalism throughout Dare, which could conceivably have three hits. The Things That Dreams Are Made Of, the lead cut, speaks in a worldly voice talking about China and Spain, the Empire State and Golden Gate and The Red Square. The band likes to sing about excitement and romance claiming that, "Everybody needs love and adventure, everybody needs cash to spend, everybody needs love and affection and everybody needs two or three friends."

The upbeat dance sound of The Sound of the Crowd is dedicated to both dancer and fan alike. "Stay in time with the rhythm and rhyme and put your hand in a party wave to the tune."

The first hit from Dare alternates verses between male and female vocalists while posing the question "Don't you want me?" in the chorus. In Don't You Want Me a cocktail waitress is swept off her feet by a "Mr. Wonderful" for five years, but five only. It is just another song about love gone bad, but The Human League thrives on these simple but catchy melodies and lyrics. Their use of multiple synthesizers is in the progressive mold and ultimately puts the group into a class all by themselves.

If The Human League chose to record all moderate to fast tempo songs they would probably achieve commercial success, but the slower numbers add a great deal to Dare as an album. The utilization of different rhythms, breaks and a variety of keyboard and vocals keeps this sextet in tune. Dare has proven that The Human League can produce a fine album exclusively using synthesizers. The ultimate goal is to put on an equally fine live show with the above instrumentation.

'A Little Sex': A Lot Of Laughter

By JOHN LYNCH

A Little Sex is a movie which deals with a pressing problem in a comical manner. The problem which unfolds throughout the film is the unfaithfulness between husband and wife. Directed and written by Robert DeLaurentis, A Little Sex is a love story which demonstrates how the institution of marriage has drastically changed to conform to today's liberal society.

Edward, portrayed by Tim Mattheson of Animal House fame, is a director of an advertising firm in New York City. He has a little problem in that he is insatiable. Edward loves a girl named Katherine, who is a schoolteacher.

Edward and Katherine marry about thirty minutes into the film.

Society does not relate to love and sex like it once did. "A Little Sex" makes us laugh at Ed but actually he is you and I. Our morals and appreciation of sex have begun to crumble . . .

They appear to be quite happy together, but one knows that this marriage is destined to fail. Edward makes a bet with his brother Tom (Edward Hermann) that he will be faithful to his newlywed bride Katherine. Tom knows that it will not be long before his brother breaks his promise and sleeps with another woman.

Of course, Tom is right. Ed falls for a sensuous musician who plays the flute. (What would Freud say) From this encounter, Ed is swarmed by beautiful women wherever he goes. It is quite hilarious to watch Ed become ever so frustrated by seeing such enticing females.

Tom is portrayed as being Ed's guardian angel. They meet one another several times throughout the film, and each time Tom has words of wisdom that will tickle one's funnybone. Ed Hermann is a joy to watch as the scientist/brother Tom.

Although Ed loves Katherine, his primal instincts as a man tell him that this is not enough. His sex drive is one that cannot be satisfied. So as not to reveal the ending this writer will just add that it is a "tear jerker."

The title A Little Sex is somewhat misleading. When this writer sat down in the theatre, a love story was not expected. Maybe that is the real problem this movie is trying to convey. Society does not relate love and sex as it once did. A Little Sex makes us laugh at Ed but we know Ed is you and I. Our morals and appreciation of sex have begun to crumble. As Katherine tells us after she is unfaithful to Ed (she does not get mad, she gets even) "I enjoyed making love with a virtual stranger because it is more physical and more selfish." This quote sums up the entire movie. DeLaurentis in effect tells us that marriage today is very difficult to maintain because society today is selfish.

A Little Sex is funny as you're watching it but rather sad when you reflect on it. Tim Mattheson is excellent as the sex-crazed Edward Donovan. Kate Capshaw also turns in a fine performance as Ed's troubled wife.

A Little Sex does have its own niche as far as movies go. It's a movie that is badly needed in today's do as I please society.

Please, Just Let It Be

By GREG MIZII
and STEVEN HELMETAG

The multi-media musical "Beatlemania" was performed at St. Joseph University's fieldhouse on Wednesday, March 31. The tribute to the Beatles starred four actors, all looking very much like the original Fab Four.

Like the original Broadway Show, "Beatlemania" presented a nostalgic look at the Beatles. During the course of the evening the history of the '60s was symbolically recreated on stage, with the show's actors progressing from silly pop idols to jaded '60s mystics. The history of the Beatles' decade was presented via a multi-leveled slide show projected onto a titantic screen that hovered behind the pseudo-Beatles' instruments as the actors went through the musical motions on stage.

As images of the counter-culture raced across the stage and visions of Vietnam, Martin Luther King, drugs, love-ins, sex, Neil Young, flower power, and napalm assumed olympian proportions, the quartet of actors sung some two hours worth of appropriate tunes, including such hits as Twist and Shout and The Long and Winding Road. The finished product was a stirring but confused retrospective that only made one yearn more and more for the original Beatles.

The millions of fans who missed out on the original Beatles will never be able to really capture what they stood for through numerous money-making "Beatle industry" productions such as "Beatlemania." These vastly inferior cover versions, along with their producers and promoters, have attempted and continue to attempt to cash-in on the Beatles' enormous good will and fame.

The show "Beatlemania" has no big-name stars, main plot, or truly intricate stage sets. All it has is four bogus imitators of John, Paul, George, and Ringo, simply making subtle echoes of what the Beatles really were. Why can't all these businessmen, promoters, and impersonators just let it be?

Tennis Team Rolls

By JOE BAGLEY

Playing their ninth match in as many days, the Villanova Tennis Team defeated Ursinus on Wednesday afternoon, 6-0. By mutual consent, no doubles play was initiated.

Sophomore Bill Harahan led the way for the Wildcats in a quick 6-0, 6-2 match. With number 2 player Larry Gallen out with a bad case of "physics finals," all players moved up a level, allowing the first varsity start of freshman Frank Dunne. With strong, controlled shots Dunne picked apart Jim Lubkan's game and won 6-4, 6-3.

Senior Jeff Friel stepped into the number two position and handily won 6-3, 6-0. Juniors Paul Fitzsimmons and Ross Raggio both won their matches, as did sophomore Jon Lee who beat Joe Granaitam 6-1, 6-2.

Harahan, Gallen, Friel and Fitzsimmons will all travel to the Rider Tournament to represent Villanova this weekend.

The defeat of Ursinus lifted Villanova's record at 14-6 overall, including, according to coach Bob Langran, "our best wins of the season over Haverford and Fordham." If the Cats go on to win their last five matches, including what may be a hot contest at home against St. Joe's, they will succeed in ending their season with an admirable .750 winning percentage. Their mark now stands at 14-6.

Villanova scored an impressive 15-12 victory over a tough Lehigh squad in a league game Monday afternoon. The Wildcats (3-5) have played excellent and exciting lacrosse over the past four games. Their record is deceiving of their play up to this point in the season, considering the Wildcats have played an extremely competitive schedule. Also, they dropped two heartbreaking decisions to Kutztown State, 15-13, and to Mount St. Mary's, 7-6 in overtime.

Cats Grab Gold Year After Year

By KERRY LYNCH

There are runners everywhere in various stages of dress. The paddock is filled with them and so are the streets immediately surrounding Franklin Field. The stands, too, are filled to near overflow. Usually, in the course of the three days of track events, there is some warm, nay, hot sun as well as an April shower. But always there is the smell of spring and liniment, hot dogs and sweat.

A gun crack rends the air and the 88th Penn Relay Carnival is underway. The Villanova track tradition readies to defend its reputation, again.

The Carnival, which was inaugurated in 1895 — the first relay carnival and the world's largest track meet — holds as many traditions for Villanova as it does for host school Pennsylvania.

Today when the distance medley relay team takes the line at the Penn Relays, they will be looking for their 17th consecutive victory. And that is only one of many Villanova traditions that have become an integral part of the annual carnival.

Former track coach James "Jumbo" Elliott, whose career at Villanova spanned nearly half a century, began his love affair with the Penn Relays when he sold programs there as a boy. When he took over as Wildcat coach, Jumbo began to produce a long line of Olympians and NCAA Track Champions, but it wasn't until two decades into his coaching career that his team finally won an event at the spring spectacle. He finally coached two Championships of America teams at the 1955 relays. From that point, his teams won every year at the Penn Relays until they had totaled 75 victories, with more golds than even host Pennsylvania.

Jumbo himself was a tradition at the relays, coaching from his seat in the southwest corner of the stands. His one-time assistant at Villanova, Jim Tuppeny, is currently Director of the Penn Relays. And when Jumbo died last March the Penn Relay Carnival committee decided to honor him while keeping his tradition alive at th relays. They renamed the invitational mile the Jumbo Elliott Mile. Jumbo's memory is left in good care with the premier milers of the world, a field that often includes at least one of his former runners.

In 1955, when the team came back to the Main Line with the first two championships, sophomore Charlie Jenkins had figured prominently, running both the anchor legs for those gold medals. He is now the coach of the Wildcat tracksters and faces his debut as a coach of excellence and tradition at the 1982 relays. Since those first victories in 1955, the track team has done itself proud with at least one win a year and for three years in a row (1968-70) there were an unprecedented five victories. Many times, Villanovans have been named meet MVP.

Last spring the Villanova team was plagued with injuries and running its first season without Jumbo. For the first time in a long while it looked as if the tradition just might be broken.

On that Friday afternoon four Cats wearing black ribbons gathered in the paddock for the distance medley event. John Hunter led off, then Carlton Young ran the quarter mile leg, with Marcus O'Sullivan receiving the baton from him to run the 3/4-mile leg. Senior Sydney Maree had the anchor position, a one-mile and some stiff and determined competition before him. But he, like the three who went before him ran as much with his heart as with his body and crossed the finish line first, wherein lies the tradition. Maree was named meet MVP at the close of events.

Prestige and Pressure at Penn Relays

Cats Defend Titles

By LARRY GOANOS

The University of Pennsylvania Relay Carnival (popularly known as the Penn Relays) is being held this week in Philadelphia. Perhaps a more fitting title could not have been bestowed upon this extravaganza; the meet is a virtual three-ring circus of non-stop exciting competition. Even the most zealous track fan will agree that the Penn Relays provide more than enough thrills for anyone. Yet amidst this exuberant carnival atmosphere of sporting competition stands a coach and a team with all the pressure of a high-wire walker squarely on their collective shoulders. All eyes will be glued upon first-year Head Coach Charlie Jenkins and his Villanova Wildcats, winners of more Penn Relay titles than any other school in the prestigious meet's 88-year history.

The lion's share of attention will focus upon one specific event, The Event for Villanova rooters, which is the distance medley. The Wildcats have captured first place in this event for 16 straight years, while taking 21 of 26 distance medley titles since 1956. Obviously the men from the Main Line are expected to excel in this race, if only for the sake of tradition.

"It's sort of like U.C.L.A. in basketball," observed Coach Jenkins during a brief time-out from practice earlier this week. "They won those seven NCAA titles in a row. You want it but it's no disgrace if you don't win." Quite an appropriate analogy from the man who succeeded the John Wooden of collegiate track.

When all of the pre-race hoopla finally comes to a climax it will be John Hunter, Carlton Young, John Marshall, and Ross Donoghue in the blocks for Villanova in the distance medley. The opposition will be formidable, however, as they must run against NCAA indoor champion Georgetown and a speedy quartet from Arkansas. "There are some good teams, but we're the one to beat," acknowledged Jenkins.

Although the distance medley may be stealing the spotlight, Villanova is expected to turn in sparkling performances in other events as well. The Wildcat foursome of Mike England, Marcus O'Sullivan, Hunter and Donoghue will attempt to defend Villanova's 1981 title in the 4x1500 meter event. Strong showings are also anticipated for the Cats in the 4x400, 4x800, and sprint medley competitions.

When the sun finally sets on the world's largest track and field meet Saturday night, more than 200 colleges, 600 high schools and 50 clubs will have had been represented in the six-day classic. "For us it's the highlight of the year," concluded Coach Jenkins.

High Hopes for Women Tracksters

By BEVERLY REILLY

The women tracksters view the Penn Relay meet as greatly prominent. The women's track coach, Bob Shoudt, states, "The Penn Relays meet is part of the Villanova tradition. We will successfully carry on that tradition."

The women's first day of events was Thursday, April 22. Seventeen relay teams have qualified to run the distance medley, recently entitled The American Championship Race. Villanova has combined seniors Jennifer Whitfield and Suzanne Shea with freshmen Veronica McIntosh and MaryEllen McGowan to compete in this event. Shea, who will anchor the relay, states, "The Penn Relays is a very prestigious meet for Villanova. I see the race as being highly competitive. However, amidst the rivaling atmosphere, I hope to carry the momentum of the team to the finish." In individual competition, on Thursday, senior Carol Gilsinger ran the 3000-meter run. Sophomore standout Patty Bradley also extended her talents in both the 400-meter hurdles and the long jump. Also in the field, junior Peggy Stewart will attempt to surpass her All-American record setting height of 5-11¼ in the high jump.

On Saturday, Wildcats Whitfield, McIntosh, and Bradley will return to the stadium with teammate EvaMarie Berardi to compete in the relays. This awesome foursome will run both the 4x400 meter and 4x800 meter relays. After breaking the school record in the open 400-meter run last week, McIntosh is looking forward to running a strong leg on both relays. McIntosh states, "I've run Penn Relays in high school and always hoped to continue into college. Although a little nervous, I'm psyched to run for Villanova." Nervousness does not only lie in freshmen. 1982 makes this her fourth trip to the Penn Relays for Villanova, but Whitfield still must overcome the tension. With her mental and physical toughness, Whitfield will anchor both relays across the finish line.

Cats Lose in College Tourney

By BOB HELLER

The Villanova Wildcats softball team participated this weekend in the Intercollegiate Invitational Softball Tournament in Philadelphia. The Cats had high hopes for the tournament, riding a two-game winning streak, having beaten Lehigh and Penn, 6-1 and 4-3 respectively, earlier in the week.

The Cats' opener was Friday night against Eastern College. The Cats started scoring in the third with one run on a Sharon Cecchi double and sacrifice fly by Ann Hanningan. They added four more in the fourth on singles by Denise Reid, Dona Hurley, and Lou Ann Fare, and sacrifices by Brenda Walker and Cecchi. They scored four more in the sixth on free passes to Hurley and Fare, and singles by Cecchi, Patti Nowlan, Hannigan, and Kathie Beisel. In the bottom half of the inning Eastern scored their only run. The Cats scored twice more in the seventh completing a 10-1 rout.

The Cats' second game was Saturday against LaSalle. LaSalle took command right away, hitting the ball hard off the Cats pitching. They scored three runs in the third and one each in the next two innings. The Wildcats only run came in the sixth when the Villanova pinch hitter was hit by a pitch and singles by Nowlan and Hannigan produced the run. LaSalle was victorious by a score of 5-1, forcing the Cats to play later that night.

The nightcap was against Penn. The Cats could do no right against them, being shut out 6-0. In both games the Cats bats were all but silent, managing only three singles against LaSalle and five against Penn.

After the tournament, the girls took on St. Joseph's on Monday. Nova finally broke from their batting slump, scoring twice in the first inning on a Hawk error and singles by Kathie Beisel, Dona Hurley and a double by Denise Reid. They added two more in the third on another Hawk error, and singles by Hurley and Cecchi. St. Joe's tied the score in the fourth at 4-4, prompting Villanova coach Debbie McKee to change pitchers. The Cats won the game in the sixth, scoring three runs on four Hawk errors. The Hawks rallied in the seventh but a double play by Ann Hannigan and Kathie Beisel snuffed their rally one run short. Villanova was victorious 7-6. Their record is now 5-5.

Nova Signs Pressley

By MIKE HEALEY

There is an old adage that goes "When it rains it pours," meaning that when things go wrong, they really go wrong. Perhaps that phrase has an opposite meaning, however, that when things go right, they really go right. Take the situation that the Villanova basketball team finds itself in, for instance.

Not only do the Cats have four starters back from a Final Eight team for next season, but they have also recruited for the second consecutive year one of the nation's finest freshman classes. Coach Rollie Massimino and his assistants have assembled a talented and deep squad with Final Four potential.

Comprising the incoming class are big men Wyatt Maker and Chuck Everson, guards Dwight Wilbur and R.C. Massimino, and one Harold Pressley, a heavily recruited blue chip prospect. Pressley, a 6'6" forward from St. Bernard's High School in Uncasville, CT, had nearly 2000 points and 1300 rebounds in his high school career. He was recruited by over 200 schools, among them Notre Dame, U.C.L.A., and other giants.

"Harold is a great athlete and a fine person," says Massimino. "He fits the mold of all the players we have recruited," he adds, "and just solidifies the whole class."

Pressley was named to the Parade All-America first team this year, after having lead his team in scoring and rebounding for the past two seasons. In addition, he helped his team to two straight state championships in Connecticut's Class Large division. Pressley will be in the forefront of next year's freshman class, but he is not the only player with exceptional skills.

With the addition of the 6'10" Maker and the 6'11" Everson, the Wildcats will have a bruising and deep front line. And with Wilbur and the young Massimino waiting in the wings, Nova will have added quality at guard and indeed every position.

"I'm very happy with all five players," says Massimino, "and I don't think that we could have found five with a better meld."

Women's Lax Lack Luster

By MARIE WOZNIAK

The Villanova women's lacrosse team chalked up its first win of the season with a 6-1 victory over Haverford College last week.

Junior Anne McGuiness led the Wildcats with two goals. The other scores came from junior Anita Clarke, sophomore Julie Dougherty, and freshmen Laura Cella and Gina Roman.

Villanova's attempt at its second straight win was foiled by Philadelphia Textile. The bright spot in the 10-4 loss was senior Sue Callahan's three goals. Clarke scored the other goal.

Coach Joan Johnson feels that the team's weakness is their inexperience. "We have many players who never played lacrosse in high school. We lost a lot of last year's team to graduation.

The women's lacrosse team rolled over Haverford on Monday by a score of 6-1.

ATHLETES OF THE YEAR

The 1981-82 men's Budweiser Athlete of the Year is senior Aaron Howard of the men's basketball team. The Linden, N.J. native has been a four-year starter for Villanova, during which time the Cats have chalked up an 82-40 record while making three NCAA Tournament appearances. As the lone senior starter on this year's squad, Howard provided leadership while averaging 7.9 points and 3.3 rebounds per game. Among the many highlights for Howard this season were: canning the winning shot against Notre Dame, hitting an 18-footer with seconds left to send the Cats into an eventual overtime victory against Syracuse at the Palestra, and scoring season-high 16 points to help eliminate Memphis State in the NCAA Tournament. Noted primarily as a defensive specialist, Howard was named to the All Big Five Team while falling just 16 points short of 1,000 for his career. Howard was nominated by Athletic Director Dr. Ted Aceto.

The 1981-82 women's Budweiser Athlete of the Year is senior Lisa Ortlip of the women's basketball team. Ortlip had an outstanding season while leading the Cats to a 29-4 record and a third-place finish in the AIAW National Championships. Ortlip averaged 15.5 points and 6.2 rebounds per game this season while shooting at a 59.6% clip. Accolades were heaped upon Ortlip this year; she was named to the Kodak EAIAW All-East Team, chosen as the Big Five Co-MVP, and nominated for the Wade Trophy, which honors the best female basketball player in the nation. Over the course of the last four years Ortlip has helped to propel the Cats to an 86-23 record. The all-time leading scorer in Villanova women's basketball history, Ortlip also holds fifteen other individual school records. Basketball is not her only sport however; she is also a key performer for the women's volleyball team. Women's Athletic Coordinator Mary Anne Steenrod nominated Ortlip for this award.

New Fieldhouse Plans Challenged

By LEONARD J. La BARTH

The love affair between Villanova and the rest of the Big 5 schools may soon be ended.

Villanova's expanding basketball program, boosted by last season's impressive NCAA playoff appearance, may have a new home as early as the 1983-84 season.

This would realize a big financial gain for Villanova, which will earn close to $300,000 for three national television appearances this season, but it could deal a death blow to the Big 5.

According to Villanova officials, ground-breaking will probably begin in October for an intramural-intercollegiate facility that may seat more than 8,000 spectators.

With such a facility at its disposal, the Wildcats would opt to forego future contests at the Palestra. This could upset the balance of the Big 5, because Villanova is acknowledged to be the Big 5's major drawing card.

In recent years, Villanova and its big name opponents have accounted for the major part of the attendance and have received the largest share of the league's basketball revenues.

However, Villanova could earn even more by playing its home contests in its own arena.

"We are not looking to abandon the Big 5," claimed Villanova athletic director Ted Aceto. "Somebody said we may move all our games out here. Hey, it may happen. But I think every team in the Big 5 is looking in its own direction. The way our program is going, we can't be playing in such a small facility."

With the demise of the school's football program in April, 1980, basketball has become the major sport at Villanova and it is expanding. In addition to the $300,000 from television and gate receipts that the university will receive this season for games against Kentucky, North Carolina and Georgetown, Villanova is expected to double the $100,000 in television income it received for playing Big East games last year.

"We plan on using portable seating," Aceto said, "so that with the addition of a movable wall in between, the new building could be used for more than one event at a time.

"We would also have a pool as well and by constructing a new fieldhouse, the old one could be changed to include other activities such as racquetball, three basketball courts, and a new weight room, among other things." The present fieldhouse seats 3,000.

Villanova's basketball team expects to improve upon last year's Final Eight team with four of last season's five starters returning

Villanova officials are cautiously optimistic about the facility. The final go-ahead has not yet been given. Aceto said that surveying work has been done and that discussions about zoning regulations with Radnor Township had been conducted.

Actually, further plans have been developed. A proposal has been worked out to float a $25 million bond issue to finance construction of the new facility, the upgrading of the present one and additions and improvement of the school's dormitories.

On Tuesday, August 10, sales began of the bonds issued by Villanova University and backed by the Delaware County Authority. However, the University's latest projects will be subject to Radnor township's land development provisions.

Neighbors whose properties run along the proposed new fieldhouse and dormitory sites have hired an attorney to help them in their efforts to challenge Villanova's plans if and when they come before the township.

According to a neighbor, David Duffy, the expansion is opposed for three reasons — first, the environmental impact, second, noise pollution from more students and third, substantial reductions in the market value of the homes adjacent to the sites.

Another problem involved in the proposal is the storm drainage system which has increased runoff problems to the south and the east since the construction of the Good Council and Stanford dormitories on S. Ithan Ave. in the mid-1970s.

A recent state law has expanded the sphere of the Delaware County Authority, a financing agency, to include educational institutions. Villanova is the first school in the county to get the backing of the authority.

According to University officials, two-thirds of the bond money will be used for the construction and the remaining amount for capital expenditures. To pay off the bond, Villanova is conducting the "Covenant Campaign II," a fund drive that will raise the money through contributions and solicitations. The Covenant Campaign I raised money to fund the Connelly Center.

Dean, Directors Named

By KIM RUSHTON

New administrators have been appointed to the positions of Dean of Students, Honors Program Director, and Director of the Career Development Center.

Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A. was appointed dean of students on July 1. Stack was formerly at Villanova as Augustinian Vocational Director and was involved with Campus Ministry.

Stack sees a "few expected problems" but is optimistic that most of the students will be cooperative.

Stack expressed hope that students will feel open to come to the office with their problems.

"The office is for the students and I want to be as available as possible. I think it's important for the students to have someone to come to with their problems who will listen and try to do something."

Dr. Michael Burke is the new director of the Honors Program. The opportunity to work with the "brightest and best" and "the challenge of a new position" are the major reasons Burke took the position.

Burke sees no urgent changes needed in the program and believes he "took over a high quality program." However, he would like to see more non-honor majors become involved in honors activities and courses.

Charlie Guida Photo

"Non-honors majors can bring personal expertise to honors courses. The program can serve non-honors majors just as well."

Burke is very pleased with the new offices located on the fourth floor of the library. The new offices contain a seminar room, lounge and office for Burke.

Dr. Robert Stokes, former associate director of career planning and placement for the University of Maine, is the new director of the Career Development Center.

Stokes hopes to broaden the scope of services and to make the student body more aware of the Center. Among the new services that Stokes hopes to implement is videotaping of mock interviews and career presentations.

Stokes hopes to improve relations with employers that presently recruit at Villanova as well as to seek new prospective employers to come to the campus for recruitment.

Network, V.U. Sign Pact

By LEONARD J. La BARTH

The Rolling Stones are coming to Villanova.

Also tentatively scheduled for concerts are Pat Benatar, the Go-Gos, Blondie, Diana Ross and other musical acts. But don't start lining up at the Connelly Center ticket office just yet.

The University has signed a contract with the Campus Entertainment Network (CEN), a new video entertainment network that will beam live satellite broadcasts directly to big screen TVs on college campuses.

Locally, other schools considering membership in the system include the University of Pennsylvania, Rutgers University and Pennsylvania State University. The University of Tampa and the University of Wisconsin are among dozens of other colleges that have already signed.

"CEN was created as the answer to the frustrations of college programming," said Jeffrey Moritz, board chairman of the New York City-based business. "The popular artists the students would like to see on campus are either not accessible or economically feasible."

The attraction offered by the nation's first pay-per-view music network is what CEN officials call a "turnkey" operation — the school need supply only a suitable theatre or auditorium. The network will give away thousands of dollars worth of hardware — including a satellite receiving disk, an auditorium stereo system and a 15-by-20-foot video screen in exchange for the right to broadcast concerts and other events.

The network will also conduct the promotion, advertising and erect a portable earth station.

According to Robert Skinner, vice-president of the company, the screen and the satellite receiving station will be removed after the live broadcast and will be erected again for subsequent broadcasts.

The cost of student tickets for the live-show broadcasts will probably be $5 and the college will keep five percent of the gate. It's estimated that a CEN performer could earn from $200,000 to $300,000 for a night's work.

Villanova's program director for student activities Christine Muller-Storck agrees with Moritz's assessment of available, yet affordable,talent. "Big acts today are so expensive that they're pricing themselves out of the college market for all but a few schools," she said. "Major acts can cost $20,000 or $25,000. For example, three years ago we had Kenny Loggins here, and it cost us $8,500. Now, it would cost us $25,000."

Muller-Storck said the CEN financial offer was too good to pass because "they'll pay all the promotional, publicity and sales costs."

The network will beam the shows into the Villanova Center, located in the Connelly Center. Minimum seating accommodates 412; a maximum crowd of 534 can be held.

Director

for graduates will receive equal treatment, said Stokes. He added that the two areas are interdependent.

"I hope to build some bridges with the faculty to make them aware of the services of the Center. Faculty members can often be of additional assistance to students with their knowledge in their fields," added Stokes.

'Infirmary Seven' Homeless

By DEAN BALSAMINI and JEFFREY PAGE

Okay. You're a college freshman. You're a little nervous, and understandably so. Maybe even a little scared. You've heard stories of roommates like Charles Manson. Or that you might get an Orientation Counselor named Jim Jones. Or that your room is so small that even Mickey Rooney would hit his head there. But you figure everything will be okay.

Your first worry is getting to school. When you get there, your next worry is whether you're going to be living in Good Counsel or Sheehan. But if you're Mary Schultz, you're living in the Infirmary.

Schultz, along with six other freshman women, is living in the Infirmary temporarily. When the women arrived at Villanova last Sunday, they found out that they didn't have rooms on campus even though each was promised one. But they're making the best of it and taking the whole misunderstanding in stride.

the now famous "Infirmary Seven," noted that living in the infirmary has its advantages as well as its disadvantages. At a temporary loss to name any of the advantages, Schultz did name a few of the disadvantages. "During orientation people always ask you where you're living. You get some pretty strange looks when you tell them, 'the Infirmary.'

"A big problem is that there aren't any closets or dressers. For the past few days I've been literally living out of a suitcase."

The women did have a choice though. They had the option of living at Rosemont, or staying in the Infirmary until there is an available room. Each year there are people who reserve rooms and for one reason or another do not come to Villanova. The girls were at the top of the waiting list to get on campus. The Office of Resident Life anticipated ten "no shows," but unfortunately there were only three. However, the women will be moved into dorms by sometime next week.

Schultz added, "I'm sure I'll look back on this and laugh, but right now it's a little rough."

Physics Club Awarded

By LEONARD J. La BARTH

The Villanova chapter of the Society of Physics Students (SPS) has been designated as one of the "Outstanding SPS Chapters for 1981-82" by zone councillors representing the SPS National Council.

It is the second consecutive year that Villanova has won the award. The chapter was one of thirty-five to be awarded recognition for its work in the promotion of physics. There are more than 500 college chapters in the United States.

The American Institute of Physics originated the awards in 1978 to encourage the chapters in their work to promote the field of physics.

Physics professor Dr. Phillip Maurone, who steps down this year as moderator of the club after several years of advising the organization, said that winning the award in consecutive years is a tribute to the chapter's hard work.

The chapters are divided into twelve zones in the country. Due to the large number of chapters in Pennsylvania, the state is an individual zone. Forty colleges have chapters in Pennsylvania.

"Even though the award is only a letter and a certificate, it recognizes the chapter's efforts," said Lila Gorelick, administrative assistant to the executive director of the national office, Dr. Dion W. Shea. "So many clubs in colleges fall apart and the students get apathetic without encouragement and recognition. The society recognizes the important club efforts."

Each zone has its own councillor who is a professor from one of the zone's colleges. The councillor oversees each chapter's efforts and receives the annual reports which he bases his decision upon.

Also included in the councillor's judgment are outstanding chapter projects, outside guest lectures, Bendix Award and Marsh W. White award proposals submitted as well as students papers presented at SPS and student attendance and participation in SPS zone or regional meetings..

In addition to Villanova, Carnegie-Mellon University and Thiel College also received awards for the Pennsylvania zone.

The Return Of Black September

Summer vacation is never long enough.

Every May there is incredible relief that another school year has ended; finals are over, unendurable roommates and harassing landlords are left behind and the only real concern is finding a summer job, or, if you are among the more fortunate, finding a decent place to crash at the shore for four months.

It all seems so idyllic that you don't notice how quickly the months roll by, leading inexorably towards the first days of an always black September.

And then you are here.

When you're a freshman, it's like stepping into the Twilight Zone. You are thrown in with a mob of your peers, each one as hopelessly confused and lost as you are. People with omnipresent grins on their faces bombard you in a four-day orientation period, with all the things they think you need to know about surviving in college. For the first few days, though, your only thoughts are of locating Toto and getting the hell back to Kansas, but clicking your heels three times only gives you blisters. Yet somehow you survive, and then you're a sophomore.

What a depressing plateau to reach. You at least know your way around the campus, but you still have to take required courses where bored and boring professors drone their ways through surveys of everything from the photosynthetic process to the British literary tradition. Nothing holds the same excitement that it did a year earlier; and yet, The Powers That Be feel it's still too early to move you on to anything with real substance and bite. And to top it off, you're still too young to drink legally in Pennsylvania bars.

Junior year is undoubtably the best. You now know the place like the back of your hand, and unless you're an incurable pariah, you've made a few friends. You know all about blowing out three term papers in two days, but you're doing them for classes that actually interest you, so it's not all that bad. The weekends start Thursday afternoon and you starting thinking that maybe you'd prefer spending school holidays with your friends rather than your family. It's a good life, but you don't realize just how good until it's over.

And then you're a senior. You remember, one of those people who looked so terrifyingly experienced and blase when you were a freshman, the ones who appear to have their lives in order and know where they're going. Alas, if only that were true. What seniors really are doing is running scared. They're worried about finding jobs that they hope will last for more than the months May through August. They're worried about getting into a decent grad school. But most of all, they're worried about leaving the protective college bubble in which they've existed for the last three years. And they wish they could start the whole thing over again.

But there's no more summer vacation.

The Clash: The Only Band That Matters

By DEAN BALSAMINI

Last week this writer finally had a chance to see what all the commotion was about concerning The Clash. The band, which is touring in support of its Combat Rock album, was playing at New York's Pier 84 (which played host to many a band during the summer).

In spite of the Pier's notoriously poor acoustics, The Clash was excellent. Led by Joe Strummer (now sporting a mohawk), the band played for almost two hours and pounded out 24 songs with the razor-like precision that has become the group's trademark.

Strummer's singing is unique in that his throaty, wailing voice bends but never breaks. He is a man who with every lyric angrily pleads to be heard.

The Clash played a variety of material from their earlier albums, but the majority came from their latest, Combat Rock, an album as commercial as one will ever see The Clash get.

As one of the leaders of the original punk movement, The Clash have always been a political band. In fact, they still proudly consider themselves as punk. "The punk movement did a lot in waking up some people," Strummer once said. "Rod Stewart told us that our music sort of gave him a kick in the ass to get up and go back to work."

The band was obviously upset about playing outdoors in front of ten thousand people. The Clash have always felt a need to be close to their fans. In fact for almost 40 minutes Strummer was playing guitar with his back towards the crowd. He finally explained. "If you've noticed I haven't been looking at you because I can't see you up on this shelf. It feels like rehearsal."

The Clash: Joe Strummer, Paul Simonon, and Mick Jones.

With that Strummer had a spotlight shone on various individuals to say hello and create an intimate rapport with the crowd.

As for highlights, there were many: the band bursting out on stage and performing London Calling, Strummer shriekingly advising to Know Your Rights, the crowd singing along with I Fought the Law, to name a few. The stage was set up with sirens and warning signs to create a combat zone effect. Each song also was illustrated by various slides.

After the first encore, which included Should I Stay Or Should I Go, the band left everyone pleading for more. If one knows The Clash it was no surprise that they returned for another encore playing Straight To Hell and Brand New Cadillac.

By now the clouds that threatened rain all evening kept their promise. The Clash, however, remained on stage, breaking into White Riot. As the rain fell increasingly harder the band played increasingly faster. Both band and audience danced and got drenched together in what had become a storm.

As corny as this may all sound, this is what rock 'n' roll is supposed to be about. The Clash's attitude towards their music remains pretty much the same as when they first started out. Their concern for their fans is unmatched. If this performance was any indication, then The Clash (at least right now) is "The Only Band That Matters."

Mall Concert

The Vinny Gallagher Band will be appearing on the Kennedy Mall, Saturday, September 11, at noon.

The band will play original songs composed by the band's leader, Vinny Gallagher. Gallagher has spent considerable time playing in New York City's Greenwich Village.

Gallagher's most recent project, the Vinny Gallagher Band, embraces many musical styles including blues, folk, reggae, rhythm and blues, and rock and roll. Gallagher plays rhythm guitar and harmonica and is also lead vocalist. Performing with Gallagher will be Buck Stahlgren on lead guitar, Jamie Carpenter on drums and Pepper Duffy on bass. Other members of the band include guitarist Jay Scott and keyboardist Joshua Yudkin.

Athletes Active Over Summer

By LARRY GOANOS

Before posing the old familiar questions about the summer vacation to Villanova athletes, be well aware that many Wildcats will be able to detain you for hours with tales of their travels abroad. The summer months were used well by Villanova athletes who put their skills to the test against some of the world's finest competition.

Beginning with the Wildcat runners, Carlton Young visited London in June where he placed second in the 400-meter event of a U.S.-Great Britain dual meet. The Villanova senior also ran the third leg of 4x400 meter event.

Also representing the U.S. over the summer, but on the junior level, were Villanova teammates John Marshall and John Borgese. In a tri-meet between the national teams of the U.S. and Canada and a squad of Texas All-Stars in Houston, Marshall and Borgese ran first and third respectively in the 800-meters on July 23. One week later the duo repeated their 1-3 finish in Barquisimeto, Venezuela as the U.S. contingent captured the Pan-American Junior Championship.

At the opposite end of the Americas, Wildcat Ken Lucks grabbed fourth place in the Canadian National Championship's 1500-meter event. A native of Canada, Lucks turned in a 3:43.87 clocking at the Vancouver meet.

Turning towards the hardwood, Villanova players honed their skills on four continents while Big East "Coach of the Year" and Widmer Cup "Eastern Coach of the Year" Rollie Massimino shared his basketball expertise on a fifth.

Wildcat seniors John Pinone and Stewart Granger found themselves on opposite sides of the court this summer as the two performed for the U.S. and Canadian National Teams respectively in Cali, Columbia. Pinone served as a tri-captain on the U.S. squad which turned in the best peformance ever for Uncle Sam in the World Championships as they took second place honors. Earlier in the summer Granger's Canadian team garnered first place honors in a four-team exhibition at the World's Fair in Knoxville.

Senior Mike Mulquin and sophomore Dwayne McClain teamed up with their Big East rivals on an All-Star squad which invaded Spain, Italy and Yugoslavia. The team returned to America with a 6-3 record against some tough European competition.

Also representing the Big East overseas were Frank "Happy" Dobbs and Gary McLain. The duo toured Angola, Africa for a two week - nine game stint. Averaging eight and eleven points per game respectively, the two Villanovans helped the Big East team to an impressive showing.

Sophomore Ed Pinckney and freshman Harold Pressley were content to stay stateside. The pair were chosen to represent the East at the National Sports Festival in Indianapolis. The underdog East team dropped the championship game to the South squad, 125-114, but Pinckney walked off with the tournament MVP trophy and Pressley served warning to opposing Big East coaches with a sparkling effort.

Freshmen Wyatt Maker and Dwight Wilbur also took their game on the road this past summer. Maker got playing time with an Athletes in Action team which toured Panama and Brazil while Wilbur propelled his New Jersey A.A.U. squad to the A.A.U. National Tournament in Florida.

Not to be outdone by his charges, Coach Massimino took his coaching skills from the Big East to the Far East. Chosen as one of three American coaches sent to China by the NIKE corporation, Massimino participated in a week long series of coaching clinics and player camps.

Ed Pinckney flashes the form which earned him the MVP award at the National Sports Festival in Indianapolis.

Intramurals Program Ready for Fall

By KERRY LYNCH

The Villanova intramural program, under the directorship of former football coach Lou Ferry and swim coach Ed Geisz, plans an extensive program for the fall semester.

The flag football program, a fall tradition, involves the largest number of students among the fall programs. The program consists of three leagues, the fraternity league, the women's league and the mens teams. All games in each league are officiated by referees from the intramural department and each has a play-off at the close of the season.

Coach Ferry hopes to use the Austin and Mendel fields for afternoon play for all leagues and expects the women to play Sundays in the stadium. Night games will also be held nearly every week night under the lights at the stadium behind the Butler Annex. He also pointed out that use of fields at the Morris Estates behind St. Mary's has been considered but at this time no definite plans have been made. "Some teams would rather play on the turf," Coach Ferry said, so he is glad to be able to utilize that field more this season.

Other programs which the intramural department hopes to involve students in during the fall are a tennis tournament, women's volleyball and the one pitch softball tournament. These programs have all been popular in previous seasons.

The intramural program's office is on the second floor of the Field House and has a faculty-student administration. Working along with Coaches Ferry and Geisz are students John Lavery, president, and Mary Elise Wilcox, vice president.

The program involves thousands of students a year and opens the programs to both residents and commuters. Coach Ferry regrets that there are so few indoor activities but notes that the lack of facilities is responsible.

Intramurals also draw large participation in the winter with the three league basketball program and in the spring with softball.

Villanova Branch

Bank Loses Thousands Annually

By JEFFREY PAGE

Although the Bryn Mawr Trust Company (BMTC) as a whole made a profit of over two million dollars last year, the Villanova branch operated at a loss of about a hundred thousand dollars.

According to Richard Fuchs, Vice President of Branches, BMTC, the Villanova branch has never been profitable since it opened over 13 years ago. And for the last few years, it has lost "around a hundred thousand dollars a year." Fuchs said the loss is mainly due to cashing checks for non-customers.

Howard Graham, manager of the Villanova branch of Bryn Mawr Trust.

Howard Graham, the branch manager of the Villanova office of BMTC, said it currently costs about a dollar to cash a check not from BMTC. "This includes the interest the bank pays for the money during the two to four days it takes the checks to clear, as well as the extra tellers . . ."

For the last few years, the bank has been charging all non-customers (students as well as Villanova personnel) 15 cents to cash a check. However, BMTC is now charging non-customers one dollar for the same service.

Fuchs said, "It became noticeable that we were losing money there (cashing non-customer checks), so we had to do something about it." Fuchs pointed out that BMTC is one of the only area banks that cashes checks for non-customers. "We will still provide that service to students, but at a reasonable fee."

Fuchs explained, "We can't continue to provide services and operate at a loss; it's simply not a good business decision. What the bank is trying to do is provide the service in a cost-effective way."

Graham noted that BMTC does not charge customers (with accounts) to cash checks. "We hope that the students will open an account and bank with us."

When told of the increase, the Rev. John Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, commented, "The fee doesn't seem unreasonable for non-customers. But, I don't like the idea of such a steep raise after no raise for so long. Maybe they should have done it more gradually."

In another effort to provide service in a cost-effective way, BMTC has installed an Automatic Teller Machine (ATM) in the Connelly Center. The machine will be put into operation on Sept. 22. Graham feels that the ATM will help to make the bank more profitable. Fuchs agreed. "It is a lot less costly to process a transaction through a machine. There is no paper work, and you need less tellers."

Fuchs also said that depending on the acceptance of the first ATM at Villanova, BMTC may install others. "At this point, the acceptance has been excellent. It should be a big help."

It costs BMTC $6,000 a year to lease the branch in Kennedy Hall. The rent has not increased since the bank opened in January 1969. The lease, which is renewable yearly, can be terminated by either BMTC or Villanova University up to 3 months before the renewal date (every January 1). The only restriction stated in the lease is that BMTC ". . . shall provide their service to Villanova University, Villanova University's student body, and the Villanova University personnel only and shall at no time conduct business from . . . (Kennedy Hall) with the

Two Villanova Students Struck by P&W Trolley

By JERRY ARTH AND JEFFREY PAGE

Two Villanova students were seriously injured early Wednesday morning when they were struck by a P&W trolley as they were painting the Ithan Ave. bridge as part of a sorority pledge activity.

The two women, Michele Avalone, 18, a sophomore from Philadelphia and Gail Feldner, 20, a junior from Oradell, N.J., were rushed to Bryn Mawr Hospital at 1:25 a.m., where, later in the day, they were reported to be in stable condition. According to a hospital spokesman, Feldner suffered a fractured pelvis and Avallone a fractured lumbar in the accident.

The women, pledges of the sorority Delta Delta Delta, were part of a group of approximately 25 DDD sisters and pledges painting the bridge as a pledge activity. According to one member of the sorority, who declined to be identified, the bridge painting was not a mandatory part of the pledge program.

"We all just got together to have some fun and show our spirit. No one expected something like this to happen," she said.

The painting of the P&W bridge has long been a tradition among Villanova groups, particularly with fraternities and sororities.

A report written by a Villanova security guard who arrived on the scene shortly after the accident stated that the women were hit by a west-bound trolley while on top of the bridge. "The girls all stood close to the edge of the bridge to let the train go by," the report read, "Evidently two of the girls were not in close enough and were struck by the trolley." It is uncertain exactly how many people were on top of the bridge at the time..

University officials declined to comment directly on the incident, pending the completion of an official report sometime next week.

However, Dean of Students John Stack did say that "it was unfortunate that it was a sorority, because some people just wait for a sorority or a fraternity to be involved in something like this so they can make a big deal about it."

He continued, "It could have been any group. We wouldn't even want to think of sanctions against the sorority, unless they were doing something they weren't supposed to do or if it was a compulsory activity."

Stack also expressed concern about general student safety, saying that while the University has taken positive action to make things safer for students, it is impossible to protect them from all things. "We can't always act as their parents," he said.

Christine Dougherty, the current president of DDD, declined to comment on the accident.

Rev. Joseph Papin Dies

The Rev. Joseph Papin, O.S.A., a noted theologian and former director of graduate studies at Villanova University, died Sept. 2 of a heart attack at the age of 68.

Papin joined the Villanova faculty in 1963 as a resident professor of theology. In 1968, he initiated the Villanova University Symposia and became director of the University's Theological Institute.

He was born in 1914 in Slovakia, what is now the eastern portion of Czechoslovakia, and was ordained as a priest in 1942. He emigrated to the United States six years later.

Papin was noted as a zealous and compassionate intellectual. He fluently spoke 16 languages and read more than 30. Before coming to the U.S., Papin taught philosophy and Russian literature at the University of Nijmegen in Holland. He received his S.T.D. from there and also did post-graduate work at the University of Louvain in Belgium.

From 1948 to 1950, Papin taught biblical Greek and philosophy at the Benedictine College of St. Procopius in Ill. He then went to DePaul University in 1950 to teach philosophy, theology and contemporary politics, while at the same time holding the position of acting chairman of the department of theology.

He left DePaul in 1953 and began a ten-year term at the University of Notre Dame. There he taught political science, theology and the history of Russian philosophy. After he left, a building on the campus was named in his honor.

Papin did voluminous researching and writing during his years of teaching. The Villanova Symposia produced six works The Dynamic in Christian Thought (1969), The Dynamic of Christian Action (1969), Openness to the World (1970), The Pilgrim People: A Vision with Hope (1971), The Eschaton: A Community of Love (1972), and The Church and Human Society at the Threshold of the Third Millenium (1973). Additionally, Papin produced over 20 other works in his lifetime.

Papin never failed to broaden his intellectual scope, even when affected by debilitating illness late in his life. He continued studying genetics, law, linguistics, literature, philosophy, political science, psychology and sociology up until his death.

He is survived by a sister in Czechoslovakia.

A Mass of Christian Burial was offered this past Tuesday, concelebrated by Cardinal John Krol of the Archdiocese of Philadelphia, the Rev. John Driscoll, O.S.A., president of Villanova University, and the Rev. Francis Eigo, O.S.A., chairman of Villanova's religious studies department.

College Costs Rise Nationwide

(CPS) The total cost of going to college, including tuition, room, board, supplies, transportation and personal expenses, has jumped by as much as 13 percent for some students this fall, according to a survey by the College Board's College Scholarship Service.

The survey of some 3300 colleges predicts students at four-year public campuses will spend an average of $4338 to go to school this year, a 13 percent increase over last year's expenses.

Private college and university students will spend an average of $7475 to make it through the 1982-83 academic year, an 11 percent hike over 1981-82, the study found.

Soaring tuition rates are the main reasons. Tuition is up an average of twenty percent at public colleges, and thirteen percent at private colleges.

Villanova's tuition hike for the 1982-83 academic year contained increases ranging from 13.5 percent to 15.5 percent.

The average public college tuition this year is $979, compared to $815 in 1981-82. Private college tuition has risen to $4021 this year, up from last year's $3552.

Two-year colleges registered similar increases. Public two-year colleges are charging an average of $600 in tuition, up 18 percent from a year ago. Private two-year colleges averaged 11 percent increases in tuition, up to $2486 this year.

The College Board also found that room and board charges have risen eight percent over last year's averages, while other costs — transportation, supplies, personal expenses — have escalated by seven percent.

Room and board at Villanova rose 12.5 percent, from $2775 to $3120 for 1982-83.

Some officials argue that the students are lucky that the increases aren't higher.

"Although tuition and fee charges have gone up more than overall costs, the total cost increase is somewhat smaller than observers had predicted for this year," said Kathleen Brouder, who directed the study for the College Board.

"It may not be a lot of consolation to students or parents facing the bills," she acknowledged, "but we think it's remarkable that colleges have been as successful as they have been at containing costs."

Brouder attributes much of the increases to the need to up-date and remodel aging facilities, to the continuing effects of a decade of unrelieved inflation, and to federal and state education budget cuts.

"In absolute terms," she noted, "the public sector has been hit harder than the private, but in absolute dollar terms, of course, average tuitions are still substantially lower in public colleges and universities."

To counter rising costs, Brouder suggests that students should continue applying for financial aid and apply a close eye on the planning of their education to avoid a wastage of time and money.

Student Government to Change

By LEONARD J. La BARTH

Citing major changes in both the constitution and the overall structure of the Villanova Student Government, Student Body President Paul Tufano expects the image of the government to improve this year.

According to Tufano, the student government is aiming to change its image from an ordinary group or organization to a "hard-working, representative body."

"We're digging ourselves out of last year's trenches," Tufano said. "We will have short-term goals that can identify the student government as an intermediary between the students and administration."

One of the major changes is the revision of the constitution for the student government. Vice-presidents, previously under-worked and overlooked, according to Tufano, will be given more responsibilities this year.

"Before, they had no clout," Tufano said. "Now they will be more responsible. There are three vice-presidents, including a vice-president for communications, with one in charge as executive vice-president."

Eliminated from future student government meeting will be the need for a caucus. In previous votes, a caucus was given the only voting power. "Everyone will have an equal say in approving student government matters," Tufano said.

Over the summer, Tufano met with Thomas LeBreque, a member of the Villanova Board of Trustees and President of Chase Manhattan Bank to discuss "Villanova matters."

"It was a very beneficial meeting," said Tufano. "I can't discuss all that was said but it was important that a trustee heard from the student government."

The student government also sponsored a weekend at Villanova in July that was attended by Dean of Students John Stack, Vice-President for Student Life Dr. Richard Neville, Director of Student Activities Lucyna Gorski, Tufano, and a suprise guest, University President Rev. John Driscoll, O.S.A.

"It was a meeting that detailed the direction Villanova will be going in the future," Tufano reported. "Driscoll gave a state of the university address that answered our questions and outlined projects for the future. He also gave honest answers concerning football." Tufano said the group appreciated Driscoll's honesty and candor.

This year, the student government will propose a Student Bill of Rights that is different from any other proposed before. According to Tufano, the government will attempt to incorporate the "Joint Statement on Rights and Responsibilities" that has been adopted by other colleges as their student statement. "We will not start from scratch because it wouldn't work," said Tufano.

The student government will also attempt to sponsor a conference in the spring that would include student government leaders from other schools and feature local, federal and state leaders addressing a theme concerning education and leadership.

"Overall, we're going to demonstrate many changes," Tufano said. "We're not going for pie-in-the-sky goals. The student government will aim for short-term goals, act on them, then go for all the marbles."

general public."

BMTC is interested in improving its image on campus. Last May, Anita Gambos (a vice president for BMTC) held a meeting with Student Body President Paul Tufano and other student leaders to discuss the ATM. In a letter to Tufano, Gambos said, "I found the meeting helpful in not only formulating ATM strategies, but also at addressing more specific concerns about the Bank's on-campus image." The letter continued, "I am confident that in time you will see some noticeable changes in our approach to the students' financial needs."

Fuchs emphasized, "We are a bank; and we would like to shed the image of a check cashing service." He continued, "One of the main reasons we are at Villanova is that we hope to build a long term relationship with the students."

As far as profitability, Fuchs said that he does not expect either the new $1. check cashing fee or the new ATM to turn the Villanova branch around. But, he said, "We will be happy losing less money."

Villanova's Active Democrats

Student Runs Borough

By LEONARD J. La BARTH

William Pilny is the Democratic committee chairman for the Glenolden, Pa. borough.

He is not a grizzled veteran of political warfare, nor is he a polished back-slapping, baby-kissing politician.

Pilny is a twenty-year old junior political science major at Villanova who was elected unanimously in Feb. 1982 at a party organizational meeting.

There has been no Democratic committee in Glenolden for over one hundred years according to Pilny's records, despite the borough's tradition of hard-working, blue-collar constituents. In the past, collective meetings have been held with no organization.

Pilny first became involved in politics through the intervention of his boss at work who is chairman of the Democratic committee for a neighboring borough.

"I just thought it would be neat to help out," Pilny said. "Then I found myself really getting interested in the operations of the Democratic Party and the pieces started to fall into place."

Pilny, who doesn't see his age as a detriment to his work, is also involved as campaign manager for George McClosky in his race for State Representative of Delaware County's 162d legislative district.

Pilny's first real taste of politics came in his work for District Judge Peter Tozer in his Nov. 1981 campaign. The Democratic candidate defeated the incumbent who had inherited the position from his father and had held it for over 20 years.

"Working in that election made me realize how important contact with the people really is," said Pilny. "I didn't do all that much work but the district justice liked what he saw and appreciated my enthusiasm and work."

The Glenolden borough is divided into six precincts with a total of 12 committee people comprising the party. At the victory party for Tozer, Pilny became acquainted with other Democrats who recognized the same need for an organized Democratic party.

"The committee was organized, a primary was held and I was elected chairman," Pilny reported. "Perhaps not too many others wanted the position but I welcomed the challenge."

Club Revived

By KIM RUSHTON

An attempt is being made to revive the Villanova College Democrats, which has existed on paper but not in practice, since 1976.

Joe Alessandrine, a sophomore liberal arts major, began the process of reviving interest in the club by operating a booth at the Freshman Activities Forum on Sept. 8. He received 35 signatures from freshmen expressing a desire to join such a club.

Joseph Alessandrine, Jr. — Jeff Page Photo

According to Gary Bonas, assistant director of student activities, the club will have to repeat the club application process in order to be re-recognized. Among the requirements are the signatures of at least twelve prospective members and a prospective faculty member as advisor.

Bonas sees no impediments to the re-recognition of the club, and is optimistic that it can be revived.

"Their constitution needs to be updated," said Bonas. "If they submit to us a bid for funding, as any student club would, we would consider it. The only problem is that the budgeting process for this year began last March, and by far the total majority of our money has been allocated. We will probably be able to help them in some regard, but not as much as they would like."

Alessandrine is optimistic, and sees his first task as getting the organization started and being recognized by the university.

"I'm going to need help. It's hard to approach people — you have to be careful how and what you say to whom or people might think you're weird. I think the interest is there, though," he said.

Alessandrine sees the first project of the club, once it is recognized, as working in a joint effort with the College Republicans in a registration drive. The second project will be to support local candidates in local elections.

"I think it's more important to support local candidates — they'll have more effect on the people in this area and at this school." added Alessandrine.

Jeff Berenato, president of the College Republicans, sees the possible re-recognition of the College Democrats as "welcome competition."

"I welcome any organization that will help to arouse interest in the political scene. The competition will arouse interest."

When asked about working with the College Democrats on a registration drive, Berenato replied that "hopefully there will be joint effort to get students to register, which is a common goal of both political parties."

"If we accomplish one thing a semester, I'll be satisfied" stated Alessandrine.

Students Have to Act Responsibly

Possibly the most appealing thought of going away to college is the idea of independence from one's parents. The student will not have to face such questions as: "What time will you be home?", "Who are you going with?", "Where can I reach you?", etc. The only questions on the student's mind concern what to wear, who will be at the party and whether or not he can make it to his 8:30 class the next morning.

Fortunately or unfortunately, depending on one's particular point of view, the administrators at Villanova try to regulate things in a way that, ideally, is unobtrusive yet minimize the risk of injury to students. The reasons for this, of course, are not entirely altruistic; besides being interested in the welfare of students, the University is also seeking to protect itself from possible enormous lawsuits.

But it is also true that the University cannot possibly oversee every single thing done by its students every moment of the day, nor should it even attempt to. Since college students seem to ardently desire to be treated like adults, they must be willing to make the effort to act as adults should: responsibly. Responsibility means not only handing in term papers on time or attending classes regularly, but thinking through the possible ramifications of all actions.

Luckily, the accident on Wednesday was not as tragic as it could have been. However, students should see this as a stark example of how easily one can get carried away with having a "good time," whether painting a bridge or drinking and driving.

As one of the sorority members said, "We all just got together to have some fun . . . no one expected something like this to happen."

No one ever does.

Bonas, Frats Plan Greek Changes

By MARY GREGORY

Two local sororities and two local fraternities at Villanova are presently becoming affiliated with national Greek organizations.

What was once the local sorority of Delta Kappa Nu is now, as of this past spring, the national sorority of Kappa Kappa Gamma. Though still considered a colony, KKG will be fully chartered and officially accepted as a chapter by the Inter-Fraternity Council the weekend of November 13. Until then, the members of KKG are considered pledge sisters.

Kathy Henneberry, president of newly established KKG said, "Since we've decided to expand, the spirit of KKG has risen immensely. We were given much cooperation and support from Gary Bonas of Student Activities, Dr. Langran of the political science department, and other fraternities and sororities. Our status won't change because we're all ready well established on campus. We do, however, look forward to continuing and expanding our service and social activities."

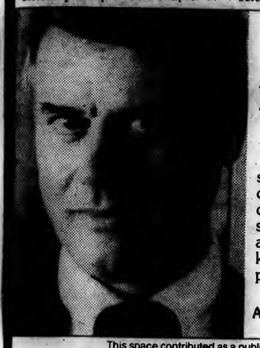
Tau Gamma Epsilon has also decided to become affiliated with a national sorority and will select between Kappa Alpha Theta and Alpha Chi Omega by the end of September.

Once a sorority or fraternity decides to make such a move it must present itself to an expansion committee who reviews its current status. After discussing the pros and cons of the group, the committee in return makes a formal presentation to the IFC, on whom the final decision rests. Two fraternities and two sororities are permitted to expand per semester at a university.

The IFC reviews certain standards of the group wishing to go national. These standards include the fraternity's or sorority's effectiveness: goals, benefits, strengths, success of colonization at other campuses, its pledge program, its financial stability, and its comparison in size to other Villanova national sororities or fraternities. Once this list of criteria is approved, the sorority or fraternity gains its charter allowing it to be a national chapter.

This summer, the fraternity Delta Pi Epsilon became affiliated with the prestigious national organization of Pi Kappa Alpha. In addition, the local groups of Zeta Roe and Alpha Nu Omega have merged and become affiliated with Sigma Nu also a large and prestigious national fraternity. Further, Appha Phi Delta has been officially granted a national charter. Though these groups are still considered colonies, they will be recognized as chapters in the spring.

Although the men to women ratio at V.U. is about one to one, there are only four sororities on campus in contrast to the thirteen fraternities. In fact, three national fraternities are interested in colonizing at Villanova, and TKE, the fraternity put on probation three years ago for hazing, wants to return by this spring or next fall. Local sorority Tau Kappa Delta wants to be recognized and several other national sororities would also like to become established at Villanova.



"NO MORE MR. NICE GUY."

dacy challenge and with Democratic Congressman Bob Edgar, also participated in the Young Democrats Convention in Allentown, Pa., this past summer.

"Our optimism paid off," said Pilny. "The Democrats began working well together. We have people working all the booths. We placed five of our people, out of 11, on the state committee."

According to Pilny, the Republican Party as a whole, and especially in Glenolden, "has grown lazy."

"They haven't gone out to the people," Pilny explained. "They wait for people to come to them and most do not. They sit in their offices. The politicians should be going out to the constituency."

Pilny's working hard for McCloskey in his borough. "Hopefully, he'll win all over," said Pilny. "If he wins the borough, we'll be pleased; if he wins the whole thing, we'll be ecstatic. Maybe if George wins the borough, the Democrats will spread over to other boroughs."

Pilny, who is not attending Villanova this fall due to student loan difficulties, hopes to return to Villanova in January and put his experience to work for him in the classroom.

"Sometimes I ask myself if this is all an ego trip," said Pilny. "It's self-gratifying and self-rewarding but it's working for the people."

Summer Intern

Working With A Muckraker

By ANNE N. SUYDAM

"How was your summer?"

"Great. I went to the shore and worked as a waitress. I got a great tan and partied a lot. How about yours?"

"I worked as an intern for Jack Anderson in Washington."

"Who is he?"

This was an example of the conversations I took part in upon returning to school. Jack Anderson is a syndicated columnist whose work is published nationally and internationally. He is known as a "muckraker," an exposer of governmental waste and corruption.

As an intern, one works on stories for Anderson's column. Sounds simple enough, until one picks up the phone and hears a ranting, tearful woman screaming how the U.S. government is slowly killing her with harmful drugs. Or a man says he has undebatable evidence as to the whereabouts of Jimmy Hoffa's body. These are "anyone" calls; people call from all over the country with "amazing tips," "unbelievable scoops" for Jack Anderson. There is an average of five "anyones" a day and they are the interns' responsibility.

Anderson's office is located in Washington so that reporters are sent to such places as the Capitol, the Justice Department, the Pentagon, or the Senate and Congressional offices. At first, these places and their employees are intimidating; after three months however, it becomes easy to interview a government official.

The most lasting impression of this particular internship is the people in the office. There are 17 associates (two of which are rewrite professionals, one who is the radio editor and another who is the television editor), five interns, a managing editor, a receptionist and Anderson's "right hand woman," his personal secretary. Interns work closely with the associates and the managing editor, all of whom have been in the news business for years and have "contacts" throughout the country. The ages of the staff range from 27 to 60; all are dedicated and hard working. The atmosphere of the office, however, is very relaxed; the beer comes out after 5 p.m. and a favorite spot in the late afternoons is the bar next door.

Jack Anderson himself is a devout Mormon. He is rather rotund, has gray hair and is seen walking around the office in slippers and a smoking jacket. He lectures across the country, travels abroad for stories, such as his recent visit with Begin and Arafat. In addition to his column, he and his staff produce radio and television programs and are producing "Jack Anderson: Confidential," a television news show in the "60-Minutes" type tradition, appearing this fall.

This past summer certainly was not filled with frolicking in the sea, soaking up rays or partying into the early morning. But, I would give up ten of those summers to do mine over again. It was a fantastic learning experience and was worth the time just to answer some of the crazy "anyone" calls. Washington is an exciting and fast-paced city with important events culminating daily. With this type of internship, one is in the middle of the most important city in the country.

Richard & Co.; Hair For 15 yrs.

By KATHI A. IANNACONE

From hair to toes, from nails to perms, from eyebrows to leg wax, Richard and Co. has put together a "ME-N-U (me and you) of services representing their working together with you toward a common end satisfaction.

Now, in their 15th year of dedication to the Villanova students and the Villanova community, Richard and Co. strives to continue their good rapport with the University. Located at 773 Lancaster Ave., amid the stream of stores at the foot of the campus, Richard A. Cascarino, owner and consultant of Richard and Co., explained that a great volume of his business comes from the university and fortunately from the graduates who continue to request his services.

Cascarino went on to express his disappointment in Villanova's decision to drop football. "We used to cut the whole team's hair on a regular basis. The secretary would call each week and make appointments and like clockwork these 200 pounders would stroll down. Coach Bedesem liked the guys to all look neat and clean," commented Cascarino. He continued, "I'm glad that some of the guys still come in here. Howie Long of Oakland comes in whenever he's in the area."

Because of the number of men that infiltrate the once "beauty" shop, Cascarino pointed out that the store has been redecorated now with many plants and jungle-printed wallpaper to make both men and women feel comfortable while in the shop.

One of the new decorating techniques that the shop uses draws attention to Villanova; displayed throughout the rooms are the photographic works of Phillip Verruchia, a former student. Cascarino spotted Verruchia's photos in a display at Chilton and requested that they be displayed in his shop at the completion of that exhibit. David Horn, manager of Richard and Co., noted that although the pictures are on consignment, they are there to present a bit of artistic comment to the shop. One of the more unusual shots of Verruchia is that of a man behind a camera. But more unusual is that it is the first thing seen while inside the ladies room.

About the negative aspects of the Villanova students? Cascarino found none. "We've rarely had any trouble with the students. There have never been any rowdies in the shop," he stated. However, Cascarino mentioned that the students do tend to make appointments and not show or show up late.

Summer Students

Study 'N' Explore

By STEVEN HELMETAG

If you thought your summer wasn't as exciting as you would have liked it to be and you are already making plans to have a better time next year, here is an idea for you.

Close to 30 Villanova students spent the month of August studying in Spain. The 11-year-old program, "Espanol en Espana," is run each year by Villanova professor and Spanish native the Rev. Antonio Romano, O.S.A.

The program consisted of three weeks of intense classes four hours each day, six days a week, and one week of travel. The classes were held on the campus of the University of Madrid where the students lived along with native Spaniards and other Spanish speaking students.

However, the trip was not all work. All the students were certainly well exposed to the nightlife of the Spanish capital, a city which only sleeps during the afternoon siesta hours. In fact, for some, a more valuable education was gained by going out than attending classes. By going into the city, the Americans were forced to use the Spanish language, as most Spaniards speak only their native tongue.

The fourth and final week of the trip was spent in the province of Andalucia, in the south of Spain. The famous cities of Cordoba, Seville and Granada were visited along with the resort town of Benalmadena Costa (near Malaga), located on the Mediterrean Sea. Also seen during the course of the trip were the cities of Segovia and Toledo.

One of the most enjoyable things about Spain was the friendships that developed during the month. The students became friendly with the Spanish speaking students and the other American students. One of the biggest common elements among all of the students was the love for English language rock music. Included in Spain's top twenty listing of best selling albums were releses by Alan Parsons, The Rolling Stones, Orchestral Manoeuvres, Asia and Paul McCartney.

Spain also has its own unique style of popular music. The hottest Spanish bands include Mecano, Miguel Rios, Alaska y Los Pegamoides and the overwhelming favorite Trio, whose minimalistic "Da, Da, Da" was the most memorable among the Villanova group.

By taking the trip to Spain, all involved learned far more about the country and its culture in one month than could be learned in a typical classroom setting in one year. It became imperative for the students to use the language and forced them to improve their speaking skills.

Fifteen years ago when Cascarino established his place in Villanova, he realized that there were "a lot of people up the street who needed his services," and that's when the promotion began. "We still promote" Cascarino declared "when we had the football players coming in we used to give them big helium balloons as they left the shop. They got a kick out of it." The newest campaign is "I love Richard and Co." buttons which will come out in the next weeks. "The whole idea is a source of fun for us," he mentioned.

All in all, Cascarino mentioned "We have a very good relationship with Villanova. The students break up the routine, raise a little hell, talk to us and in general just have a nice light attitude."

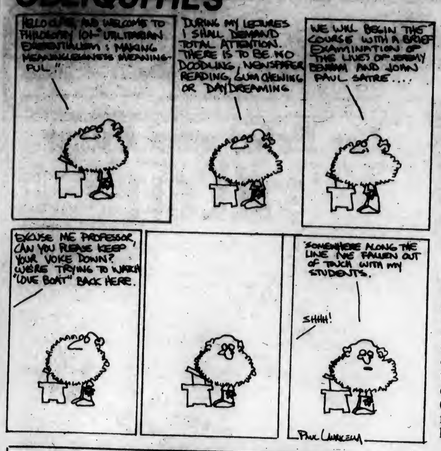
OBLIQUITIES



Spot Them Miles Away

By JANE ASHTON

There are two reasons for writing this article. One is an altruistic concern for the freshmen of this campus. The other is a basically vindictive need for revenge (now that I've joined the ranks of upper-classmen). It should interest our rookies that "frosh-spotting" is a national pastime in college (second only to soap operas).

I don't mean to sound unnecessarily intimidating, but the next time you freshmen work up the guts to walk past the crowds outside Connelly, don't assume everyone is staring at you because an enormous growth must be coming out your ear. It is far more subtle than that. Therefore, in the interest of educating our young pups (and providing a handy checklist for the upperclassmen), the following is a summary of "dead-giveaways" in the art of "frosh-spotting."

(1) Freshmen look lost. This is a simple but sad fact of nature. Freshmen look lost because, nine times out of ten, they are. And they make their situation worse by asking directions from fellow students. Not that upperclassmen mind giving directions, but freshmen really aren't being sports by giving up this early in the game.

Keep in mind that the professors of freshmen expect 75 percent of their class to be dispersed to the far corners of the universe for the first two weeks. Not that they'll be any more understanding at grade time, but they do expect a great deal of tardiness.

As for the business of looking lost, it's a dangerous trait to exhibit. The lost look is never seen on an upperclassman. A sophomore might frequently look dazed, but that's because he is hung over from a Robert Hazard and the Heroes concert and somehow passed a weighted economics exam that morning.

A junior might take on a glazed appearance but that's only because she has pulled four all-nighters in a row and is personally keeping Maxwell House in business. A senior never looks dazed, glazed or vaguely out of control. Thus the frosh who can look like he's got some idea of where he's going (and what he's doing) is miles ahead of his classmates.

(2) Freshmen live in clusters. Another well-known fact of nature: the less "experienced" of the species tend to group together for protection, survival and otherwise (namely, going to the bathroom). It is indeed a phenomenon that a creature (which just three months earlier could part a hallway of high schoolers like the Red Sea) can not set foot in the cafeteria unless surrounded by a small nation. Clusters come in all sizes (they run from large to humungous).

College freshmen also have a tremendous ability to find soulmates anywhere. In fact, one young fellow was recently spotted talking earnestly to the North wall of John Barry Hall — and he later took it to lunch. Towards the end of the year, the clusters begin to thin out when most of the group members realize they've got nothing in common with each other (except possibly a deep and abiding love for Bruce Springsteen — and you certainly cannot build much of a relationship on that).

(3) Freshmen look like they got dressed in a closet. This statement isn't fair to all freshmen, because some girls obviously spend three hours in front of a mirror before leaving their dorms. However most freshmen seem to be soldered to their jeans. And on the first day of Orientation they all wear Izods — in fact there are more alligators on campus that day than in the entire state of Florida. There are a number of reasons for the neurotic fixation with jeans. Many students, thanks to 12 or so years of Catholic schooling, are allergic to white tailored blouses, plaid jumpers, grey trousers and green (blue, grey) ties.

Some students were dressed by their mothers, and are undergoing a traumatic period in their life known only as "Getting-to-Recognize-Your-Wardrobe". But just like clusters, this phase will pass, and Freddie Freshman will learn that there is life after six cups of detergent — in one load — destroys all his Led Zeppelin t-shirts.

This will conclude my dissertation as I do not want to disclose too many secrets. That would be giving up in the game. I hope I have illuminated the more literate members of our class of '86 as to the subtleties of "frosh-spotting". And if it disturbs you to know you're being watched — just wait. The class of '87 isn't too far down the road.

Summer Flicks Fail to Click

By DEAN C. BALSAMINI

Summer is finally over and that means the real movie season is about to begin. It is time for everyone to drop from his vocabulary such phrases as "E.T. phone home" and "Go for it."

More often than not the summer season offers fads, special effects and in general, mindless movies. If one is to ask why most of these films lack substance, the usual response is "Well it's just a summer film."

Why are summer films labeled as such and for whom are they made? In general, during the summer people just want to relax and take it easy. Also, with the warmer weather and kids off from school, many summer films are geared toward the younger age bracket. Another factor is that, due to the many available outdoor activities, the movie studios feel that gimmicks are needed to lure people to the theatres.

As far as money is concerned, the summertime is crucial to many movie studios. This is the time when they expect to "rake in the bucks" via the "blockbuster" — such as Star Wars or in last year's case, Raiders of the Lost Ark.

In fact the summertime often decides whether a studio will finish in the black or red for the year. Last year Arthur, an unexpected big hit, helped give a struggling Orion Pictures a shot in the arm.

Mel Gibson as Max in "The Road Warrior".

One of the better films of the summer, and also its biggest moneymaker, was E.T. — The Extra Terrestrial. Steven Spielberg's fantasy film is on its way toward becoming the largest money-grossing film ever. A wonderful film in the tradition of Walt Disney, E.T. is a combination of a boy and his dog and The Wizard of Oz. With the success of this film two things are for certain: one, Spielberg is the movie industry's best storyteller and handler of child factors; two, Columbia Pictures (which originally turned down E.T.) is kicking itself while Universal Pictures is laughing all the way to the bank. Of course one can expect a sequel. Although it may have seemed like it, E.T. was not the only movie in the theaters this summer. Here is a look at some of the other films that either graced or disgraced the screen.

Rocky III

Sylvester Stallone returns in what has become a trite formulated bore. Make the audience feel sorry for Rocky and then they will cheer in the end. Clubber Lang, "the bad guy" portrayed by Mr. T, is the only reason to see this film. Generic music is supplied by Survivor and their hit "Eye of the Tiger." The only thing left for Rocky Balboa before his eventual canonization is now being filmed. This critic does not want to give the plot away, so the only hint you will get is the film's title: Rocky Meets Bullwinkle.

The Bladerunner

This futuristic look at life in L.A. (since when) is quite disappointing. With special effects galore, the Bladerunner, played by Harrison Ford, hunts "evil replicants" who try to find their purpose in life. Meanwhile, the audience seeks to find the purpose of this movie. Quite pretentious. Narration of the film by Ford is a cheap rip-off of Raiders Of The Lost Ark. As long as he was ripping off Raiders, he should have kept the floppy hat.

The World According to Garp

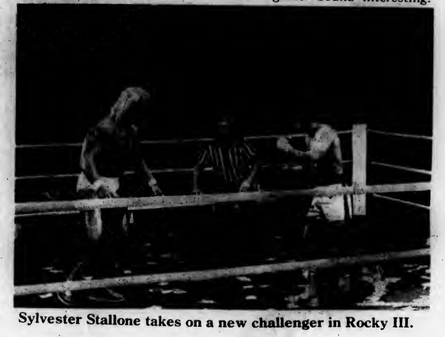
Robin Williams is very good as T.S. Garp, in this adaptation of John Irving's book. Though sketchy at times, the movie is on the whole faithful to the book. But those who have not read the book may have problems following along with the film. Glenn Close also stars.

The Road Warrior

Mel Gibson stars in what is a sequel to the cult film Mad Max. Total anarchy with breathtaking stunts and non-stop action highlight this fast-paced film depicting a post-holocaust world.

Tron

Dehumanization at its best. If you like the band Devo, then this film is definitely for you. The plot (if one could call it that) centers around a battle for power inside a video game. Sound interesting?



Sylvester Stallone takes on a new challenger in Rocky III.

Dead Men Don't Wear Plaid

Steve Martin stars in this spoof of old detective films. Basically a one-joke movie, but still enjoyable. Through the magic of cinema Martin acts alongside such greats as Bette Davis and Humphrey Bogart. Oh, by the way, Rachel Ward looks beautiful.

Poltergeist

Steven Spielberg offers us a horror film in the true sense of the word: Ghosts invade suburbia. Excellent acting by Craig Nelson and JoBeth Williams. The only fault lies in the movie's ending — it actually ends twice.

You're right; it isn't. This mess stars Jeff Bridges. I rest my case.

An Officer and A Gentleman

Richard Gere and Debra Winger star in this boy meets girl throwback to the '40s and '50s. Gere's Zack Mayo is quite believable and it is by far his best performance on the screen. Debra Winger fulfills the promise she displayed in the Urban Cowboy. Lou Gossett should win an Academy Award for his portrayal of the drill sergeant who puts Gere through hell. Corny and predictable, but a definite must-see.

The Go-Go's Beat Goes Off

By GREG ANTON

The Go-Go's appear on the cover of their latest album, Vacation, looking like five Esther Williams clones who have just landed at Cypress Gardens. And they recently graced the cover of Rolling Stone donned only in their bras and panties. Traditionally such exposure would not help promote five girls as a serious rock and roll band. But, the Go-Go's are breaking many traditions.

The Go-Go's refuse to subjugate their sexuality and femininity to their music. They are not out to prove they are one of the guys. Their femininity is a key part of the novel image; and the Go-Go's are the first to admit it. Their upbeat, bouncy, pop music is such a refreshing change from the heavy metal, masochistic sound popularized by females such as Joan Jett, Wendy O. Williams, and [illegible] shown that females do not have to wield sledgehammers, either literally or stylistically, to produce rock and roll music. Therein lies their success.

Vacation, the follow-up LP to the extremely popular debut album, The Beauty and the Beat, lacks some of the qualities which carried the first album. The undeniable pulsating rhythms are gone. The beat is still there with its riveting bass lines and snazzy drumming but it never sparks to life. Vacation, the title track, opens the album with an unmistakably Go-Go sound. It is a light, catchy tune with their trademark groovy beat. And Belinda Carlisle's voice is as outrageous as ever. It appears that Vacation (the LP) will take up where The Beauty and the Beat left off.

However, after the opening tune, the album never clicks and merely becomes a melange of undirected talents. The band's ability to pen catchy tunes has stagnated. The tracks, in all their mediocrity, all sound too much alike. Even Carlisle's vocals seem to be thwarted on most. Vacation becomes predictable and unexciting. We Don't Get Along and This Old Feeling are the only tunes which transcend the complacency. Sad to say that it takes a remake (Cool Jerk) to give side two a temporary lift.

Time will tell if the Go-Go's turn out to be a first-rate rock and roll band. They must regroup and grow into a tighter, more controlled group. Additionally, their future success lies heavily in their songwriting abilities. But what is sure for now is that they still lay claim to an innovative sound, dis-

Horror Film Explodes On Screen

By JOHN F. LYNCH

It was a muggy August night, Friday the thirteenth to be exact, in a small Connecticut town, when this writer entered a theatre to witness the third installment to the terror filled life of Jason. The predictable film. Miner uses the same "skits" which made us shriek in the first two films. The plot centers around our friend Jason, a troubled young man who has been killed at least ten times by now. Well, Jason enjoys killing people himself, and in part 3 of his "biography," his actions are so predictable the audience was laughing more than screaming. Jason is played by Richard Brooker.

'What makes 'Friday the 13th, Part 3' bearable is the astonishing use of the three-dimensional film process.'

film, as you may (or may not) know, is Friday the 13th, Part 3.

As this reviewer sat in the packed theatre with special glasses on and with an Orson Welles' portion of popcorn, the film began. The opening credits come from out of nowhere and are almost tattooed on one's face. It was the scariest part of the film.

Directed by Steve Miner, Friday the 13th, Part 3 is a very

What makes Friday the 13th, Part 3 a bearable film to sit through is the astonishing use of the three-dimensional film process. Gerald Feil, director of photography, brings the action of the film from the screen into the theatre itself. When one of the unfortunate youths had his head pressed together by the powerful Jason, his eyeball appeared to explode into the audience. There is no doubt that the enjoyment one gets from seeing a film of this nature is further enhanced by the three-dimensional film process.

Friday the 13th, Part 3 is a film which fills one's need to see blood and death in a style which does not leave one terrified. Films like The Exorcist or The Changelling, makes one wonder if people like that are really out there in society. One can be pretty sure that a "man" like Jason does not exist. The fact that Jason really does not exist makes the film more enjoyable for those who are easily frightened.

Friday the 13th, Part 3 is worth the hour and a half of time and almost worth the $4 fee. Hopefully though, director Miner will dream up some new ways for Jason to fulfill his killing habit before Friday the 13th, Part 4, if there is going to be one.

Porky's

Sophomoric trash about a bunch of young guys looking for sex. The film's advertisements state that "We can't show you what goes on at Porky's" (a redneck bar). Don't worry, because there is absolutely nothing going on of interest at Porky's.

X Puts Out An Excellent Album

By PAUL DURAND

Under the Big Black Sun is a fantastic album. It is X's third LP, the first on a major label (Elektra), and not their only great one. Their second, Wild Gift, won a tremendous amount of praise from critics and also brought them a sizable following. And the new album will broaden their outreach still, although it is not a sellout. All of their output has been straightforward "have fun and thrash" music.

X is one of a small number of real rock and roll outfits in America. Real rock has always come from the underground so maybe that's why Mr. Villanova in room 312 never heard of X, not to mention the Dead Kennedys. Anyway, this album shines with personality, something that will not be found on an REO LP. The compositions of John Doe (bass) and Exene Cervenka (vocals) are clever, witty and exciting. And the guitar of Billy Zoom is never boring.

The songs are longer, of a more conventional length, than on previous X albums, and not as fast; however, nearly all the power of Wild Gift is still visible. The Hungry Wolf is an excellent pronouncement of dedication to wife and purpose. It is great to hear Doe howl "I roam." Motel Room In My Bed, a great title in itself, features the great exchange "I like coffee/ and I like tea/ I like a pretty boy/ and he likes me." Doe and Cervenka have two of the most interesting voices in today's rock.

Come Back to Me is a saxophone ballad which will please even the most anti-hardcores. Hardcores dream of 100 chords a minute and X is hardcore pleasers in most cases. It is great to hear Cervenka whine. Blue Spark is another standout cut with powerful, heavy shock arrangements to match the title. And Dancin' With Tears In My Eyes jumps off the vinyl and forces the listener to dream of his favorite heartthrob. It is the only song not penned by X on the album. Under the Big Black Sun is a great album which was produced by Ray Manzarek. Remember X backwards is still X.

Fall Sports Preview..

Harriers Optimistic Over Season

Jack Pyrah and Bob Shoudt, coaches for the men's and women's cross country teams, respectively, find themselves in similar positions this fall. Both have lost top runners due to graduation, both will rely heavily on freshman recruits and both are guardedly optimistic for seasonal success.

Under Pyrah, the men's squad has sent at least one of its runners to the NCAA for the past 23 years. This year should be no different. "We should have a pretty solid team," says Pyrah, "despite the fact that we lost three of our top seven runners." The three harriers, Ross Donoghue, John Hunter and Kevin Dillon, graduated last spring.

Suffice it to say that the Cats will be hard pressed to replace the aforementioned trio. Figuring prominently, however, in Pyrah's plans are juniors Marcus O'Sullivan and Brian O'Keeffe.

"Last year," says Pyrah, "Donoghue and Hunter usually finished near the top in races. This year," adds, "we hope that Marcus and Brian will help fill the bill." Also playing leading roles are Ken Lucks, Mike England, Dermot Anderson and Pete Carroll. Lucks is coming off an outstanding summer of competition, having recorded a personal best time in the 1500-meters in his native Canada.

England is making the leap from track to cross country and, says Pyrah, "has the potential to be a great cross country runner." Anderson and Carroll will more than do their share to carry on the winning tradition.

A pleasant surprise for Pyrah has been the development of a talented freshman class. Leading the way are Tony O'Reilly, John Keyworth and J.J. Clark. Says Pyrah: "How well they respond to the 10,000-meters will be very important to us."

Shoudt, mentor of the women's team and Pyrah's office mate, comes off an enormously successful season which saw his team win the eastern regional and finish tenth nationally in AIAW Division II.

This year though, the bell tolls a different tune. Suzanne Shea, Carol Gilsinger and Amelia Kane all graduated, and, in addition, with the demise of the AIAW, the Cats find themselves in NCAA Division I.

"We'll have a lot tougher competition," says Shoudt, "so we'll really have to work hard to accomplish something." Aiding Shoudt's cause are returners Mary Ellen McGowan, Eva Marie Berardi and Bev Reilly, team captain.

Coach Bob Shoudt

An added bonus for Shoudt is his crop of recruits. Bolstering Nova this fall will be Jan Yerkes, Vicki Brown, Joanne Kehs and Nancy Flemming.

In the recently held Lebanon Valley Invitational, Brown finished fifth overall and Flemming copped 15th.

One event Shoudt is looking foward to is the Big East Championships. "It's our first year in the Big East," he says, "so we'd really like to do something big."

"Overall," he adds, "I'm optimistic for a successful season."

Perhaps Coach Pyrah speaks best for both teams in saying, "We won't set the world on fire, but we will be respectable."

Tennis Tops Franklin & Marshall

The Villanova women's varsity tennis squad opened their 1982 season with a victory over Franklin & Marshall. This early victory marks success in what coach Bob Langran hopes will be a great season.

Last year's team went 13-5 and this year there are two newcomers to Villanova who took over the top spots, probably ensuring the team of similar success in 1982. A junior transfer from Penn State, Zenia Matkiwsky, opened the season in the number one singles spot and teamed up with her freshman sister, Luba, on the first doubles team. Luba won her match in the number two singles spot.

The addition of the Matkiwsky sisters only strengthens a team that already is deep with experienced talent. Lat year's starters have moved down several notches in the line-up for now, but this only strengthens the depth through the nine match-ups. Senior Carol Harrison plays now at number three singles, followed by Trish Stairiker at the fourth position. Dawn Fisher, a senior, plays the fifth singles spot with junior Cynthia Burke rounding out the singles competition. In the third doubles match-up Sue Golden joins Stairiker.

Coach Langran believes this 1982 team to be, "Awfully strong, the strongest team ever in the 15 years of the program. He is gearing his team up for the PAIAW tournament which Villanova will be hosting in October for the fourth year. The Villanova netters captured the championship of last year's tournament. Following that tournament will be the women's debut in the Big East Tournament. This is the first year that the Big East Conference has opened any of its tournaments to women's sports. St. John's plays host to the men's and women's tournament in the Catskills and Coach Langran looks forward to, "Some very good tennis, we play some of the Big East teams earlier in the season so we'll have a good idea going into the tournament how we will do."

The women have a 20-match schedule with only one change from last year. Lehigh has been added in place of Lafayette.

Both the men's and women's tennis teams are coached by Langran, a professor in the Political Science Department. The women play the majority of their schedule in the fall and play a few tournaments in the spring, while the men play in tournaments in the fall and keep the spring for their varsity match-ups.

High Hopes for Spikers

Entering his third year at the helm of Villanova's volleyball program, Bob Covell is looking forward to coaching a talented group which he feels has the potential to improve upon last year's solid 21-11-1 record. "This is a team sport where everybody gets involved and we've got a very well-balanced team," he said during a brief respite from his busy schedule earlier this week.

Last year the Wildcats served and spiked their way into the AIAW play-offs, where they finished seventh in the Eastern Region. This season the NCAA has taken over the reins of women's sports as well as men's, so the volleyball team will have a new goal to shoot for. As is the case with basketball, the winner of the Big East tournament will be extended an automatic invitation to the NCAA tournament. The Cats only test against Big East opponents prior to the season ending tournament in November will come during a round-robin event with Pittsburgh, Georgetown, and Seton Hall on October 24. Other serious tests will be put to the Wildcats when they take the court in the Temple tournament on Sept. 24 and 25. Covell feels that the Temple event will be crucial to his squad.

Booters Open in Two Weeks

For one team, soccer season doesn't start for nearly two weeks. The Villanova women's soccer team takes on Swarthmore in their season opener September 28. Between now and then Coach Lee Stevens is looking for replacements.

Last years leading scorer, Nina Wieczorek has graduated, leaving a large gap in the offense. Stevens is looking toward frosh Cathy Forte as a possible key scorer.

At the center halfback position Stevens expects junior Annie Kempf to step in where Karen Clabbers left of last fall.

However, the defense is back in force. The four fullbacks return and Sue Onembo comes back to tend the goal. Last season, Onembo started 14 to 15 games and totaled 6 shut-outs.

Last fall the team finished with an 11-3-1 record that Stevens hopes to come close to this season. The schedule has been stiffened with the addition of George Washington and Penn State. The wildcats will also play Princeton, the number one women's soccer team in the area.

With five freshman in the starting line up and a tougher schedule in 1982, Stevens remarked, "I think we'll have a pretty successful season but time will tell."

The soccer team tied their first home match game with a 3-3 stalemate against Baltimore.

Determination ...

Women Look to first NCAA Season

If the 1982 Villanova field hockey team picks up on the winning attitude of its new coaching staff, things could go quite well for the Mainliners this season. Both Head Coach Diane Moyer and Assistant Coach Karen Marley have performed for national championship teams; Moyer at La Salle and Marley at West Chester State. Under the guidance of this duo the Cats hope to clinch a berth in the NCAA division II play-offs while improving upon last year's 3-9-3 mark.

One of the major obstacles facing this young Villanova team is a lack of experience. Aside from Kathy Byrnes, Beth Moyer and Regina Graham, the three senior tri-captains, only one other senior may be found on the roster. "The nucleus of our team is sophomores," commented Marley, who is also expecting big things from freshmen recruits Cheryl Snyder and Sue Farne.

The Cats have a tough road ahead of themselves this season with a schedule that will force the younger players to mature early. Among the stiffer tests will be the Ithaca Tournament (which features Syracuse, La Salle, and Ithaca), Glassboro, La Salle and Rutgers.

The key for this young team, according to Marley, is to "play a controlled game and set our own tempo." If all goes well for the young squad, perhaps Moyer and Marley will find themselves in a quest for another national championship, but this time from the other side of the white lines.

Soccer Team Takes on the Big East

The Phildelphia Soccer Seven League is a tough league. And the same goes for the newly formed Big East Soccer Conference.

That is really tough for Villanova's mens varsity soccer team, for although the Wildcats will be much improved over last season, they will find it more difficult to capture a title in either of the two leagues of which they are members.

For many years, the Soccer Seven has been recognized as one of the best leagues in the United States. Its most prominent member team is Philadelphia Textile, the national powerhouse which finished among the top five in the country a year ago.

Howard Graff, Head Coach of the Villanova team, stated flatly this past week, "We're in the Big Seven, which is no pushover." Last year, the Wildcats failed to win a match against Soccer Seven foes. This year the competition won't get any easier. Textile, for instance, continues to get some of the best recruits in the nation.

Then on to the Big East. For the first time, the conference will be staging a post-season tournament. The 1982 edition will be held November 13-14 at the University of Connecticut. Incidentally, the soccer team at Connecticut was number one in the country last season. What was surprising about the Huskies top finish was that they did it with homegrown talent. Most top 10 teams import their players from Europe, Africa and South America.

There certainly is a possibility that Villanova will be facing UConn after the regular season. Graff, though, takes it all in stride. "I think we have a chance, it looks promising if we have a good year." "We have certain advantages. We have a mature team," Graff continued.

Three players in particular allow the coach to make such a claim. First, there's Brian Barr, who was the team's top scorer last season (12 goals, 5 assists, 29 points). "He's almost a sure Big Seven All-Star," Graff explained.

Teaming up with Barr will be Michael Layfield, another top point producer. Noted Graff, "It will be very competitive between the two."

At the center halfback position is John Waraksa, a potential All-American in Graff's eyes.

Rob Porter, last year's only starting freshman and player with the most time on the field, returns as sweeper, and a newcomer, Steve Maillard should bolster the team's scoring production, which has been low in the past.

Unfortunately, Pete Jirak, who minded nine games behind the nets a season ago, has left the team. Two freshmen have stepped in to fill the void.

"Because of the influx of new players, we've been forced to make changes in our game," Graff observed.

These changes are actually for the better, according to the coach. "We are now very strong on defense, and the midfield is one of the best I've seen."

All of which would make any coach happy . . . unless he had to compete in both the Soccer Seven and Big East leagues.

Water Polo Aims for Army

High hopes abound for a successful water polo campaign, or at least this is the opinion of Coach Al Fazio. And all things considered, Fazio's enthusiasm is entirely justified.

the Cats lost only two lettermen from last year's squad, and with some hard work and a little luck, they could walk (or rather swim) away with the conference title.

"We have our best team in four years," says Fazio, "and I definitely think we have a shot at winning our conference. But," he adds, "we'd have to play perfectly to do so."

In the way of Fazio's hopes is a very demanding schedule. With the likes of teams such as perennial powers Fordham, Brown and Army, there is very little breathing room. His team, however, is not lacking in talent.

Heading the list of returners are senior co-captains George Anderson and Bill Ennis. Outstanding defenseman Mike Duch returns to anchor the back line, and goalie Mike Varnum is back to tend the nets.

Fazio is basically realistic about his team's chances, noting that "it will be difficult for us to even compete with Fordham or Brown." Yet, within the division, only Army blocks a future championship if the Cats play to their potential.

Saint Mary's Reports Thefts

By JOHN JACKSON and RICH HENNION

Four residents of St. Mary's Dormitory, including two resident assistants, have reported thefts that have occurred in their dorms within the past two weeks.

All of the students involved said that they had their doors locked at the time of the thefts. In the reported thefts, there was no evidence of a forced entry. St. Mary's residents are claiming that there are many master keys to the dorm rooms circulating.

Tom Flaherty, an R.A., reported that he had approximately $60 worth of goods stolen from his room between Aug. 27 and Sept. 4. At the time of this theft, the only students who had access to the dorm were R.A.'s and band residents.

Dave Iorio, a junior biology major, reported that he had $150 stolen from his room on Sept. 8. Brian Callaghan, a senior finance major, said that he had $40 stolen from his room. Bob Courey, another R.A., had a watch and wallet stolen.

Unlike the other resident hall keys, St. Mary's keys are not inscribed with the warning, "Unlawful to duplicate." This makes it easy for anybody to have any St. Mary's key copied.

When asked if he knew of any master keys belonging to unauthorized persons, John Morrissey, head resident of St. Mary's replied, "I've heard all of those rumors too . . . (but) I really have no idea how people are getting into those rooms, whether these doors can be carded, or whether there is a master key or keys."

Flaherty, however, stated that, "It (his door) was definitely locked . . . We feel that there are probably master keys floating around from prior years. Somewhere along the line somebody must have gotten sloppy with a master key."

Jim Carrazza, a junior economics major, is certain that there are master keys available. He claims that last year he reported to head resident Kevin Cooke, that, "There are plenty of master keys floating around and they should do something about it or have the locks changed." His roomate Dave Iorio then added, "They said that it would be too much of a big project and that would cost too much money."

When asked about the possibility of unauthorized persons having master keys, the Rev. John Stack, O.S.A. dean of students, stated, "There has been speculation about master keys . . . but we have to find out for sure; sometimes people swear that their doors are locked, but they are really not. We really don't know. Right now, there is only speculation."

Chris Janosik, director of resident life, said that he is aware that the St. Mary dorm keys do not contain a warning not to duplicate, but he feels that this does not matter. He said, "The Main Line key shops and hardware stores are not bound by law not to duplicate the keys. It can happen." Janosik added that, "Locks are not changed on a rotational basis. If a student keeps a key, the locks are changed for that room."

At least one student has bought a lock for his room to insure security. However, Stack warns that putting extra locks on doors is against school policy because University officials could then be prevented from entering a room in the event of an emergency. Stack added, "It is our responsibility to make sure that the building is secure. Maintenance does a good job If somebody loses their key, then the locks are changed." Stack also said that the locks would be changed if they do find that there are master keys circulating.

When asked what residents should do to keep there valuables safe, Janosik said that students should keep valuables out of plain sight. "We encourage students to notify security if thefts occur."

Captain Joeseph Cunane, head of security, said that he was unaware of any of the thefts in St. Mary's."

Capital Projects Begun; Completion Due May '83

By JIM DeLORENZO

Several capital projects and renovations planned and approved by the Board of Trustees were completed this past summer, according to Rev. Patrick Rice, O.S.A., vice president for administration.

"These things have been planned for years," said Rice, "and this summer it all came together." All campus renovations are expected to be completed by May 1983.

The College of Commerce and Finance has added a new library, new offices, new classroom furnishings and an enlarged computer center to Bartley Hall. "This most important work was prompted by a desire for academic improvements," said Rice.

The new library, located on the basement level of Bartley Hall, seats 80 students, with completely new furnishings and central air conditioning. "It's easier for security now that it's downstairs," commented Clay. "Now we can keep it open in the evenings as well, for our students and the University College."

The new computer facility is also located on the basement level. "It's also an up-to-date library," said Clay. "Both provide better access to the services and periodicals used in the classroom setting."

The third-floor area, formerly occupied by the library, has been converted into office space. "The new offices have space for 70 faculty members. Half of them are single offices, the other half are double offices," Clay explained. Added Rice, "The additional office space in Bartley was badly needed.

Rev. Patrick Rice, O.S.A. Charles Guida Photo

"Operations like this which affect academics are tied up by the summer session, because of the small time between that and the fall session," explained Rice, "but a lot has happened to improve the campus' physical plant.

"The Lancaster Avenue fence replacement is as much a safety measure as it is a beautification," Rice commented. "Radnor Township has been concerned about people who do not cross at the traffic lights. This fence is to protect them. I was condemned once for putting up barbed wire, but it was to deter people from running across the highway and getting killed."

The University is "gradually improving all lighting on campus," Rice said, "although it is very expensive, and we do it a little at a time."

Other changes include a complete renovation of the John Barry Hall Rifle Range, "which," explained Rice, "we haven't been able to use for the last four years," and the gradual replacement of

Bartley Hall Renovated

By LEONARD J. La BARTH

Costing "substantially more" than originally expected, the capital improvements and renovations planned for Bartley Hall are almost completed, according to Dean of Commerce and Finance Alvin Clay.

The necessary improvements needed to upgrade the facility to meet the Master's of Business Administration (M.B.A.) requirements and to improve the business program's overall facilities, was approved by the University Board of Trustees Dec. 19, 1981.

"We're just about all done," said Clay. "It will take us close to three years to completely finish but it's minor items that need to be taken care of, like installing new fixtures in all the classrooms and painting and replacing the furniture."

According to Clay, Bartley is the most utilized building on campus and therefore deserves the most attention when it comes to capital improvements.

"The renovations are not just for the M.B.A.," emphasized Clay. "The whole business school uses the classrooms, most of the University College classes are held there and a lot of English and social science classes meet here."

Included in the renovations was the transferring and upgrading of the library to the basement in a space previously used for lockers.

"The library really serves the purpose of the business needs," said Clay. "It's 30 percent bigger than the old library. With student help, in addition to the regular librarian, we're going to keep it open until 11 p.m. The students can come here if they have an hour break between classes and do a

Investigation Closed

By LEONARD J. La BARTH

An investigation into the Sept. 15 accident involving two women pledges of Delta Delta Delta (Tri-Delta) national sorority has been completed by Assistant Director of Student Activities Gary Bonas.

The two students, Michelle Avallone and Gail Feldner, suffered serious injuries when they were struck by a P&W trolley as they were painting the Ithan Avenue bridge as part of a sorority pledge activity. Avallone suffered a fractured lumbar and Feldner a fractured pelvis.

According to Bonas' report, approximately 25 to 30 women who are members or pledges of the sorority were participating in a traditional painting party at the bridge. The report emphasized that the women had volunteered to climb to the top of the bridge, and were not ordered to do so.

The report reads: "Several women had just started to paint the top portion of the bridge when they noticed that a trolley was approaching. Of the five women who were on the bridge, two climbed to safety on the passenger loading platform. The remaining three decided to stand between the bridge walls and the tracks thinking that there would be sufficient room for the train to pass safely without striking them.

Michelle Avallone.

"As the train passed, it apparently sideswiped two of the three women, Gail Feldner and Michelle Avallone (both of whom are pledges of Tri-Delta)."

The report emphasized that although the project was primarily a "pledge project" it was one that the women requested themselves and not required of them by either the pledge program or the sorority sisters. "No one was required to attend or participate," the report reads. "Neither was anyone forced or required to climb to the top portion of the bridge. These women did so at their own choice."

A second point determined by Bonas was that the incident did not constitute "hazing." "The women were not required to participate nor was the initial idea for the project originated by the sisters or pledge trainer. Such bridge painting is a "traditional" activity of many student organizations at Villanova — not just Greek organizations.

Bonas' report also commends the leadership of the sorority for reacting in an appropriate fashion after the accident occurred. "They notified the proper authorities in a timely fashion," the report reads. "They have continued to cooperate with the investigation. They are sensitive to the needs of the injured women, their families, and the potential liabilities of all involved parties. They have agreed to provide no information to anyone except through the Dean of Students Office."

According to Dean of Students John Stack, the accident could have happened to any group. "It was unfortunate that it was a sorority because some people just wait for a sorority or fraternity to be involved in something like this so they can make a big deal about it."

Gail Feldner

"We wouldn't even want to think of sanctions against the sorority unless they were doing something they weren't supposed to do or if it was a compulsory activity."

Bonas' report also emphasized that no alcoholic beverages were present at the accident site. "They were engaged in singing and painting the railroad bridge with their sorority letters."

Assisting Bonas in writing the report was DDD President Christine Dougherty, Pledge Trainer Cathy Clark and approximately ten of the women who were present and participating in the bridge painting party.

Stack also expressed concern about general student safety, saying that while the University has taken positive action to make things safer for students, it is impossible to protect them from all things. "We can't always act as their parents," he said.

Student Hit By Car On Rt. 30

By LEONARD J. La BARTH and TIM HANLON

A Villanova student was struck by a car and seriously injured Sept. 16 while attempting to cross Lancaster Avenue between the parking lot and Galberry Hall.

Daniel Purschke, 18, a freshman from Floral Park, New York, was taken to Bryn Mawr Hospital at approximately 4:30 p.m., where he was later reported to be in stable condition. According to an attending nurse, Purschke suffered a compound fracture of the left leg, lacerations of the left arm, assorted bruises and scrapes and required several stitches in his forehead.

The driver of the vehicle was Corinne Cariello, 21, of Locust Valley, N.Y., also a Villanova student. Purschke was charged with jaywalking and will be fined $35 for not crossing at the pedestrian intersection. He is expected to be released from the hospital today.

According to Officer Robert H. Adams of the Radnor Police Traffic Unit, the accident was entirely Purschke's fault.

The accident report filed by Adams said, "The pedestrian was jaywalking across Lancaster Avenue when he turned to look at a girl on the rugby field. He kept coming on. The driver, originally in the eastbound lane of traffic, swerved into an oncoming lane of traffic to avoid the pedestrian. The pedestrian, running to avoid the car, ran into the right fender, was picked up on the hood, carried ten feet and was thrown on the westbound side of the road."

Damage to the car included a shattered front windshield, a large indentation on the hood and a blood-stained, dented, right front fender. The driver was not speeding, according to the police report.

"I arrived at the accident just minutes after it happened," said Darrel Black. "I saw the guy lying on the westbound side of the road. There were three police cars and an ambulance already there. He was lying on the ground with blood around him."

Purschke, who was contacted at the hospital and reported to be in fair condition the weekend following the accident, said he doesn't remember the accident.

"I don't remember anything, not crossing the road, not getting hit, anything," Purschke said. "They said I wasn't unconscious, but I don't remember anything up until Friday night." Dean of Students John Stack visited Purschke in the hospital as did Cariello..

Visitation Rules To Remain Same

By LINDA BOND

Villanova University is extending the experimental policy of limited visitation for student dormitories this year.

Visitors of the opposite sex are not permitted in the residence halls except in areas officially designated, such as public lounges. The experimental exceptions to this policy are Monday through Thursday from 3 p.m. to 11 p.m., Friday and Saturday from noon to 1 a.m., and Sunday from noon to 11 p.m.

All guests are to be escorted from public areas to private rooms by residents of the building.

Director of Residence Life Chris Janosik stated that, "visitation hours are very much a concern of the residential population. Students want extended visitation rights. In an effort to respond to the needs of the resident, the experimental policy is being continued." It now enters its fifth year.

Janosik said that visitation is a broad concern of many constituents, citing the students, the Augustinian Fathers, parents, and the administration as examples. Each group has a "different interpretation of what such a policy means and what impact the policy has on Villanova University," said Janosik, who defined the term "experimental" to mean that the policy is under a continuous review.

Vice-President for Student Life Dr. Richard Neville sees the issue in terms of "legitimate needs." He said it is a matter of "concern for safety, as well as the privacy of students, balanced against the convenience of having visitors at certain times." To him, safety, privacy and socialization are all legitimate needs which must be balanced. He finds potential problems in the often heralded 24-hour visitation suggestion.

Neville expressed special concern for the safety of Villanova's women residents in unmonitored buildings. He drew attention to the structural limitations of campus dormitories and to the absence of room suites which, if they were available, would provide private bath and lounge facilities, replacing the public nature of present ones.

Neville explained that President John Driscoll, O.S.A., with the permission of the Board of Trustees, has allowed the experiment to continue. He added that it seems to be going well now and said, concerning the possibility of an even greater expansion of the rules next year, "I don't foresee any change. We are still watching.

The next possible move, according to Neville, would be the permanent implementation of the presently experimental limited visitation.

Student Body President Paul Tufano expressed concern for the present state of visitation at the university. "The visitation policy has to be improved. The first way it has to be improved is by getting the administration to make the policy permanent, then expanded."

Janosik further stated that each constituency has a different set of answers to these questions. When asked about the kind of change Villanova University could expect, he responded, "gradual."

Thompson Wins Seat

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

Dr. Joseph E. Thompson, assistant professor of political science, has been elected to the national council of the political science honor society, Pi Sigma Alpha. Thompson will work with 14 other national council members in the improvement and guidance of the society.

Thompson has been recognized by the council for his work with the Villanova political science chapter. "The honorary position will help not only my career but the political science department and especially the students here at Villanova," said Thompson. "This is also an honor for the political science honor students who are the ones who control the activities of the honor society. I only coordinate and assist the students in realizing their potential."

As a member of the national council, Thompson will be able to contact some of the top political scientists in the United States to ask them for advice. "With this prestigious and influential position, I have access to those well-known in the field," said Thompson. "Therefore I can help Villanova students make contact with the right group or organization.

"People outside of Villanova will recognize Villanova University as a solid place to graduate from with a political science degree."

Dr. Joseph E. Thompson

As a national council member, Thompson's responsibilities are similar to those of the political science honor society advisor here at Villanova, but on a broader scale. The 14 council members examine all of the applications for the political science honor society from the 303 national chapters, aids and advises in the development of new ideas and encourages changes in the criteria for improving the honor society.

"What we had been able to do with a $500 grant last year was the proposal to start a Distinguished Speaker Series at Villanova," said Thompson. The first speaker, Austin Ranney, was so impressed with Villanova University and the Political Science Club that he sent back one-half of his honorarium from the club for the students to use in furthering their ambitions." Pi Sigma Alpha plans to continue the Distinguished Speaker Series this year.

Other plans for this year include Career Day, picnics and coffee hours, designed to encourage the club to contact other political science organizations to share and promote ideas.

In the past, Thompson worked with the United Nations as the assistant for the United States in the Office of Public Information.

ACS Sets Goals

By HENRY Di BENEDETTO

The Association of Commuting Students has become a more involved and responsible organization this year, according to ACS President Britt Gourley.

The ACS was reorganized a year and a half ago when Gourley assumed the presidency. "Last year was when we turned the ACS around," said Gourley. "We had more field trips and parties with which we had great success. We also had a field trip to Great Adventure and also two ski trips. The turnout was decent and this year we expect more."

Last year, the membership of the ACS totalled about 150 students. At the beginning of this semester, the organization claimed to have 300 students.

"We've made our organization known and more people are becoming interested," Gourley said. "The ACS does not only reach out to commuters but also to off-campus residents as well. They encounter the same worries as the commuter in many cases."

One of the major concerns for many commuters is the parking situation. "Parking is very limited and very disorganized," said Gourley. "Every day is a hassle and it's getting more and more difficult to control the situation." ACS intends to work with university officials and try to find a solution to the continuing problem.

In addition to more field trips and parties, the ACS is becoming more involved in intramural sports. The ACS has organized three football teams and eight basketball teams. Membership in intramurals from the members is almost 100 percent.

Gourley won the ACS presidential election in a process that included the participation and cooperation of all the commuters and OCR's. He credits the success of the ACS to his cabinet which includes Vice-President Lisa Canon, Secretary Lucia Rosica and Treasurer Patty Tomczykk.

"When we have problems, we all work together," Gourley said. "The work is not placed in just one individual's hands. Everyone chips in." According to Gourley, the ACS would not be as successful as it is without the other officers' involvement.

Gourley's main goal for the upcoming academic year is to have the ACS run smoothly enough to insure a proper transition period when his term is over. Gourley also expects to reach more students and encourage involvement in all the activities.

quick study. It will also benefit the University College."

Also revamped were the computer facilities which were also moved from the third floor to the basement. There are 13 terminals hooked up to the main I.B.M. business computer, with another 13 to be installed shortly. Computers for the faculty will also be installed.

Office space expansion was also included in the capital improvements. The third floor now accommodates 70 faculty members with 25 private offices. There will also be offices for the five business chairmen and their secretaries.

"I'm thrilled to have all the professors together up there," said Clay. "It's important to have related disciplines sharing information. And it's much easier to talk to all of them together."

The capital projects estimated cost was originally $416,000. Clay said the final cost figures will probably double that. "The rest of the improvements will come in stages as we need them," Clay said. "It's important for the students and faculty to use these facilities so they know where the money has been spent."

Concerning the M.B.A. program, the revenue accrued from tuition will pay in part for the renovations. According to Clay, the first time process of sending out inquiries, receiving applications and choosing the final students went as well as could be expected.

"There were over 600 applications submitted for the 150 student openings," Clay reported. "We picked those that met ASAP standards. We have four Ph.D.'s in the program who hold their doctorates in areas other than business.

"I'm amazed at the kind of people we have for students. Many of them took their undergraduate work from colleges as far away as California and Colorado. We even have transfers from Drexel and Temple. And more than half did not have any previous business discipline."

Presently 180 students are enrolled in the M.B.A. program, slightly more than originally expected.

Nine new professors were hired for the 1982-83 academic year with more hirings expected by a gradual sequence according to need.

Bob Edgar to Speak

Bob Edgar, a four-term Democratic congressman from the seventh Congressional District, will speak on campus Monday, Sept. 27. The congressman, seeking re-election, will discuss the future of education and student aid program in the West Lounge on Dougherty Hall, 4 p.m. The talk will be followed by a question and answer session, and an opportunity to meet the Congressman.

Edgar, chairman of the 21-member Northeast-Midwest Congressional Coalition, which is concerned with the economic future of the region, has been endorsed by the United States Student Association. The U.S.S.A. is a Washington, D.C. based national student organization of colleges and universities. He has also been endorsed by the Pennsylvania State Education Association and the Pennsylvania Federation of Teachers, for his strong support of educational issues.

Where the Bucks Go—Some Answers

When returning for a new school year, one cannot help noticing the changes around campus. This year in particular the changes were very noticeable and deserve mentioning. The situations were ones which have deserved attention for a long time and have finally been remedied, much to the relief of students, faculty and administrators alike.

The most obvious change, especially for commuters, was the installation of the fence along Lancaster Avenue. Students complained upon seeing this "barricade" to their short-cut through the bushes, but hopefully the fence will deter lazy or stubborn students from crossing the street amidst traffic.

Improvements that may go more unnoticed are the renovations in Bartley and Mendel Halls. It is an undeniable fact that computers are swiftly taking over in all fields; the University recognized this and enlarged the computer center in Bartley and completely transformed Mendel's old cafeteria into a new computer center. Both of these will now provide more than adequate facilities for business, computer science, math and engineering majors, as well as for liberal arts majors, where just barely sufficient equipment existed previously.

Of course, the new windows in five of the buildings are quite recognizable. The windows will cut on heating costs while also adding to the aesthetic quality of the campus. Thankfully, we will no longer have to wear scarves and gloves during classes in the winter.

One additional improvement to highlight is the new furnishings in three of the dormitories. It was clearly obvious that the "army-issue" beds, dressers and desks were not going to hold out much longer. With these new additions, at least we can feel a little more comfortable when away from our solid beds and mahogany dressers at home.

Seeing these changes makes it a great deal easier to bear the tuition increases we face each year. It becomes so frustrating to feel the crunch of sky-rocketing hikes when we do not even know where the money goes. At least we now have concrete examples to point to when wondering where four years' worth of money goes.

Wanted: Op-Eds

The Villanovan, as the newspaper of record for Villanova, is supposed to function as a voice for all the various people who compose the University: the students, faculty and administrators. Recognizing that within a community as large and diverse as this, there exists an almost infinite variety of opinions and recognizing, too, that we cannot possibly express them all ourselves, we invite any and all who are interested to present their thoughts, opinions and beliefs on our Op-Ed page.

Submissions can be on almost any topic and do not have to be limited to subjects directly affecting Villanova. They should be no less than 400 words and no more than 1,000, and all op-eds must be received at the Villanovan office in Dougherty Hall by 3 p.m. on Tuesdays.

We sincerely hope that you will take advantage of this opportunity to have a forum for your views.

The* Villanovan *will print "Letters to the Editor" received prior to the deadline, Tuesday at 5 p.m. the week of publication. All letters must be signed, although the editors will withhold a name upon request. Because of limited space, the paper reserves the right to edit and shorten all letters.

ROTC Noise

To the Editors:

This is an open letter of complaint which we hope will come to the attention of the person who holds the power to relocate the morning ROTC drills and restore our sleep.

As Alumni Hall residents, we're sick to death of being awakened at daybreak to the shouts of "Good morning, sir!," "Good morning, ma'm!". Then "left, right, left, right" follows until we're out of bed and out of patience.

The first morning it happened, we were irritated; the second morning, angry; the third, tired; and the fourth, irate! This kind of inescapable public noise between 6 a.m. and 8 a.m. is completely unreasonable, not to mention horribly inconsiderate. A Radnor Township ordinance does not permit residential noise to extend beyond 150 feet of a property. From the edge of Alumni's lawn to the edge of Mendel field, a distance of less than 150 feet exists. While we are not "residential," this enforceable neighborhood courtesy in Radnor serves as a good example of the kind of consideration any neighbor is due.

We would suggest the ROTCs use any other open field for morning drills which is out of earshot of local campus residents. Off hand, the area opposite the Field House on Lancaster Avenue would seem to be a likely spot.

We feel our "patriotic duty" does not extend to tolerating this ignorant noise any more.

Flim-Flam

To the Editor:

There is an old analogy which states that statistics are like ladies of the evening; once you get them down, you can do whatever you want with them. Last week's lead story, "Bank Loses Thousands Annually," is certainly proof of this.

For Bryn Mawr Trust to say that its Villanova branch is losing $100,000 a year is a flim-flam of accounting. Since it is only allowed to do business with the University Community, it certainly cannot have a high volume of loans granted by the branch. Just ask yourself how many Villanova professors can afford $100,000 business loans. So, what you have is a branch with all normal expenses, yet unable to generate revenue from its deposits. No wonder it loses money every year.

But to say that the branch is not profitable to Bryn Mawr Trust is misleading. Obviously, the deposits received at the Villanova branch are lent by other branch offices, with a significant yield.

If my logic seems a bit confusing, consider this point. What business, no matter how altruistic its attitude towards Villanova, would operate a facility which has lost substantial sums of money 10 years in a row?

Rev. Papin

To the Editor:

An obituary appeared on the front page of the Sept. 17 issue of the Villanovan for Dr. Joseph Papin, my professor and my friend with whom I worked for nearly 13 years. I do not here intend to present another one, but rather a glimpse of the man with whom I labored for so many years.

Papin came to Villanova in 1963 having established many of the themes of his research as far back as 1946 in Holland in his works Christus Bij Dostojevskej and Doctrina de Bono Perfecto. His mission at Villanova was twofold: to raise up scholars among the students, and to bring a new dimension, an approfondimento, to post-conciliar theology through the establishment of an international theology institute at Villanova. He accomplished both.

While at Villanova I assisted Professor Papin in a broad spectrum of studies on biblical, speculative, moral, liturgical, eschatological, ecclesiological, historico-patrological and mariological themes, and in his interdisciplinary studies in genetic medicine, law, linguistics, literature, philosophy, political science, psychology and sociology. In these studies he employed a vast array of languages.

His untiring labor in the fields of scholarship won him the admiration of the most discerning minds. In 1972, nationally and internationally recognized scholars joined in presenting him a Festschrift: Transcendence and Immanence, Reconstruction in the Light of Process Thinking (ed. J. Armenti). A second volume was given to him in 1976, Wisdom and Knowledge (ed. J. Armenti). His other awards are too numerous to mention here.

During his lifetime, he published hundreds of books and articles. Most of the work during his last seven years, however, remains in manuscript form. These manuscripts, along with his enormous library, have been left in my care, and will be published as time permits. Some of them will appear in a two-volume biography which is now in process.

In his life Papin represented "best the pilgrim Church" (B. Haring, Rome), and gave a legacy which is "teaching us all" (K. Stendahl, dean of Harvard). His institute at Villanova "will remain a veritable monument" (Cardinal Flahiff, Canada).

To those of us who had the privilege of knowing and working with Professor Papin, not a man, but a whole world has passed on.

'Infirmary Seven'

To the Editor:

Since your recent article on the "Infirmary Seven — Homeless," we have gotten much support from peers and classmates. We were hoping that you could publish the following letter in your paper.

Thank you.

Dear Christopher M. Janosik and the entire Residence Life staff:

We would just like to thank you for your inconsideration and enmity towards the seven freshmen living in the infirmary. Not only did you promise us a room by Sunday, Sept. 5, you again personally lied to us when you guaranteed us all rooms by Thursday, Sept. 9. Then, to really make us appreciate you more, you closed the residence life office early on Friday, Sept. 10, telling four of us to come back Monday. By the time you closed your office on Friday afternoon, it was rumored that you had room keys for all of us sitting on your desk, although you didn't bother dropping them off at the infirmary so we could move out over the weekend.

Not once did anyone in the Residence Life office step one inch into the infirmary to assure us, counsel us or even care about us. This past weekend, while you were at home with your family and friends, we were living in the midst of three ill people, to bring the total to seven. To all of you who had anything to do with this foul-up, we now have as much faith in you as an atheist has in God.

Yours truly,
"Homeless Infirmary Seven"

Campaign

To the Editor:

My name is Roberta Thomas and I am running for State Representative in Haverford, Marple, Radnor Townships, Delaware County. I am writing to ask for your help in my campaign.

Although you may not live or vote in Pennsylvania's 166th Legislative District, this election affects you because my opponent, Stephen Freind, holds attitudes and sponsors legislation that has immediate impact on your lives. In my view, Stephen Freind's positions are an assault on the fundamental freedoms critical in a pluralistic democracy. Like the "moral majority" whose views he reflects, Freind's decides what is "moral" and then dictates legislation that all of us must obey.

Freind sponsored the most restrictive (and in attitudes towards women the most demeaning) abortion control law in the country. He is presently sponsoring, also in the name of "morality" a law that would require all high schools to report to draft recruiters the names, addresses and phone numbers of all male high school juniors and seniors. Is this tyranny or democracy?

I am challenging Stephen Freind and want to defeat him. I want his defeat to send a message throughout this country that politicians who would make laws that restrict rather than protect the rights of citizens will not be tolerated.

We are going door-to-door Oct. 2 and 3. We are making phone calls, writing literature, collecting money to fund advertising. Please help. Please help me stand up for us all. Call my headquarters at 446-8485 today.

Thank you.

Roberta Thomas

Accident Thank You

To the Editor:

At a time when Villanova students are being criticized as being irresponsible, unfeeling and apathetic, we are proud to be associated with the University and in particular with the Department of Athletics.

On Sept. 15, between 3:45-4 p.m., a male student was struck by a car on Lancaster Ave. in front of the football stadium. The rugby and soccer teams were having practice at the time and it was their immediate and quick action that allowed the injured student to receive much needed medical attention.

Leadership and cool heads were shown when people were sent to phone for an ambulance, to get the trainers from the Field House, traffic was directed to avoid further accidents and control was established over the crowd that had begun to gather. Most important of all, it was recognized that the major bleeding had to be stopped — and it was.

We wish to thank all those students, local residents and staff that rose to the occasion of helping their fellowman and student. No one told anyone to pick up the first aid kits off the practice field and run; it was automatic. To those athletes who were the first ones at the scene — your hands and shirts that controlled the bleeding was quick thinking. Thank you to the rugby player who lives in Galberry and brought out the blanket — you kept Dan warm when he started to go into shock. To those that took care of the girls in the car, realizing we were busy, you took a kit and administered first aid and comfort to them; thank you along with the nameless people that ran for splints and a stretcher when we asked for them.

Thank you also to those athletes who stuck up for us and the training room staff when Radnor Township police finally did arrive and began to give us a hard time by telling us to stop and asking us what we were doing. The loyalty and camaraderie of a team around its trainer was never so appreciated.

walkways and parking surfaces. Earlier, the roof on the Field House was completely resurfaced, and additional insulation was added to seven buildings on campus.

"Sullivan, Sheehan, St. Rita's, and Alumni Hall were heavily repainted," said Rice. "We changed two lounges into additional rooms, and St. Rita's, Simpson and DeLurey Halls received new furnishings."

The University's major renovation work has been a result of the U.S. , Department of Energy's Institutional Conservation Program. "Villanova was fifth in the nation in the amount of grants we received," Rice claimed.

"We pick out particular buildings which would be attractive to the government," explained Rice. "We received a technical assistance grant to help us survey the campus facilities. The money is then funded for expenditure according to a submitted request."

The windows in Fedigan, Tolentine, Vasey, John Barry, and Austin Halls have been replaced with Thermopane windows. The money for these renovations was provided by matching grants from the energy program.

Improvements like these are an effort to cut down on the use of Villanova's steam plant. "All buildings on campus are fed by the steam plant, except Stanford, Good Counsel, and St. Mary's Halls," Rice explained. "The underground steam lines are of various ages. We've already replaced the steam lines serving O'Dwyer, Middleton and Fedigan Halls.

"In the effort to cut down heat in classrooms when they are not used," Rice continued, "we will be installing individual heat controls in each building,with exterior monitoring units which will control the flow of steam into the buildings."

Rice also detailed imminent improvements in Tolentine Hall. "There are improvements planned for offices, labs and equipment over the next two years," explained Rice. "The electrical transformer in Tolentine is already at full capacity, so we have installed new conduits,anticipating an additional transformer to handle the increasing needs of Tolentine Hall.

"Since all the buildings on campus will need to be shut down when the new transformer is to be hooked up," Rice said, "We plan on doing this during the Christmas break, when it's the most convenient. It's most important," Rice added, "to have the capability to meet our electrical needs for the next ten years."

V.U. Nutrition Assessed

By JEFF PENN

Villanova students may not enjoy the food served at Villanova, but, according to Frederick Magner, professor of nursing, it is more than adequate in its nutritious qualities.

Magner, who teaches a basic nutrition course to primarily pre-med, pre-dental and nursing students, believes that Villanova students care about their health and nutrition more so than those in previous years.

"The course is a basic," Magner explained. "It's an introduction to nutrition and nutrients in food and the digestion, metabolism and absorption processes."

Magner is well-schooled in the nutrition field. He holds a B.S. from Pratt University and a master's degree from Drexel University and is a registered dietician. Magner has previously taught at Glassboro State College and Immaculata College.

Magner is also a major nutrition advisor to the U.S. Army. In October, Magner will spend two weeks in Russia attending a nutrition conference on Alzheimer's disease. He will also travel to Georgia, Russia, to examine wheat production as that nation continues to be plagued with poor wheat harvests.

Magner has also done extensive research on the diets of POW's during the Vietnam War.

"On the whole, the food at Villanova is nutritious," said Magner. "Villanova students are healthier than the Ivy Leaguers," he joked.

Magner will have a book coming out in October which he co-wrote with Rose O'Driscoll, assistant to the dean of nursing. The book contains 65 recipes that are substitutes for chocolate and white bleached flour snacks.

Magner contends that vitamins are like health insurance. "You don't need them as long as you eat a well-balanced diet. Of course, everyone's needs are different."

Come And Meet Those Dancing Feet

By STEPHANIE M. SCHWARTZBERG

This article is dedicated to all those who will audition for a college theatrical production this year. Good luck; you'll need it.

Auditioning for a play can be very hazardous to one's sanity. The mental anguish is a direct result of one's attempt to delight and amaze a casting director even when everything goes wrong, as it usually does.

Musical theatre is particularly traumatic in this regard. To be cast in a musical an actor must be a "triple threat." That is, someone who not only acts, but sings and dances as well. So actually, an actor must go through three auditions, each with his own set of possible catastrophies. In the tradition of Murphy's Law the following is what can take place in a typical audition.

The first step in preparing for an audition is the selection of a song. On the surface this process may not appear too difficult. But this one song must accomplish a variety of objectives. The song, most importantly, must show the versatility of your voice. The song must be a good vehicle to prove some of your acting abilities. The song should be somewhat unique, or at least not one that the director has heard twelve times that evening. ("I Am Sixteen" from "The Sound of Music" is not a good choice.)

The song must accomplish these things and more, and it should do it in five lines because that is probably all you'll finish before the director rather unpolitely cries, "Next!"

The day of the audition you arrive with a song you are confident will knock the socks off the director. You hand your musical score to the pianist. Now, one of a few things can happen. One, the pianist scans the music. He then turns to you and apologetically states that he has never heard this song before but he'll give it a try. That's great, just wonderful buddy. Two, the pianist knows the music, but as he begins to play you realize that the song is in a key that only Beverly Sills could sing it in. More fun; three, if you're really lucky you can combine the two. Somehow you struggle through.

Let's say, just for fun, that you get called back for the dancing audition. This audition is always a very long night. You can be sure that you'll have at least two quizzes the next day that you didn't study for.

Dance auditions provide lots of opportunities to mess things up. One can start by tripping up the stairs going onto the stage. Dancers are notoriously clutzy off stage. But you're not safe once on the stage. If you're 5'1", you'll inevitably be paired with a 6'3" partner. Or your dance partner could be some guy who looks like a banker who wandered off Wall Street and is lost without his briefcase. And be sure not to kick someone in the stomach while doing an arabasque.

The worst possible feeling comes when you are on stage all alone to do the steps that they taught you. You get past the first move and totally blank out. You stand there looking like a fool 'till the choreographer, sounding more than a little bothered, calls out the next step to you. You can only hope that you won't be the only one to forget the steps, but of course you were.

If one is lucky enough to make it to the final auditions, that is when the fun really starts. Simply losing one's voice an hour before the audition is getting off too easily. The real aggravation comes with things like playing a love scene with the guy or girl who just dumped you. Or maybe the worst thing that can happen is reading for the lead part, first. Then you must watch as they narrow down the contenders for this part. They send people home till there are

Grad School???

By MARY K. DAY

Of the numerous students who will be leaving Villanova equipped with a bachelor degree this May, many may plan to return to the classroom next fall. Graduate and professional schools have mass appeal and for a variety of reasons, Whether one aspires to sign M.D. or Esquire after his or her name, is simply avoiding the mundane reality of the working world or paying back student loans, there exists the unavoidable and often terrifying prospect of the lengthy standardized graduate or pre-professional exams.

MCAT's LSAT's, GRE's, DAT's etc. . . . are enough to make even the very best students question his ability and wonder, even if momentarily, "What have I learned in the past three or four years?"

Much controversy surrounds the validity of such testing. According to some, specific knowledge is not as important to achieve high scores as is the mastery of the time-intensive multiple-choice test format. A first-year Temple law student remarked, "The LSAT doesn't measure intelligence as much as it measures the ability to handle stress."

Whatever the combination of factors necessary to do well on these crucial tests the question remains, are they actually an effective barometer to gauge who will be the best doctors, lawyers, dentists and so on? Do those people, who can afford expensive preparation courses, have an unfair advantage, actual or psychological, over those who cannot afford them? The answers are indeed dubious, yet one has to wonder whether we are becoming professional test takers, unable to apply our knowledge and effectively relate to others as is necessary for most professionals.

Ultimately, whatever opinion held on the worth of standardized graduate and pre-professional exams, if one plans on graduate or professional school unfortunately, it is necessary to take the exam and especially to DO WELL!

So good luck to those who are taking graduate or professional school exams, especially the LSAT test-takers on Oct. 2. And to those who are friends of the test takers, have patience, it will all be over soon . . .

Cinema Gets New Equipment

By KATHI IANNACONE

The Villanova Cultural Film Series will be enhanced this fall by having the films shown on the best 16mm equipment available. Two electrically supercharged Eiki Xenon projectors have been purchased for the Connelly Center Cinema by director Marc Tuchman. Tuchman has also hired a professional projectionist as a permanent Connelly Center staff member.

During the past six seasons that the series has been in existence, it has proved to be one of the biggest box office attractions that the University has provided. What seems to be attracting the film-goers is a combination of recent foreign and American films with classic films. Together, these films provide an educationally rich form of entertainment.

"Man of Iron" and "Man of Marble" highlight the series, the major theme of which this fall is films of Eastern Europe. These films will be followed by a panel discussion featuring authors Mira and Antonin Liehm; Dr. Jeffrey Hahn, an associate professor of political science at Villanova; Kostas Myrsiades of the West Chester State College faculty; and Myron Wolnicki, a Polish citizen who is a visiting professor at Villanova.

Linked to the main series is the Wednesday evening mini-series which will be introduced by Antonin Liehm with,"Ashes and Diamonds" on Oct. 6. "Closely Watched Trains," a Czechoslovakian film made in 1967 and the Hungarian film "25 Fireman's Street" complete the mini-series. Lieutenants Woman;" and "Apocalypse Now" are the four remaining films, each of which will be followed by a discussion.

Other films in the series include "Return of the Secaucus Seven," an American film directed by Sayles; "Kind Hearts and Coronets," a classic British film; and "Lili Marleen," a 1981 German film.

Cocteau's classic "Beauty and the Beast," the 1981 release, "Chariots of Fire;" "The French

Screenings of films in the main series will be held on Sundays at 3:30 and 7 p.m. and on Mondays at 7 p.m. in the Connelly Center. Discussion groups will be held following the films. Screenings of the three mini-series films will be on the scheduled Wednesdays at 7 p.m. in the Cinema.

Admission for the movies in the series is $1.50 for students and $3 for the general public.

Archives Buried In Falvey

By WILLIAM BURNS

Digging for remains of ancient cultures in Siena, Italy; studying manuscripts and primary sources dealing with the foundation of the Augustinian Order in 1244; writing interesting and informative biographies of Augustinian personages - each of these exciting activities is a branch of the work of the Augustinian Historical Institute (AHI).

Founded by Rev. Francis Roth, O.S.A. and transferred to Villanova University in 1970, the AHI serves as an invaluable repository of Augustinian archieves for religious and scholars the world over. Built upon a nucleus of books and manuscripts which were housed in the Conrad Fox Memorial Library in Riverdale, N.Y., the current collection has more than doubled in size and scope over the past twelve years. Books in many languages, ranging from Latin and German to Polish and Hungarian, microfilm, and original manuscripts of the notes of famous scholars are among the media contained in the AHI's collection.

The Rev. Joseph C. Schnaubelt, O.S.A., the current director of the institute, assessed its role as follows, "We maintain a research library containing a collection of works which described the history of the Augustinian Order from 1244 to present, concentrating also on the missiology (mission activity) and philosophy of the Order."

Although most Villanova students come in contact with the Augustinian Fathers solely in their roles as professors, administrators and campus ministers, the role of the thousands of Augustinians worldwide is really much more diverse. Involvement in secondary and postsecondary education, parish work, mission activity (especially in Peru and Japan) and campus ministry we all characteristic of the Augustinians.

The AHI also sponsors several programs which complement Augustiniana research, one which is an archeological expedition at San Leonardo al Lago in Siena, Italy. Another unique program is an annual conference on Patristic, Mediaeval and Renaissance Studies. This year's conference will take place here from Sept. 24 to Sept. 26. This conference draws annually hundreds of scholars from around the world who gather to discuss their respective fields of expertise and have their papers published in the conference's "Proceedings." Schnaubelt is linked to both of these programs as director of the archeological expedition, co-chairman of the PMR Conference with Dr. Thomas A. Losoncy of the Philosopy dept., and editor of the "PMR Proceedings."

Writing and publishing biographies of Augustinian personages and chronicling Augustinian life are also functions of the AHI. Publications soon to be released include a collection of biographies of Augustinians fundamental in the Campus Ministry

Perspectives

The following is the first of a weekly column written by members of the Campus Ministry which will be appearing in the Villanovan. This article was written by the Rev. Shawn Tracy, O.S.A., director of Campus Ministry.

By REV. SHAWN TRACY, O.S.A.

A nearby pastor of a wealthy church in northern Jersey recently said to me: "Shawn, we like to send our young people to your Villanova school. When our students go to some of those big state schools, they often come home alienated from the community and their families. They pick up radically different values, and they change too much. But at Villanova, they just don't change that much!"

Well, that statement could be a very telling indictment of Villanova as a place where important changes ought to occur naturally, and where crisis is meant to be a healthy factor in personal growth.

The word "crisis" is a Greek word which means "decision." There is no way that any person here at the university can grow, change, mature and flower unless this place becomes a place of decision in the midst of crisis.

What then is a typical crisis here? A worthwhile crisis!

To begin with, try sexual awareness. There is a very dramatic sexual atmosphere being expressed in every dimension of community life on campus, from the clothing we wear to the personalities we present. This is a place of meeting, and our sexuality is as important a factor as any.

But for many, to meet others, to allow sexual feelings to be shared, to risk, to reveal the self with all its vulnerable truth, to enter into and become part of the whole, is a terribly pressurized crisis situation. For some, it is just awesome.

But think also of this. The world in which we live — a wonderful and dangerous world which moves so rapidly — is by that fact a world of throw-aways and fast foods. It is a world of sensory blitzing typified by the spinning dial of the TV set (it will give you almost anything you want instantly!).

Once you get hooked on the Great Spin, everything starts spinning. Friendships and relationships are very brief. Healthy sexuality degenerates into "one-night stands." We no longer take the time to stop and ask this one question: "Do I relate to other persons as persons, or just as things to be used briefly and discarded?"

The same is true of church — and faith. The individual alone makes the decision to go into the building where "church" happens. Or do we? In a world of turning options, swirling around like autumn leaves in a hurried wind, we often get caught in the flow with very little decision making within the patterns of our life.

Anyone of us, whether it be student, teacher or priest, can wind up impersonal and automated, passing from one event to another without depth, without commitment and without any real feeling. The end result is a superficial numbness of life blended perhaps rather attractively into a comfortable but fairly empty human life.

And so, to be a person, sexually and in every other way, we must have crisis. But we must become decision makers in the process.

And this is the crisis as I see it: the potential toward numbness in a world which offers infinite beauty, but does not have the time that it takes to love. Decisions make the difference!

Prof Lends Color To Class

By JIM DENNY

As Professor Edward Cannan stands in front of his ancient history class explaining where the first agricultural settlements appeared, something about the man says he has led a colorful life. Perhaps it's the way he lights up his pipe after class and gives that smile of contentment; letting the class know everything is under control. But of course, perhaps not.

Cannan was born an only child in Houston in 1924. He attended the University of Texas and graduated during WW II. He believes he is fortunate he never had to shoot, nor was shot at, by anyone. He spent his time instead in Pearl Harbor, translating Chinese after taking a 14-month crash course in Japanese. "Typical of the Navy," he says with a smile.

After the war, he continued his education at Columbia University. In 1951-52, he went to Italy on a Fulbright Scholarship. During this time he spent more than a decade teaching at the University of Texas and Texas Christian University.

When the opportunity came to teach in Lestho, a small country completely surrounded by South Africa, it was too good to pass up. He and his wife, whom he married in 1943, departed with the first six, of what would eventually be 13, children.

He taught for two years at a small Catholic university there and them moved on, now with seven children, to the island of Crete. There he taught servicemen who were stationed overseas.

In 1964 he secured a teaching position at Villanova. When he arrived in Philadelphia, he had $25 in his pocket. "If we hadn't had friends," he says, "I don't know what we would've done."

He has taught ancient history, western civilization, honors and even cooking courses at Villanova. He enjoys ancient history, especially Greek and Roman. In 1978, he organized the first Villanova trip for credit. 42 students went with him to Greece. It "worked beautifully," he says. "Greece is a country where things can go wrong . . . but everything was fine."

His home is in Rosemont, just a short walk from campus. He says he was "lucky to get that house. I haven't possessed a gasoline engine since Texas. I never intend to own one of those disgusting monsters."

He thinks Villanova offers its students a very fine education. He would prefer to see smaller classes because he believes "education should be a dialogue." He continued, "But the financial situation being what it is," he realizes the limitations.

Cannan has seen periods of radicalism and conservatism at Villanova. He believes Villanova is in a period of conservatism at the moment, but over-all things haven't changed much since he came here.

Although he is quite content here at Villanova, he admits with a sparkle in his eyes, that "somewhere in the Mediterranean is where I'd like to be."

formation of the Augustinian Province of St. Thomas of Villanova, whose provincialate is located at Villanova; and a history of Villanova University which is to include general statements and several vignettes of former University presidents and President Driscoll. It was just announced, and the Villanovan was the first to discover, that the AHI plans to release two special publications in 1987 to mark the sixteenth centenary of the conversion of St. Augustine in 387. The first work will include a listing of 365 Augustinian saints, one for each day of the year. A short biography of the saint will be followed by a short meditation. The second work will be an omnibus of sources concerning the Augustinian religious life.

Although the majority of Villanova students are unaware of the importance of the AHI, located in Falvey Library, the archives represent a substantial investment by the university and a precious research tool for countless religious and scholars.

Mrs. Marcese Downey and Schnaubelt may be reached at 645-7590 to answer questions and provide further information concerning the institute's activities.

The Villanova

"We know ...

Student Government

What It Is; What It Isn't

Perhaps the most important responsibility a representative has is being honest with his or her constituents. In that spirit, it is our intention to publicly tell you — our constituents — what your Student Government is and what it isn't, what we will try to do this year and what we won't do.

WHO ARE WE?

The Student Government is the official representative body of all students. Its main purpose is to provide a channel of communication between students and the University (namely the administration). In addition, it promotes student legislation and assists in problems involving students and the Villanova community. Thus, the Student Government performs the double role of providing student representation in the formulation of University policies, and expanding and improving student services.

As a point of information, you'll notice that the letters "SGA" are not used anymore. This change is not new, for it came about over two years ago. The decision not to call it an "association" was based on the fact that this group is the only one that officially represents the students in all matters, and the only group elected University-wide. The composition of the Student Government is simple: student body president, student representatives from the University Senate, and three appointed vice presidents.

WE WILL . . .

. . . keep you informed on what is going on, whether it concerns the University Senate, Student Life area, Board of Trustees, etc. The biggest problem in past years has been the lack of communication between the students and the government.

. . . work towards a better visitation policy. Technically, the policy is still an experiment under the direction of the vice president for Student Life. We feel it is time to make it a permanent policy and improve it.

. . . propose a student bill of rights.

. . . try to coordinate better cooperation among major student organizations through the Facilitating Committee.

. . . support the reinstatement of football.

. . . monitor the University budget preparation and support only a budget which doesn't ask too much from the students.

. . . answer any questions, help solve any complaints, welcome any help.

WE WON'T . . .

. . . go for unrealistic goals which will absorb all of our resources and time.

. . . be afraid to let the administration know how you feel.

. . . shirk from the responsibilities you have given us.

The University Senate: How It Works

The University Senate is a vital means of communication between the students, faculty, administration and alumni. It offers the opportunity for students to participate in the decision-making processes of the University.

The Senate is embodied with the power to make policy for the governance of the University. It was instituted in the fall of 1969 by the Board of Trustees and is charged with the responsibility of legislating in matters which involves more than one college of the University, issues of faculty concern and student life as a whole. The University Senate may express general opinion on matters of student concern and recommend priorities in the long range planning and goals of the University campus building construction, fundraising, social action and athletic policy.

All legislative decisions and policy recommendations created by the Senate are subject to the approval of the President of the University. He may pass, reject (veto), return or redirect to the Board of Trustees proposed legislation. If sent to the Board, the legislation again faces approval, veto (without appeal) or return.

The Villanova University Senate is composed of twelve administrators, twelve faculty members, twelve students and two alumni. Five of the twelve administrators receive ex-officio seats with the remaining seven appointed by the President. The faculty senators are elected by their respective constituents. The faculty assembly chairman is an ex-officio member. Student senators are elected by the Student Body in a general election. The only ex-officio student senator is the student body president. The remaining seats are apportioned according to the enrollment in each of the colleges.

The Chairman of the 1982-83 University Senate is Professor Eleanor Strack, from the College of Nursing. Strack is assisted by the Executive Secretary, Mary Beth Bogan, a student senator from arts. The Senate meetings are open to the Villanova community and usually take place on designated Fridays at 4 p.m. in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall.

The Senate is aided by the work of its eleven standing committees. These committees are the Executive Committee, the Rules and Review Committee, the Academic Policy Committee, the Graduate Committee, the Faculty Affairs Committee, the Rank and Tenure Committee, the Student Life Committee, the Budget Committee, the University Planning and Priorities Committee, the Social Action Committee and the Athletic Advisory Committee. These committees formulate policy for the Senate in their respective areas, and are uniquely accessible to non-senators. They meet several times during the school year and report to the Senate through the Executive Committee.

Football ...

For 87 years Villanova students didn't have to look to the turning leaves or feel the cool breezes to know fall had arrived. There were many indicators to help point out the change of seasons: the sounds of the marching band belting out "V for Villanova," the color and fanfare of the drill team and cheerleaders, But more noticeably, the cheers of thousands rooting for the Villanova Wildcats as they competed on the gridiron. For the past two years, Villanova has been without a football team, and it is missed by students, alumni, faculty and administration.

The decision to drop football was not an easy one to make, nor has it been an easy one to live with. Citing years of financial losses, combined with growing demands in academic areas, the Board of Trustees did the unpopular: it dropped a sport which had been an 87-year-old tradition. The result has been lack of unity between many alumni and the administration. The real loser, however, is the student.

It is not our intention to question the integrity of the Trustees, or that of the alumni. Both groups are to be thanked for taking the time out to become involved in the University, although unfortunately for some, at opposite sides of the table. The student is the loser though, for several reasons. Students do want football, as evidenced by the question on last spring's election ballot to which 94 percent said, "Yes, I would support football through attendance at games." To say that the social life and spirit in the fall is the same as it was two years ago is wrong, let's be honest. What other occasions in the past two years have brought the large amounts of parents, alumni and students together that home football games did?

The alumni's attempt to get football back is welcomed. But, when it results in a disunity and bad feelings between them and the administration, i.e. Alumni Association calling for Fr. Driscoll's resignation in April, one wonders if the school is benefiting from it.

With recent news of a new football conference involving schools such as Lafayette, Lehigh, William & Mary and University of Delaware, it is easy to get excited at the thought of Villanova also taking part. In fact, almost every article on the more regional (and financially practical) conference includes comments on the hope that Villanova will join, too. We hope that perhaps this will serve as an opportunity for the administration (namely the Trustees) and the alumni to work together in pursuit of a program that is financially viable. The students of this University look forward to the day football comes back and offer their help in achieving this end.

Office of the Student Body President

September 22, 1982

Dear Villanovans:

Although it is a bit belated, "WELCOME BACK" to what I hope will be a great year for you, both academically and socially. This is the first of many supplements to the Villanovan which will serve as our chief means of communicating with you this year. Our goal is to keep you informed throughout the entire year.

What I always try to emphasize is that the Student Government represents you. It's not our place to decide student opinion on major issues without first soliciting your thoughts and ideas. Thus, just as we will be communicating to you this year, I sincerely hope you will communicate with us, too.

This year has the potential for both change and improvement in student-administration relations. With your support and input we can be assured of a successful year. The one thing that I will promise you is that we will do the best job for you that we possibly can.

Sincerely,

Paul A. Tufano

Well, in case you haven't noticed . . . WKWC has expanded to a full page this week . . . for those of you who didn't catch WKWC last week, we were so far behind in our extra-curricular activities (school work) that we let you . . . the common reader . . . try your hand at writing WKWC . . . all entries are in . . . and we must say, we are not impressed . . . we did manage to pick a winner . . . in case you didn't notice . . . it's the one in the box to your right . . . you know, the one marked "winner" . . . we must admit, it's almost as good as something we would do . . . notice the operative word is "almost" . . . on the other hand . . . the others that we've printed are representatives of the good, bad and the ugly losers . . . we're not recommending that you read them . . . but we did want you to see just how far out in left field some people's senses of humor are . . . take the one that criticizes us, for example . . . to the person(s) who wrote it . . . get real . . . did you actually think WKWC would make you Queen for the Day? . . . one favorite topic seemed to be the library . . . WKWC has one question, though . . . what's so funny about the library? . . . it's been telling the same jokes for years . . . (we couldn't resist) . . . another that was high on the hit parade was the bank . . . what's wrong with you people? . . . do you like to pull the wings off of butterflies, too? . . . WKWC is appalled at your insensitivity to poor Howard Graham (the branch manager) and his wife and kids . . . you know, it's not easy to raise a family on a branch manager's salary . . . or take Captain Cocaine, for instance . . . you've got to remember, a couple of thousand cars at $35 a pop don't pay for as much toot as they used to . . . and is this somehow connected with the long lines we had to wait in? . . . Hmmm . . . WKWC, as usual, will never tell . . . speaking of break-ins at St. Mary's . . . don't worry Chris J. . . your secret is safe with us . . . but that watch you sold us is a little slow . . . is it still under warranty? . . . who knows, who cares . . .

Our sympathies to everyone whose entries didn't make it . . . but hey, it wasn't easy for us to get Jerry Arth a date . . . Well, it's that time of year again . . . down jackets, gloves, hats . . . that is, if you're going to the library . . . but come winter, you better wear your bathing suits . . . It's also time to get your parking stickers . . . Remember, that $35 pays for security to patrol the parking lots for cars without stickers . . . speaking of vicious cycles . . . the bank is now charging $1 to cash a check . . . so if you have to cash a 75 cent check, you owe them a quarter . . . or if you hve a check for $1, just give it to them . . . But to make it up to us, they've installed a 24-hour banking machine . . . in the Connelly Center, which is only open 14 . . . Let's just hope the machine doesn't take extended coffee breaks, too . . . speaking of incompetence . . . Chris Janosik's new, improved RSA will operate the housing lottery a little differently this year . . . Everyone will line up on Lancaster and make a mad dash for whichever rooms they want . . . speaking of running . . . rumor has it that John Pisano is trying not to graduate this year so he can run for president for a third time . . . WKWC also hears some students are going to pay security guards to stand in line for them at the bookstore next semester . . . somebody's gotta give 'em a real job . . . They're so proficient at standing around doing nothing anyway . . . There are some freshmen who think WKWC is Villanova's radio station . . . stupid freshmen! . . . Villanova doesn't have a radio station! . . . Finally, here's to the creativity of this year's orientation slogan, "You've Got to Believe" . . . WKWC suggests a more appropriate slogan for next year . . . "You've Got to be Kidding" . . . Who knows, who cares . . .

They Thought They Knew . . .

Hey boys and girls, WKWC is going to teach you a new word . . . Can you say 'ripoff?' . . . Sure ya can . . . Do you know what a ripoff is? . . . Well the Bryn Mawr Trust Company sure does — they're now charging $1 to cash checks! . . . That's about as sickening as the $35 parking stickers . . . Barf us out! . . . Obviously they've caught on to the Board of Trustee's money-making racket is: . . . Yes, you too can learn to emlezzle . . . After all, V.U.'s motto is: . . . If not . . . start charging them" . . . Speaking of you preppy E.C. girls are rushing Tri Delts? . . . or have the two become synonymous? . . . Well, in that case, WKWC would like to know if you want to know how many of you out there bought tickets . . . we're talking real cheap! . . . you didn't know? . . . Well, in that case, WKWC would like to know if you want to be the best seats in the house . . . you have concert today? . . . Well, ya know, I've heard that was cancelled . . . you didn't know? . . . Speaking of the Villanova Stadium if you want to buy some tickets . . . the whole stadium if you want guarantee them to be the best seats in the house . . . you have your choice of any seat in J.F.K. — you can have the whole house . . . you want! . . . beat that offer! . . . As long as WKWC is one the subject of the Union . . . how many of you went to the Yardell's last Friday? Blue Books? . . . Even the Recreation Committee of the Villanova Union can't . . . Speaking of goodies, did everyone get their well goodie for you . . . Let's not give them any ideas though! . . . while they're still free . . . because after reading this they may decide to start charging for them . . . and we thought they had no They have enough of their own . . . they didn't even have time to get sick brains! . . . After all, who had the brilliant idea to put the Infamous Seven in the Infirmary? . . . Until next week . . . Who Knows, Who Cares . . . from the cafeteria food . . . Who Knows, Who Cares . . .

. . . But We Don't Care

Hey kids . . . can you believe the Villanovan actually asked for help in writing WKWC . . . couldn't they skip it for a week? . . . who reads what's written here anyway? . . . No, seriously . . . Villanova students love the Villanovan . . . especially the "On Campus," section . . . Who could pass up all those lousy comments from the intelligent student body? . . . No really, the Villanovan is a necessary part of the University . . . A Friday without the Villanovan is like a thunderstorm without duck shoes . . . like the Blew Key without a phony smile . . . like the parking lot with a space . . . watch out alligators, here come the horses!! . . . Polo shirts — not better things . . . like the new fad on campus . . . Polo shirts — not certainly not the library — you need your winter clothes for that but hanging out at Kelly's and the Wayne Tavern is still hot. place . . . hanging out at the Irish rack is not . . . "Deuce" and "Cool" are not some are definitely hot (like totally!), but "Deuce" and "Tubular" and "Awe-. . . the new bed units in St. Rita's are fairly hot, but falling from the top of one is not . . . the new Blue Book (a real Bonus) is hot, but the Who Knows, Who Cares section of the Villanovan is, well, it's . . . it's hot, too . . . at least this week it is . . . or is it??? . . . Who Knows, Who Cares . . .

Rastafarians Raid Tower Theatre

By JAYNE STUART

With the death of Bob Marley, reggae music has become a household item. What high school or college student has not heard of a Rastafarian? Anyone who attended the Jimmy Cliff and Peter Tosh show on Sept. 17 at the Tower Theatre surely knows reggae music now.

Cliff put on an enthusiastic performance of both music and dance. The motley array of robes, pants and shirts was the first thing to capture one's attention. But as soon as the music began, the clothes seemed irrelevant. The message of the music is a familiar one to anyone acquainted with the music of the '60s: no politics, oneness and freedom. These themes were epitomized in the song, "Give the People What They Want," which was knocked out with a lot of energy.

It was too bad that the volume had to be so high because the voices became muffled and the music tended to distort. "Turn the Tables" and "Treat the Youths Right" were very upbeat songs that got the crowd hopping. Cliff had a nice rapport with the audience and tried repeatedly to get the audience to carry the chorus. He finally succeeded during the title track from his latest LP, "Special." Throughout the show, his band adhered closely to the album versions of the short, concise songs.

Cliff returned for an encore and burst into "The Harder They Come," an old favorite. He also treated the crowd to an amazing display of acrobatics by doing four jumping splits (in a row). Cliff summed it all up by saying, "I enjoyed myself."

Peter Tosh was at a definite disadvantage by having to follow Cliff's fine performance. Tosh exuded a certain magnetism; nonetheless, he lacked energy. He opened with "Just Put Your Hand In Mine" and sang six songs after it without a word to the audience. Once again, the volume was too loud and many of his lyrics throughout the night were lost. His main message was vocalized in the song "Legalize Marijuana." The audience seemed to especially enjoy that one.

Tosh's style of music, with its long, instrumental interludes, contrasted with that of Cliff's. At times the instrumentals seemed to stray from their original purpose. At the same time, though, the band was a very tight and professional. The finale, "Stand Up For Your Rights," had the crowd on its feet, but no one expected an encore.

Tosh seemed to fall back on his credit of being an original Wailer (Bob Marley's band). His band is talented, but often appeared to be oblivious of the audience. Cliff's performance was much more fun and energetic. His show was definitely the more enjoyable of the two.

Peter Tosh.

The Who Make It Easy Again

By BILL SANTOS

"It's Hard," the Who's latest album, is the most harmonic of all their recordings. Although the music does not epitomize the Who's sound, it does represent a stronger drive toward the unification of their individual instruments. The use of electronic synthesizers gives the sound a fullness never before achieved on any other Who record. Synthetic music has been used on prior albums, e.g. "Who's Next," but was used for syncopation rather than melodious undertones. With Pete Townshend's ripping lyrics highlighted by Roger Daltrey's spine-chilling vocals, a feeling is established that must be experienced.

The members of the group come together to form a logical piece of art, but individual efforts do not go unnoticed. John Entwistle provides not only a rhythmic bass but also a biting use of horns throughout the album. His horn riff at the beginning of "One at a Time" borders on the abstract. Kenney Jones supplies his usual steady beat but tends to be imaginative at times, as on the melodical "Athena." Townshend gets into the act with a background piano in "One Life's Enough;" his keyboard play is simplistic but does add to the overall undertones of the song. Daltrey's vocals have a more harmonious quality about them, similiar to those found on an old favorite, "Behind Blue Eyes."

The Who has changed with the progressing times. The album cover is a prime example of the Who's status in society. It shows the group surrounding a video game as four separate individuals. The video game represents our changing society; the individualism can mean a breakup of the band is in the near future. The picture is reminiscent of the later photos of the Beatles before their breakup. Are the Who breaking up or are they just showing a transformation to another artistic arrangement? Townshend has become more political in his writing, as evident on "I've Known No War," and Daltrey has mellowed. One wonders if they will go their separate ways or will continue to perform together, yet in a different manner than before.

Previously, the Who have elected to change with the times and with our unstable society. However, there is always that chance of a separation. Three of the four band members have already pursued solo projects, showing a need to expand the realm of their individual artistry. The Who has been together for a very lengthy time and have stated that the current tour will be their last. Hence, a breakup seems inevitable. One can recall Townshend's lyrics from a song written in the early 1960s, "Hope I die before I get old."

Yet on "It's Hard," the Who have shown that they can still grow and mature as a group. The best songs on the album are "It's Hard" and "Why Did I Fall For That?" Both depict a more harmonic trend. There is a hypnotic yet majestic air about the sounds

Diamond Sparkles at Spectrum

By JOHN F. LYNCH
and
DEAN C. BALSAMINI

On Sept. 16, singer-composer Neil Diamond performed to an enthusiastic, sold-out crowd at the Spectrum.

After a delay of a half an hour, the Brooklyn born entertainer began the concert with his hit single "America." This song, along with "Love on the Rocks," "Songs of Life," and "Hello," were from the film "The Jazz Singer," a 1981 movie which starred Diamond, along with Lawrence Olivier and Lucy Arnaz.

Diamond masterfully controlled the audience with the order in which he performed his songs. He easily brought the crowd to their feet while playing "Dancing in the Streets" (a song made famous by Martha and the Vandells and the re-release by the heavy metal band Van Halen). The crowd (including a whole row of nuns) were ecstatic during this routine.

Not only could he hype the crowd, but Diamond could also quiet them by playing ballads such as "You Don't Bring Me Flowers." Linda Press, Diamond's background vocalist, superbly filled the "big shoes" of Barbra Streisand in performing this former No. 1 song.

Diamond made his professional style shine in the rendition of his top hits "Sweet Caroline," "September Morn," and "Forever in Bluejeans." With a little encouragement from the audience, Diamond performed "Forever in Bluejeans" a second, and then a third time.

After a quick change of his shirt, Diamond began the first of three encores. The best of which was the second encore which contained the song "Alleluia." "Alleluia" is a long, spiritual ensemble which was simply breathtaking.

Neil Diamond jazzed it up at his recent Spectrum show.

Neil Diamond, in simple terms, is a professional. He was born and raised in, as he calls, "the great state of Brooklyn." He tells the audience that the hustle-bustle lifestyle of New York had a strong influence in the music he writes. The power of Diamond's emotions came through in the song "I Am, I Said," a song which describes the struggle he faced when leaving New York to go to Los Angeles to sell his music.

The personality of Diamond consists of a strong will for perfection combined with a keen wit. He doesn't need to rip off his shirt (an old Tom Jones trick) to excite the crowd. His powerful, yet pleasant, voice was all that the crowd needed.

Diamond started out as a writer for other musicians on Tin Pan Alley, a famous haunt in New York for aspiring writers and musicians. He began his ascent upward writing songs for Anne Murray and The Monkees. "I'm a Believer," one of The Monkees biggest hits, was written by Diamond. It was a long and difficult road for this superstar who went on to achieve eight gold records.

The crowd played an important part in the success of the Spectrum show. It was a new, pleasurable, experience to [illegible] through a concert without the smell of pot and stale beer. In fact, the crowd was as loud as any rock concert audience we've heard in a long time.

Diamond surrounds himself with an accomplished set of musicians who also back him not only on tour but also in the recording studio. The band is highlighted by Tom Hensley, a fine pianist, who exhibited his talents in such songs as "Cracklin' Rose." Other standouts include Richard Bennett on lead guitar, Doug Rhone on synthesizers and Ronny Tutt on drums. Combined with Diamond, the band presents an excellent show.

Although Neil Diamond's latest material is not as strong as his earlier works, this performance has proven his skills, as both composer and singer, have not eroded. Many consider Diamond mellow, but the man comes at you with such power that it leaves one truly entertained.

No Hope for this "Class"

By MIKE NOONE

The advertisement boldly states, "We are the future . . . stop us if you can." What a dismal future it would be if all of this were true. The plot of "Class of 1984" centers on a music teacher from Nebraska, Andy Norris (Perry [illegible]ing), who finds himself thrust into an inner-city school with a decadent environment. For some reason, a small group of rebellious pupils are allowed to control a school and roam at will. It seems told that if these people were truly as rebellious as the director wants us to believe, why would they go to school in the first place? For the rest of the movie, the school teacher fights for the moral and just cause, pitted against an unbeatable system. This sounds fine for a good movie where the teacher could change these neo-fascist students into human beings again.

But, alas, the director, Mark Lester, chose the easy way out, making this film both superficial and boring. Soon, one no longer cares what happens to the gang.

The acting is terrible. Most of the actors are either known for their soap opera roles or simply for their pretty faces. Roddy McDowall gives the only believable performance in "Class of 1984." McDowall a fellow teacher of Norris' is soon driven past the breaking point by the antics of the gang. Timothy Van Patten, the gang's leader, has given better performances in the television show, "The White Shadow." One is never convinced of Van Patten's sadistic nature as the troubled leader, Stegman.

Except for one short scene, which shows Van Patten at home watching violence on television, Lester fails to give a reason for this sudden rise of decadence in the city and the school. The leader's mother is oblivious to all her son's vile activities at school. She tells us, "You people could never understand his kind of genius." What kind of genius does it take to lead five illiterate imbeciles? One especially disturbing point is that the leader's constant yearning to play the piano is never pursued, but was rather dropped as quickly as my interest in the film.

But the director, Mark Lester, chose the easy way out, making this film both superficial and boring.

The gang's motives and the actions of Norris are full of contradictions, making the film even more ludicrous. At one point the teacher is reluctant to punch the leader of the gang and is then taunted by him. Yet the next day, Norris has a temper tantrum and smashes up the boy's car. Stegman then becomes irate and yet is reluctant to kill the teacher, which would have been more consistent with Stegman's character. If you think you are confused, you can imagine how frustrating it is to sit through this movie. The overall concept and ending of "Class of 1984" is totally ridiculous. 1984 is only two years away and looking at today's high school sophomores, one doubts that this is indeed the future..

brought forth, which can be heard and felt on the title track. "Why Did I Fall For That?" has a more logical tone; it follows a particular chord pattern that is predictable yet appealing. These songs contribute to the subtle, less harsh sounds that weave their way throughout the album. But to die-hard Who fans, all is not lost. On the last song of the album, "Cry If You Want," Townshend reverts back to his signature style of jamming.

"It's Hard" is a well-balanced album although it is not what we are used to hearing from the Who. There is an increase in harmonic tones but the hard-driving lyrics still fill the groove. The album has many prime cuts and is a collection that should not be overlooked.

Cold Chisel Breaks the Ice

By CHRISTOPHER JOHNSON

"Circus Animals" is the first album by Cold Chisel. It is a collection of songs written by four of the bands five members and the songs are all of the popular heavy metal style. It would seem that with a variety of songs, writers and strong lead vocals by Jim Barnes, the album would be at least interesting. This, however, is not the case.

The album is at best mediocre. This is partially because the Vietnam War is over and the song written about it seems out of place. This is 1982, and getting blown away in Cambodia is no longer a major issue. The times have changed and so must the music.

There is nothing to provoke a person to get up and dance, sing along or even think about the songs.

The problem with "Circus Animals" is that something is missing. All of the essential parts of the music are there: pitch, duration, amplitude and timbre. What is missing is far more difficult to define — and that is emotion. The lyrics do not leave the listener with any feelings. There is nothing to provoke a person to get up and dance, sing along or even think about the subject of the song.

Music is meant to be enjoyed. But, it is difficult to enjoy music without a place or purpose. When Cold Chisel learns to put a little bit more of themselves into their music, I will gladly listen again.

Cold Chisel: Steven Prestwich, Phil Small, Don Walker, Ian Moss and Jim Barnes.

Textile Rams Trounce Wildcats

By MICHAEL BETZ

To take on the fifth best soccer team in the nation is never an easy assignment. To face a nationally-ranked team without your star forward and co-captain is even more difficult. Yet, the Villanova men's soccer team found themselves in this very predicament last Saturday and lost to the Philadelphia Textile Rams, 4-1. But, all things considered, the team played very well.

Textile entered the game ranked fifth nation-wide, after finishing at fourth best last year. The Cats were coming off a strong outing (a 3-3 tie with Baltimore), but were without senior star Brian Barr. Barr will most probably be out of action for the next two to three weeks with a heel injury. His absence forced Coach Howard Graff to make some very important changes.

In the first half, the Cats played a scrappy defense, led by Rob Porter, Mark West and co-captain Tom Nealon, which kept Textile off the scoreboard and on the ropes. Fifteen minutes into the half, however, Textile star Ray Carbone scored over the outstretched hands of freshman goalie John Grendi to give the Rams a 1-0 lead.

"He (Grendi) played well, but he made a few mistakes," Graff explained. "He didn't know somebody could shoot from 35 yards out and score."

Carbone's goal would prove to be all Textile could muster in the first 45 minutes. At halftime, therefore, the Cats seemed well within striking distance.

It was Textile, however, which struck in the early minutes of the second half. Tim Kileen and Howard Chinn each scored in the first five minutes to give the Rams a 3-0 bulge.

"The team played out of this world in the first half," Graff admitted. "But in the second half," Graff sighed, "Everybody got a little lazy or something."

This defensive lapse proved to be the Cats' undoing, and another goal by Kileen gave Textile an insurmountable 4-0 lead.

Villanova midfielder Ramon Garcia, however, finally put the Cats on the board midway through the second half. With Barr out, Graff feels that much of the offensive burden lies with Garcia. The coach believes that Garcia, who played "very well" Saturday, can handle the responsibility.

Garcia's goal ended the scoring, but Coach Graff was impressed to no end by the team's effort. "They (Textile) are the best team we're going to play," Graff noted, "I'm very happy with the performance. If we play this well the rest of the season, I'm expecting 12 or 13 wins." Graff also took time to praise the Cats' hustling defense, and in particular, the heady play of freshman Steve Camp. "We had to make some changes because of Barr," Graff observed, "but Camp played excellent."

CHEYNEY STATE

In pouring rain Wednesday afternoon, the Wildcats fell to another defeat; this time at the claws of the stubborn Cheyney State Wolves. Throughout the game Villanova struggled to gain control over their own play, both offensively and defensively, but never came up with the right plays at the right moment.

Cheyney State opened the scoring just 2:44 into the game. Alton Lawson, a native Jamaican, kicked the ball into the corner over the head and arms of the Villanova goal tender. Later in the first half the Wolves headed the ball into the corner of the Villanova net and the second half began with the Cats down 2-0.

The Wildcats came out more aggressively in the second half, but this time it was costly mistakes that kept them from stopping the Wolves.

Despite two early near misses, the Cat's Steve Maillard scored with an unassisted corner kick. Maillard is a freshman who has proven himself offensively early on this year. After this score Cheyney readied to score again and a tie up in front of the Villanova net allowed the third goal to get past freshman goal tender John Grendi. At 23:10 Cheyney scored again and although the Cats maintained a strong effort throughout the rest of the game the Cats did not score again and the final score stood at 4-1.

New Coaching Duo Bolsters Expanded Soccer Program

By COLLEEN LYNCH

Villanova's continually growing athletic program introduces two new additions in Wildcat soccer.

Returning to Villanova as assistant soccer coach is Dave McHugh, a former Wildcat soccer star. McHugh, an '81 graduate, qualified for the All Tri-State first team in both his junior and senior years at V.U.

"Coaching is much harder mentally," McHugh explained. "It's easier to play than to discuss playing."

ssistant Soccer Coach Dave cHugh

cHugh still plays soccer competitively. He is a member of the U. Soccer Club, part of the Uni- Leagues of Philadelphia. Even-though "I'd still rather play soccer," McHugh has made the transition from player to coach. Understandably, he is coaching players only two to three years his junior. "The closeness in age could work both positively and negatively in this situation," he admits. "Basically it's positive because I can relate to them — not only in soccer, but in life in general. The kids could take advantage of me but it would be their own loss." Laughing, he adds, "Listen to me — I'm calling them kids!"

Also new to the soccer program is the initiation of a "B" team. Coach Clint Grimes, a Villanova student, explained, "It's not a J.V. team. A lot of kids came out after camp and it wasn't fair to cut the walk-ons. The Athletic Department decided to establish a "B" team because in order to have a J.V. team, the players would have to sign with the NCAA and would lose a year of eligibility.

"It's definitely a positive move for the future of Wildcat soccer," an enthusiastic Grimes continued. "Next year the varisty team will lose seven or eight starters, and there will be openings and injuries this season which will give some of my guys the opportunity to move up. In fact, there's not a doubt in my mind that some of my players will play varsity this year."

Coaching is a new experience for Grimes. He came to camp as a player with four years of college soccer behind him, and he is still eligible to play. "I feel I can make a better contribution as a player-coach. I may not necessarily be able to do something, but I can see what the younger kids are doing wrong and I can help them."

"I understand them because I'm close to their age," said Grimes, who will celebrate his 22nd birthday next week, "When they get tired I understand because last year that was me out there."

Grimes seems determined to succeed. This season,. he and the members of the "B" team will be working toward developing self-confidence and knowledge of the game and basic skills.

'B' Team Coach Clint Grimes

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

By STEPHEN FALLON

The 1982 Villanova women's tennis team has become a "family affair" of sorts with the addition of two sisters from Short Hills, N.J. Zenia (pronounced zen-ya) and Luba Matkiwsky are currently the number one and two ranked singles players respectively and join forces to form the number one doubles team on the squad.

Zenia, a junior transfer student from Penn State (her sister is a freshman), has led the women's tennis team to a 3-0 start and has been named the Budweiser Athlete of the Week. Tennis coach Dr. Robert Langran emphasized the importance of the addition of a player of Zenia's caliber. "She has come in and become the number one seed, by moving everyone else down a notch, our matchups are that much more favorable. The team is just that much better."

A student in the business school, Zenia has already begun to appreciate a more relaxed atmosphere surrounding the Villanova tennis program, which allows for more study time. "That's not to say that we don't work — we work hard. But we work together — that takes a lot of the pressure off. Tennis is a lot more fun for me this year."

Zenia has been playing tennis since she was 12, and, until recently, had entertained aspirations of joining the professional ranks. "Now I realize I just want to enjoy my last two years of collegiate tennis and get the most out of school while preparing for a career in the business world," remarked Zenia.

Aside from the minor problems encountered by all new students, Zenia has had very little trouble adjusting to life at Villanova. Zenia explains, "The people are very nice and the school is beautiful. I'm looking forward to spending the next two years here." Admitting that she will miss Penn State to some degree, the decision to transfer appears to have been a sound one. Zenia cites the combination of several "small" things as the force behind the change, not the least of which was the opportunity to be close to sister Luba. "We're really close and the prospect of going to the same school is exciting," added Zenia.

"Zenia is just a great addition to an already solid team and she greatly enhances our chances of reaching the NCAA tennis playoffs in the spring," said Langran.

Frosh Recruits Show Promise

By PAUL MACCHIA

The Villanova Track Team has recruited several top caliber athletes for the 1982-83 season. Coaches Charlie Jenkins and Jack Pyrah feel that these new recruits will be a solid addition to Villanova's strong and powerful team.

Among the new freshman stars are: John Keyworth, J.J. Clark, Tony O'Reilly and Martin Booker, all of whom had successful high school careers prior to attending Villanova.

Keyworth, who hails from Stockport, England and attended St. Bede's, is expected to be Villanova's next great star. Primarily an 800/1500-meter runner, Keyworth ranked as the top junior (under 19-years-old) in Britain in the 3000-meters with a time of 8:02.4. The performance betters the late Steve Prefontaine's American high school record of 8:08.0 and converts to an 8:39 two-mile, which is faster than Craig Virgin's American high school record. Keyworth has run 3:45.9 for 1500-meters and ran a 4:06 mile on a cinder track.

Keyworth's greatest thrill perhaps is his 1:49.4 800-meter time in which he was second to countryman and world record holder Sebastian Coe.

Keyworth is a man of goals. He states, "My main goal is ultimately to keep improving."

J.J. Clark, who is from South Orange, N.J. and attended Columbia High School, was one of the country's best high school middle-distance runners. Clark made a mark for himself when he finished third in the Millrose Games High School Mile with a time of 4:15.2.

This summer in Chicago Clark was second in the Invitational Prep Mile, running a 4:10.9 (his best time to date). In New Jersey State competition Clark has taken Group IV titles in both the 1600- and 3200-meters. Among his other performances of note are 1:52.7 800 meters and 3:53 1500-meters.

Clark's goals for this year is "to perform to the best of my ability and to have a solid cross-country season."

Tony O'Reilly is another star in the Irish tradition of Villanova. O'Reilly hails from Dublin, where he attended St. John's and had a number-one ranking in Dublin cross-country. Among O'Reilly's credits are 3:50.2 1500-meters and 14:11.2 for the 5000-meters. Two years ago in Ireland, O'Reilly won the county cross country championship and the West Leinster school 1500-meter title.

Martin Booker is a freshman transfer student from Camden, N.J. Last year he spent one semester at South Carolina State University before coming to Villanova. Booker, who will be eligible to compete in January, has shown his talent as a hurdler and quarter-miler. His credentials include 13.5 for the 110-meter high hurdles and 51.58 for the 400-meter intermediate hurdles and a 47.1 relay leg.

Cory Evans, a walk-on fro Central High in St. Joseph, Ma should perform well in the hi jump. In a district meet Eva cleared the bar at 6'10½" but w unable to compete in the stat due to an injury. Evans is a mul talented athlete as he was nam All-City on his high school bask ball team.

Field Hockey Team Drops Pair in Tourney

By BOB HELLER

The Villanova field hockey team journeyed to Ithaca, N.Y. last weekend to participate in a tournament which pitted them against two of the strongest squads in the East, Syacuse and Ithaca.

Villanova's game on Saturday pitted the Cats against the very strong Division I team from Syracuse University. Neither team completely dominated the other. The Cats took a 1-0 lead in the first half; however after the goal was scored, the referees ruled no goal. The shot, which was taken within the scoring circle was ruled as a dangerous shot by the referees. This was a very questionable call, but arguing proved to be useless, no goal was scored. Defensively, the Cats very well, with the game highlight being a penalty stroke that was stopped by Nova sophmore goalie Lisa Buschmann. In spite of the good defensive game by the Cats they lost a tough game 2-0.

Nova field hockey team record stands at 1-3 for the 1982 season. The team's next match is away at Kutztown.

The next day, the Wildcats had to face the very physical and very strong host team, Ithaca. Ithaca was coming off of a very impressive victory over LaSalle, 7-0 the day before. Their squad consisted of mostly juniors and seniors. It also fielded three players who have participated in the Olympic Development program, one of whom participated in the National Sports Festival held earlier this year. They had much more experience than the Wildcats, whose squad is mainly freshman and sophmores.

Ithaca held the Cats scoreless in the first half while scoring most of their eight goals. Villanova finally got on the scoreboard in the second half, scoring three goals. The goals were scored by senior tricaptian Kathy Byrnes, and sophmores Amy Hutchinson and Danine DeBernardi. Hutchinson's goal was on a penalty stroke. Sophomore Robin Garcznyski had an assist on DeBernardi's goal.

The Cats outplayed Ithaca in the second half, however they still lost 8-3, making a disappointing weekend, Coach Diane Moyer, however, said, "Both games were good for us."

Despite the two losses, the Cats did not play badly overall. Freshman Sue Farne played excellently in both games and may be seeing more playing time. Excellent play was also turned in by Hutchinson at link, sophomores Bonnie Bell, Suzanne Lora, DeBernardi and senior Regina Graham at forward, and goalie Lisa Buschmann.

In more recent action, the Cats ventured to Lehigh on Tuesday but came out on the short end of a 4-1 score. The loss drops the team's record to 1-3 overall.

Defensive lapses proved to be key as Coach Diane Moyer's troops appeared to be fatigued from their recent jaunt to upper state New York · Sophomore goal tender Lisa Buschman performed adequately in the nets, but did not receive enough offensive or defensive support against the Engineers.

The sole goal scorer for the Wildcats was sophomore Sue Lora. The squad hopes to get its offensive guns untracked Monday when they play away at Kutztown State.

Still, says sophomore Marie Wozniak, "We're totally improved over last year. It will only be a while before we get it all together."

Spikers Steal Two

By JUDY ROGERS

On September 14, the volleyball team played an annual tune-up scrimmage against Penn and Delaware at Penn. "Everyone plays in a scrimmage, and it gave me a chance to see how each girl played," Coach Covell said. Last Saturday the women played two matches against FairleighDickinson and East Stroudsburg and came out victorious in both, 2-0 and 2-1 respectively. It was a best out of three tournament. "They're playing better," Covell conceded. The team's record so far is 3-3.

This year's "better" team is hoping to win the Big East tournament so they can earn a berth to the NCAA tournament. The only preparation the Wildcats will have against Big East opponents is in late October when they will play six matches in three days.

The three teams will face that weekend are Georgetown, Pittsburgh, and Notre Dame. The two teams to look out for in the Big East tournament are Pittsburgh and Georgetown. Covell feels that, "If we play up to our potential, we have the opportunity to be competitive and win."

This weekend there is an important tournament at Temple that will feature all of the top teams in the East with the exception of Pittsburgh and Penn State.

Student Killed In Accident; Five Others Receive Injuries

By LEONARD J. La BARTH

A Villanova University student was killed and five people were injured in an early-morning two-vehicle accident Sept. 26 in the Overbrook section of Philadelphia.

Monica Buckley

The victim, Monica Buckley, 9, of Absecon, N.J., was pronounced dead on arrival at the Misericordia Division of Mercy Catholic Medical Center.

Three others injured are also Villanova students: Corbin Evans, 18, of Fairfield, Ohio, Christopher Remus, 18, of Tunkhannock, Pa., and Edward Walsh, 19, of Neshannock, Pa. Evans was identified by police as the driver of the car involved in the crash.

The accident occurred at 1:45 a.m. at the intersection of Wynnewood Road and Malvern Avenue.

According to police, the accident occurred when Evans' car failed to stop at a stop sign at the intersection and hit a truck driven by Nicholas D'Alessandro, 43, of Overbrook. D'Alessandro was treated for minor injuries and released, according to a Lankenau Hospital spokeswoman.

Police said Evan's car crossed the center line, struck and rebounded off the front of the truck and traveled 40 feet before striking a utility pole at the intersection's northwest corner.

An attending nurse at Misericordia said that Buckley died from severe trauma. "It was just a formality bringing her here. She suffered a great deal," said the nurse, who asked not to be identified.

Lankenau Hospital spokeswoman Irene Prince said that Evans, Walsh and Remus were admitted in serious condition with multiple injuries and trauma. A fifth passenger in the car, Anne Fassett, 17, of Fort Meyers, Fla., was taken to Jefferson Hospital and treated for neck injuries. Fassett, a senior at Wyoming Seminary in Kingston, Pa., had been in Philadelphia to visit Buckley.

As of Wednesday, the three patients in Lankenau were reported to have improved to satisfactory condition. Fassett was listed in stable condition.

Police are conducting an investigation into the accident but no charges have been filed. The police are taking statements from eyewitnesses and those involved in the accident. A report will be filed with the Philadelphia District Attorney's office.

The students were reportedly returning from a Delta Kappa Epsilon fraternity party at a house located on 63rd Street. Assistant Director of Student Activities Gary Bonas attended a meeting of chapter members the night of the accident and confirmed that the students involved in the crash were at the party.

"Any investigation conducted will depend on a police report," said Bonas. "We can't even write a preliminary report without the information in a complete form." DKE's national office was contacted Monday morning.

According to Bonas, Villanova has a limited jurisdiction level concerning off-campus activities. "It's difficult to do something," Bonas said. "The University has minimal liability for a fraternity party held at a fraternity house off-campus."

Bonas said that chapter revocation would be the last step taken in lieu of any discipline taken against the chapter.

A Burial Mass was held Wednesday for Buckley at the St. Elizabeth Ann Seton Church, Absecon Shore, N.J., and a memorial mass will be held in Villanova's Main Chapel on Oct. 5.

Enrollment Stays Steady; National Average Down

By PEGGIE WARD

According to unofficial figures released by the Registrar's Office, approximately 1,650 freshmen have matriculated at Villanova for the 1982-83 academic year.

The University received just under 7,000 applications for the fall semester, and accepted 4,000 of those who applied. Full-time undergraduate enrollment including the law school, graduate school and University College increases that figure to almost 11,000.

The College of Arts and Sciences has the largest number of freshmen this fall with a total of 709. In the College of Commerce and Finance, 436 freshmen are enrolled. The College of Engineering has 359 freshmen registered and the College of Nursing, 150 new students this fall.

According to the University's figures, 93 percent of this year's freshman class comes from Pennsylvania, New Jersey, New York, Connecticut, Maryland and Massachusetts. This marks the first time that Maryland has moved ahead of Massachusetts in the number of freshmen from that state.

The average SAT score for the accepted freshman was 505 verbal and 557 math, down from last year's average of 511 verbal and 563 math.

University figures reveal that 45 percent of the incoming freshmen were in the top one-fifth of their respective high school classes, while 79 percent were in the top two-fifths of their high school classes.

"The quality of our applicants has increased," said The Rev. Harry Erdlen O.S.A., dean of undergraduate admissions. The average SAT score is higher as is the average rank in class."

The ratio of males to females in the freshmen class is 56 percent to 44 percent. It is estimated that 88 percent of the freshmen are Roman Catholic and that 20 percent have some alumni affiliation. The minority enrollment in the freshmen class is 2 percent.

Rev. Harry Erdlen, O.S.A., dean of admissions.

In contrast to a national trend away from private colleges, Villanova has not experienced a decline in undergraduate enrollment. To the contrary, according to Erdlen, "Our overall enrollment is at a high point."

Deegan Letter Revealed

Editors' Note: This letter (inset) has recently been obtained by the Villanovan. With the ongoing discussion about the end of football at Villanova, the editorial board feels that this letter, written in May 1981, may provide additional insight.

The letter appears in its entirety, unedited.

May 21, 1981

Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A.
President
Villanova University
Villanova, PA 19085

Dear John:

I am writing to let you know of my unflinching support of you and the Board of Trustees in your decision to drop football. It was a courageous decision and the right one.

It is my opinion, after ten years at Villanova, that football does not contribute to the mission of Villanova University. We are not or should we ever be a training ground for the pros. The "meat market" that was conducted after our decision to drop football is proof positive that collegiate football is no longer the character builder that we academicians would like to believe that it is.

Do not let a vociferous minority deter you from your rightful path of emphasizing academic excellence. No compromise can be made in this decision. A football team at any division level is not acceptable. There is no way that Villanova can justify the expenditure of one dollar for football when our academic and other needs are so great.

In my years as Vice President for Student Life, I have become convinced that the Football Program has been counter productive to what I have been trying to develop in the student life area. My staff has spent untold hours dealing with discipline and other problems stemming from the football mentality. The intimidation of and threats against other students by football players has saddened me. The theft ring among the football players that we could never break because the individual students (some of them football players) were frightened for their very lives, has made me ask again and again. "Is this what Villanova is about?"

John, we are well rid of it. Please don't compromise! You are right! Insist on your decision. Tens of thousands are behind you!

Again, if there is anything that I can do for you on this or any other issue, I stand ready to serve.

God bless you and thank you for everything.

Sincerely,
Rev. John E. Deegan, O.S.A.
Vice President for Student Life

Edgar Speaks On Campus

by LISA M. FEDERICO

Congressman Robert Edgar spoke at Villanova on Sept. 27, in an appearance co-sponsored by the Villanova Political Union and the College Democrats.

Edgar, a fourth-term Democratic congressman from Pennsylvania's Seventh District, called for an end of federal cuts in student aid. "There will be bombs dropped on us if we don't realize that our internal strengths, like education, must be aided, not just our external defenses," said Edgar.

Stating his political view on abortion Edgar said, "I do not support a constitutional amendment to stop abortion. However, I do feel that government funds should not be spent for abortions except in the cases of saving the mother's life, incest or rape."

In response to the circular being distributed by the Villanova College Republicans entitled "Edgar Flip-Flops On Registration," Edgar reiterated his opposition to draft registration. "We ought to continue an all-volunteer military and increase the pay and education benefits," Edgar said.

Edgar called for legislation to reduce the penalties for those who choose not to register, and reforms to include an indication space for conscientious objectors on the draft registration forms.

Edgar also spoke against current federal policies. "President Reagan is and has been one of the most successful presidents, too successful for our good. His budget policies will result in tragic economic conditions in our life-time," said Edgar.

According to Edgar, there are two choices for the United States. "We can either change our present course or face catastrophically high deficits that will effect our society for five to ten years."

In addressing the problem of balancing the federal budget, Edgar proposed cuts in military defense spending. "Defense should be strong but practical," said Edgar. "What the federal budget needs are sounder management principles."

The National Student Political Action Committee will formally announce today their endorsement of Edgar at a 4:30 p.m. press conference to be held in the Villanova Room at the Connelly Center. Edgar will be present to meet with the leaders of the committee.

Republicans Give Joachim Support

By TIM HANLON

The College Republicans hosted representatives from the Steve Joachim for Congress Committee and the John Heinz Senatorial Re-election Campaign on Sept. 28, at the Connelly Center.

At the meeting, the College Republicans endorsed Joachim, supporting his issues including tax credits for private schools, abolition of federally funded abortions and increased Social Security and Federal Student Loan guarantees.

At a Sept. 23 sign-up for the Joachim Committee for Congress, 15 students pledged campaign support for the committee's work. Eighteen students were attracted to Tuesday's meeting.

Rob Bickhart, representing Joachim, stressed the idea of making it a "credible campaign."

"People in this district may have only registered as Republicans to get their streets plowed in winter," Bickhart said.

"These are only 'moderate Republicans' who may be liberal and switch their votes to Edgar," Bickhart said.

The majority of voters in the Seventh Congressional District, which encompasses most of Delaware County and a portion of Southwest Philadelphia, is Republican. Most of Joachim's $500,000 campaign budget is being used for advertising

Angela Scully, representing Heinz, stressed the need of college involvement in promoting the campaigns.

According to Scully, Heinz and Joachim agree on most of the issues, including the Pell Amendment to restore the Federal Student Loan Guarantee.

Joachim is a graduate of Temple University, where he was an all-American quarterback. He played one season for the New York Jets. In addition, Joachim is a Springfield Township commissioner and a member of the Springfield Jaycees' board of directors.

Drinking Policy Needs Revision

The facts are all too familiar. Some Villanova students head off-campus to a party on a Saturday night, in this case to West Philadelphia. They have a good time, and maybe drink too much. On their way home, there is an accident. One of them is killed, the others are seriously injured. All you have to do is change the names and the dates, and you realize that the same thing recurs year after year.

No one can deny that the University's policy towards alcohol on-campus is very restrictive. Ever since the Liquor Control Board raided a University-sponsored Cat's Eye a few years ago, it's been virtually impossible to drink on-campus without having to wade through a sea of forms, seminars, prohibitions and other types of administrative red tape, all in order to possibly provide the school with some protection from legal liability. Supposedly, in the process, the University has also been trying to teach students how to drink "responsibly."

But let's look at what has really been the result. Have students cut down on their consumption of alcohol? Have they learned that it's not absolutely necessary to get drunk to have a good time? It's doubtful.

About the only thing that's been accomplished by the stringent on-campus alcohol policy is that it's driven more students off-campus to drink, to fraternity houses, to bars and to the houses and apartments of friends. Instead of providing answers to the problem of students drinking, all University policy has done, in effect, is sweep the problem under the rug, or at least outside of Villanova's boundaries. And there's where the real problem lies.

The only thing that can be worse than drinking until your brain has turned to mush and your reflexes are shot is doing it and then getting behind the wheel of a machine that requires both your brain and your reflexes to perform at optimum levels. The two just don't go together. But because the conditions on-campus make it more desirable for many to go somewhere else to party, it's inevitable that tragedies such as the one this past weekend will occur.

So what should be done? Should Villanova simply continue with its current alcohol policy and gamble that accidents like this past weekend's won't happen again? To do so would be not only unrealistic but grossly negligent. Should, then, all restrictions on the on-campus consumption of alcohol be abolished and students given carte blanche to do whatever they want? Again, this opposite extreme is equally unrealistic.

It's difficult to come up with a concrete solution. To find a perfect median between excessive control and no control at all would require an immense effort on the part of the University. But wouldn't it be worth it if it would prevent another tragedy?

Deegan's Letter

We find the letter about the decision to drop football in 1981 written by the Rev. John Deegan, O.S.A., former vice-president for student life here and current president of Merrimack College, to be quite interesting. It certainly revealed a few things that we were never aware of.

We weren't aware that Villanova was ever in danger of becoming a "training ground" for the pros. Nor were we aware that an unbreakable theft ring existed or that there were students "frightened for their very lives" by the football players. And wouldn't you know it, we weren't even aware that "tens of thousands" supported the dropping of the program.

We guess we should be grateful for Deegan's consideration in protecting us from these awful "truths."

Shouldn't we be?

Letters to the Editor

Students Demand Alcohol Reform

To the Editor:

The blame for last Saturday night's tragedy can be placed on any of the three groups involved. It could justifiably be placed on the driver and the passengers of the car for driving while drunk. Or it could be placed on the fraternity brothers for not detaining potential drunk drivers from leaving the party for a while. But in my opinion, the largest amount of responsibility must be placed on Villanova University itself.

The school's strict alcohol policy has forced parties and students off campus, making it necessary to use cars to get home from these social events. We live in the 1980s, when most schools have adjusted their alcohol policies to encourage students to stay on campus for their own safety. But this school has insisted on living in the past, and as a result every Saturday night students are driving home drunk. It is pure luck that accidents like last weekend's do not occur more frequently.

I am not suggesting that Villanova be turned into a massive party school. I just ask that the administration learns a positive lesson from this tragedy and seriously re-evaluate the alcohol policy on campus. If this is not done, then there is nothing to stop more accidents from happening, and the school will have to bear the responsibility for all of them.

To the Editor:

Sunday morning the students of Villanova were greeted with the news that yet another student had lost a life returning from an off-campus event. I'm sure that this news will be the talk of the campus for a week or so and then it will slowly fade from our memories until . . . next time.

How many precious lives can be lost before someone re-evaluates and re-establishes student life policy on this campus? How can we continue with a policy that year after year results in the death of innocent young people? We cannot merely hope that the news of this event will fade and that it may not happen again, for we have seen that it does happen again and again.

The policy established here is similar to the child and the cookie jar analogy. The harder it is to get the cookies — the higher the cookie jar is placed — the more desirable the cookies become. The child will risk anything to get to the cookies. The alcohol policy on this campus has followed this mode of thinking. Rather than teaching the students "responsible drinking," alcohol on this campus has become like water in a desert. Anything alcoholic on this campus (because of its scarcity) leads students into a frenzy of "irresponsible drinking." The alcohol policy has led to drinking behind doors, drinking alone — the first signs of alcoholism. Rather than showing us that alcohol is a socially prominent aspect of our society, our alcohol policy has tried to suppress this social fact by its limitations. The policy has dictated how much, when, where and how we should drink; and anything that is forced upon a person results in rebellion to it. Rebellion comes in the form of vandalism, off-campus activities which can't be relegated and a perverted ("we'll show them") attitude toward alcohol.

It seems very evident that Villanova's alcohol policy has backfired. I do realize that there are some difficulties involved in an expanded alcohol policy but I feel strongly that these problems will be greatly outweighed by the social unity developed by campus-wide activities, the true understanding of "responsible drinking." More important, it will be outweighed by the precious lives that could be saved, which should be the foremost concern of all of us and which should supercede all "policies" and dictatorial regulations.

I have not written this letter with any malice towards anyone, but with the intent of re-evaluating a policy which appears to be detrimental. Forgetting about past mistakes only leads us to repeat them. Let us not forget what has happened, and let us correct our policy so that it may not repeat itself.

To the Editor:

My past two weekends at Villanova have been marred by three serious accidents. I feel that something must be done. We must start the hall rolling and let the administration know we are concerned. We need to make Villanova's campus more inviting to students on weekends. A few suggestions to obtain this goal are as follows: one might be to let students hold parties in the Field House. Another would be to have an open beer policy in the dorms on Friday and Saturday nights. And finally, there is the idea that fraternities and sororities should hold parties on campus. These are a few of the many possibilities.

If some positive changes were to be made concerning parties on campus, I feel more students would stay at Villanova on the weekends. This way people would not be driving anywhere and this would decrease the risk of more serious accidents happening. I realize that there will be off-campus parties and students will go, but if there was a change in the University's policy maybe more students would stay on-campus and off the roads.

The Villanovan is the newspaper of record for Villanova University.

To the Editor:

It is so senseless; those who feel that social life should be repressed are without foresight and lacking in sensitive knowledge of the young college student. Drinking and socializing can not and will not be stamped out. It will only be reinterpreted and relocated to places far away from an overbearing campus. This entails the dangerous, even fatal aspect of driving.

There is plenty of land here for a fraternity row. The Connelly Center lemon sits practically unused; endless rooms, all empty, that close early. And on a Saturday night Villanova social life is non-existent. There are no movies. The library is closed. The entire university seems to shut down. For aspiring social citizens, thrills and chills exist elsewhere.

Who do we blame for a tragic, purposeless death? Those who were drinking? Those who provided those drinks? Or does this, in actuality, go farther and farther back to the near-sighted administration which, through its actions, encourages off-campus partying?

How much does it take? How many lives must be sacrificed before President Driscoll decides that, although he doesn't appear to be, the students of this university are human? That they need an escape? That a stifled social life promotes constant, intense rebellion? And sometimes results in death?

ROTC Reply

To the Editor:

Ever since President Franklin D. Roosevelt selected Villanova as one of the 12 colleges to establish the famous V-12 program, Villanova has been training prospective service officers. Villanova's NROTC program is an integral part of the University, and also ranks among the John Paul Jones' "gentlemen of liberal education" and motivated and dedicated defenders of democracy and international stability.

One reason for the five-week, morning freshmen indoctrination program is to teach discipline, clear thought, punctuality and motivation. Motivation is displayed in a midshipman's enthusiasm and desire to receive and respond to commands. Charlie Company freshmen are not playing "Romper Room" by yelling "Yes, Sir" in the morning; they are learning motivation.

This invigorating training is waking a few "names withheld" in the morning. The Alumni Hall residents suggest that Charlie Company morning drills be relocated to the rugby field and thereby dump the "noise problem" on local neighborhood residents living on Barley Cone Lane. Shifting the "noise" to another area would also present transportation, equipment, administration and control difficulties to the unit.

During this short indoctrination period, it might be suggested that more Alumni windows be shut or that Alumni Hall be relocated in the name of those Villanovans who have led men to their own deaths during the last 40 years.

'Infirmary Seven'

To the Editor:

As far as the "Infirmary Seven" are concerned, they should appreciate being given housing on campus. Many other freshmen have not been so lucky.

At least one of the seven sounds like she needs to stay in the infirmary or get some other kind of help. Personally, I appreciate the help I have received from the people in the Office of Residence Life.

30 New Speakers Join Bureau

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

The Villanova Speakers Bureau, having increased its membership to one-third of the University's faculty and staff, is now able to offer over 450 speech topics to community and school groups and play a role in the University's community relations effort, according to Eugene Ruane, director of public relations.

Through the Speakers Bureau, groups can arrange for a speaker to come and give a presentation. There are speakers from every department at Villanova. Each year, the Public Relations office sends out an invitation to every faculty and staff member to either renew or join the Speakers Bureau.

"We have a lot of willing faculty here who are experts in their field and are willing to share their knowledge," said Ruane. This year, he said, there are 30 new members, the largest membership increase in the Bureau's six-year history. "There are obviously more faculty members interested now after seeing how successful it is," said Ruane.

Of the 103 members, "trends determine who are the most popular speakers," said Ruane. "Current events such as economics and foreign policy have been a recent trend," said Ruane.

Under 47 different subject headings, an organization choosing their topic of interest must fill out a speaker's request form. The Public Relations Office contacts the speaker to set and confirm the date and time. "I have always been able to satisfy all of the requests. Any rejection is usually due to schedule conflicts in which case I call the groups second choice," said Sara Karr Gowing, Speakers Bureau coordinator.

Evaluation forms are sent to each group to fill out after the speaker's presentation. "There have always been excellent responses," said Gowing. Ruane added, "We are so delighted to have such a nice association. No one has ever criticized a speaker. The Villanova Speakers Bureau is a tremendous success."

The honorarium policy is constructed to place the burden on those who requested the speaker. "Generally, the group is encouraged to pay at least the expense of the speakers," said Ruane. "However, if a particular group can't manage to cover the cost, it is not pushed."

Moral Majority Debated

By JACK McARDLE

The executive director of the American Civil Liberties Union of Philadelphia, Hilda Silverman, was the guest speaker at the Villanova Political Union's first debate, Sept. 27.

The resolution read: "This house proposes that the Moral Majority poses a threat to individual freedom." It passed by a 13-12 margain with two abstentions.

Silverman, who has been director of the ACLU since 1979, began her presentation by stating that the Moral Majority is "a threat."

"It's up to us and the people we elect," Silverman said, "if that threat could ever be carried out. The ACLU believes that the Moral Majority wishes to capture the power of government and use it to establish a nightmare of religious and political orthodoxy."

Silverman also said that the ACLU feels that the Moral Majority is "dangerously deceptive."

"They appear to represent American patriotism because they wrap themselves in the American flag and use words like 'family' and 'life' and 'tradition'."

According to Silverman, the ACLU disputes the Moral Majority's stance because of its threatening viewpoint towards the First Amendment, academic freedom and "denial to whole groups of people equal protection of the law."

"Make no mistakes about them," Silverman said. "The new evangelicals are not a conservative movement."

Silverman also said that the Moral Majority "represents government intrusion and seeks to overthrow traditional values."

Following Silverman's address Conservative Party Chairperson Tom Harrington took the podium and complained that groups like the Moral Majority are necessary to the political process. "They must be allowed to voice their opinions," he said.

Harrington also disputed Silverman's claim that the Moral Majority poses a threat to individual freedom.

Moderate Party Chairperson Michelle Teston debated that the Moral Majority's agenda should never be made into law because "it is wrong to try to legislate morality. Morals tend to change from generation to generation, but laws do not."

Mary Duff, the Liberal Party Chairperson, agreed with Silverman's evaluation of the Moral Majority. She disputed the name "Majority" on the grounds that the group does not have enough members to be a majority, "not even a large minority." Duff cited figures from a University of Michigan study which showed only 5 percent of the American population having a favorable attitude towards the group.

Smoking: a Suicidal Habit

By CATHY PILIERO

Tuesday afternoon, I rushed into the bathroom in school, but I immediately had to rush right out. About 10 girls were in there polluting the air and themselves with cigarettes. This happens to me at least once a day, but I'll still never be able to figure it out. Why would anyone do that to himself?

"Cigarettes are the killers that travel in packs." That quote is taken from a book called Preventing Cancer, and I agree with it. They will kill you. Before they do that, though, they'll cause other problems like aesthetic deterioration and horrible diseases.

It doesn't take a medical expert to realize smoking causes lung cancer because it's most commonly associated with cigarettes. Lung cancer is curable in only 30% of the reported cases. The reason for this low cure rate is that by the time the symptoms appear, the disease is usually in a stage too late for treatment. It's also hard to detect.

Right now, lung cancer is the most common cancer among men. For women it's breast cancer, but within the next ten years, lung cancer is expected to be the number-one killer. Why? Because more and more of them are picking up the smoking habit.

Lung cancer is just one of the diseases caused by smoking. Esophageal, laryngeal and pharyngeal cancers are caused by direct exposure to inhaled smoke. Lip and oral cancers can be induced even if one does not inhale.

Kidney and bladder cancers can also be caused by smoking. This happens when the body tries to rid itself of carcinogens through the urinary tract. The usual treatment for advanced cancer in this system is removal of the organ. This means the person with bladder cancer will have a hole in his lower abdomen (a stoma) for metabolic waste removal.

Even though these diseases have been proven to be the consequences, most smokers will continue their suicidal habit and use the excuse "I'm gonna die of something anyway." But there are still more good reasons not to smoke.

Everyone wants to be attractive, but smoking will ruin your looks. Most people would agree that if smoking affected their external anatomies the same way it does their internal, they'd quit. Well, it won't turn your face black, like it does your lungs, but it will wrinkle it. When smokers inhale, they encourage lines around their mouths. They also tend to squint a lot to keep the smoke out of their eyes and this leads to "crow's feet."

Smoking also makes people unappealing because their hair, clothes and breath stink.

Why would some people continue or start such a self-destructive habit despite so many good reasons not to? There are a few theories. Freud would think smokers are people who haven't resolved the oral phase of psychosexual development. Behaviorists would blame it on peer pressure and parental influence.

But I blame it on advertising. Since we live in a society so oriented towards looking good, advertisers use that to sell cigarettes. Attractive female models try to make smoking look like an elegant, feminine habit. Handsome, rugged men try to make it look masculine. My theory is that when impressionable, usually young people are disatisfied with themselves, they'll pick up the habit, thinking it will make them more acceptable.

Therefore, the solution is in advertising. More commercials should be shown promoting how appealing a person can be if he doesn't smoke. Brooke Shields' anti-smoking commercial emphasizes this point. She hates to be near smokers after she washes her hair. I don't blame her; I wouldn't want my hair to stink, either.

The best way to promote nonsmoking would be to use grotesque realism. A woman sunbathing, with deep wrinkles, yellow teeth and a bikini that reveals her stoma would be an ideal ad. A laryngectomized man holding a cigarette to the hole in his throat would also get the point across.

If a person smokes after seeing pictures of people with body parts missing due to smoking-related diseases, nothing will make him quit. I think it's crazy, but people do have the right to ruin their bodies. They shouldn't be allowed to do it to anyone else's, though. Non-smoking areas are set aside for our consideration in planes, restaurants . . . but they aren't enough because the room still fills up with smoke.

If it were up to me, smokers would have their own restaurants, stores, schools and public bathrooms, so we non-smokers could eat, learn, urinate and breathe clean air at the same time.

ATRA: Still Going Strong

By NANCY ALBERICI

Looking back on ATRA's first year of operation, coaches, athletes and students alike agree that it is a valuable addition to the University. Located behind the Field House, ATRA provides the students with an easily accessible training facility equipped with 20 Nautilus machines.

The independently owned sports training system was established on campus because the University felt it would benefit the athletes. Peter Halsch, the owner and director of ATRA, approached the University with his offer last year. Athletic Director, Dr. Ted Aceto stated, "We thought it was best for the varsity athletes to train on campus. No one offered to bring the center to the campus except Halsch." Additionally, Aceto noted that Halsch, who is also a trainer at his center in Paramus, N.J., brought his expertise to this program.

Halsch's reasonable rates were another factor considered. Aceto added, "Halsch offered a reduced price compared to area Nautilus's for students, faculty and staff. If the student athletes that train were counted, the cost would be astronomical if you went somewhere else."

Since Halsch is funding the varsity athletes and meeting expenses, he is just breaking even. According to Jim Brown, financial director for athletics, Halsch's expenses include his phone bill, maintenance of the trailer, mailing expenses and the salaries of the trainers. Halsch explained that his added expenses for this year include 12 new trainers and new equipment worth $12,000.

Halsch commented, "It doesn't benefit me at all financially. It is a $160,000 clinic that was funded by Paramus and is not a money maker." He continued, "the reason why I came to Villanova is because of the caliber of the athlete we have here and the need of a strength-training program. That's half of it. The second half is that it provides an added on-campus activity."

Varsity athletes train for free, while club sports pay a reduced rate. When asked why club sports pay, Halsch explained, "Although all sports are hard working and just as dedicated, it is purely a matter of dollars and cents. Somewhere we had to draw the line and it was drawn at varsity athletes. We can only accommodate a certain amount of people or we couldn't get going and run things." He further commented, "Any club sport can be accommodated with a group rate."

John Traynor who coaches crew, a club sport, is pleased with ATRA. "We think it is a great program. The fact that club sports don't use ATRA for free doesn't outweigh the benefits we receive."

Various team coaches are pleased with the team program. Swim Coach Ed Guise commented, "We never could have won eight meets without it. We are so delighted we can use it and feel we will have another successful season with it."

Several coaches also agree that ATRA has reduced the amount of injuries incurred by their athletes. Guise replied, "There isn't much tendonitis due to Pete's program. His program is much better than others." Paul Cormier, assistant basketball coach, also noticed a decrease in injuries. "I'm sure ATRA has helped in preventing injuries. Our kids feel they're in better shape and stronger at the outset of the season and are not getting worn down by their basketball schedule."

Along with the coaches, athletes find ATRA rewarding. Basketball player Ed Pinckney commented that using ATRA "has proved to be beneficial and has improved my jumping ability."

When asked what the future holds for ATRA, Halsch said, "There are many possibilities for growth, not all of them are limited to the trainer. The purpose is not a 'do all, end all' one, but rather one to test the potential for the future."

Deter Crime with Common Sense

By SUE FRENCH

Every Villanova student is a potential crime victim. Each year, the Radnor Township Police investigate assorted thefts and assaults in which Villanova students are the victims. Some of these students live off-campus in apartments and houses. They, unlike the on-campus residents, must provide their own security.

"In Radnor Township the college student is not as prone to burglary as other residents because the majority of them live in dormitories," said Detective William M. Zimmerman. He continued, "As far as off-campus residents are concerned, thefts do not occur in that many instances. They are more susceptible to theft in the parking lot." Zimmermann noted that car stereos and cassette decks were two likely targets of theives.

A large number of Villanova students live in areas other than Radnor, where the crime rate could be higher. Zimmermann stressed that all Villanova women face a "high potential" for rape because the high concentration of women on the campus at a given time make them likely targets.

Police figures list three rapes for the year 1980-81. While three were reported, Zimmermann noted that it is possible that others may have occured but went unreported.

The best protection from rape, believes Zimmermann, is common sense. He advised: "Do not put yourself in a bad position; be cognizant of what you're doing; always have your key in your hand and don't take shortcuts through the alley. If you feel something's not right, pay attention to your 'sixth sense.'"

Zimmerman recommends carrying mace only if an individual is convinced he can use it. "Too often we find it is used against the victim," he added.

On a wide scale basis, Zimmermann believes that common sense is much more valuable in preventing attacks.

Other crime statistics in Radnor township for the 1980-81 year include: 607 larcenies, 190 burglaries, eight robberies, 29 assaults and battery cases and 71 auto thefts.

Zimmermann explained the importance of "target hardening" property to deter thieves. This includes permanently engraving valuables such as stereos and typewriters with a driver's license number, installing sturdy locks and making a home look "lived in," even if it isn't. The extended vacations Villanova students have between semesters greatly increase the chances of theft, Zimmermann added.

Tips to avoid theft and attack while at home are: keep the doors and windows locked; never open the door before verifying who is there; have someone watch your dwelling while you are away and install deadbolt locks on your doors. Some helpful suggestions concerning a car are: check the interior of the car before entering; park in well lit areas; walk near the curb against the traffic and walk with someone whenever possible.

Landlords ae not required by any criminal code to provide any certain measure of security, said Zimmermann. "If any students feel anything should be done to protect their property, they should bring it to their landlords's attention," he stated. The Crime Protection Unit does complimentary home inspections by appointment and offers home protection advice. Anyone interested should contact the Radnor Police Department.

Look Out for Deese,

By JANE ASHTON

Schleppie-ism. What exactly is it? Quite simply, it is a way of life which requires years of breeding, a contemptible background and a genuine appreciation for the coarse things in life. To be included in the ranks of schlepa is to rub shoulders with Sylvester Stallone, Typhoid Mary and any Brooklyn greaser. It is a culture with its own heritage, style and customs — it is schleppie-ism.

The term "schleppie" was coined in 1924 by Dr. Helmut von Grinkstein of the Northern Mozambique Clinic for Social Studies. He derived it from the verb "schlep" which describes a manner of walking, i.e., "a skulking, slinking shuffle." As a result of studies funded by the Two-Dot, Mont. Ladies' Aid Society, he identified a breed of human beings who displayed traits which sociologically stratified them. Along with a schlepping mode of walking, these people shared characteristics which have been labelled in later studies; Dr. von Grinkstein called these people "schleppies."

The earliest signs of schleppie-ism are generally traced to Cain, the son of Adam and Eve. Not only did he pioneer the messy and filthy look, but he displayed the "Do-I-look-like-my-brother's-wet-nurse?" attitude that is so typically schleppie. Other precursors of the modern-day schleppie breed are Genghis Khan (anyone who spent most of his life ravaging the countryside was not a "nice" person), King Henry VIII (in spite of the wealth and the title, Hank's well-known physical appetites pin-pointed him as a schlep) and Mort "Sleazeball" Scuzzio (from Flatbush and Avenue J in Brooklyn — particularly notable because he did absolutely nothing with his life).

An important part of this culture is the style. Non-schleppies would call it lack of style, but since real schleppies consider non-schleps to be on the same level as moldy bagels, they do not care what anyone else thinks. Basic ingredients of the schleppie wardrobe are the floodwater jeans (the leg cuffs extend only to mid-calf), a tie-dyed or food-stained T-shirt, a pair of A&P $1.87 sneakers and a cracked leather jacket. This outfit is unisex, but some women may wish to modify the "tough" look with a plunging neckline or a see-through blouse. Clothes are not everything, however. More important than having the right wardrobe is mastering the language. There are many dialects of "schleppese," the most famous being Brooklynese. Yet saying "dese," "dem" and "dose" (these, them and those) does not make one a schleppie. Knowing all twenty-seven synonyms for "policeman" does.

Tying in closely with the schleppie style are the schleppie customs. These social mores are necessary for "inter-schlep identification." What else could there be that compels Gloria from Detroit to strike up a friendship with Roxanne from South Los Angeles rather than with Lindsay from Princeton? Where Lindsay would help an elderly woman onto the train, Roxanne would shove the old bag out of her way. Where Lindsay would ask the teacher "could you please explain that once more?," Roxanne would say "what the hell are you talking about?" Lindsay abstains from alcoholic beverages; Roxanne gets blasted every other night. Lindsay perspires; Roxanne sweats. Without these customs, a young lady like Roxanne would be buried among the Lindsays of this world.

Schleppies are an elite breed: a race which has survived centuries of abuse and anonymity. Now, thanks to the work of Dr. von Grinkstein and others, schleppies everywhere can belch (not as loudly as they want). After all, without schleppies, this world would only be a large conglomeration of . . . non-schleps!

Campus Ministry PERSPECTIVES

By REV. JOHN P. STACK, O.S.A.

By now everyone on campus is aware of the tragic accident that took place last weekend. The death of Monica Buckley and the pain caused by the serious injury to Chris Remus, Cori Evans and Ed Walsh have been felt by all of us.

After spending much of last Sunday at the hospital I returned to celebrate the 6 p.m. Eucharist in the Main Chapel. During the homily I noted that despite the fact that we are blessed by so many fine young people who choose to come to Villanova, there exists, in my opinion, an attitude of irresponsibility among some of them.

What follows is a further reflection on this attitude. By no means am I singling out the men and women involved in the Sunday morning accident or, for that matter, those involved with the P&W accident or the car accident of the previous week. Rather, I hope that these accidents taken together may serve as a focal point upon which we may all reflect and grow.

When a student enrolls at Villanova, what should he or she expect to experience? Quite obviously and quite simply, a good education. But because of its Catholic tradition and Augustinian heritage, how does Villanova strive to achieve this in a manner that distinguishes it from other institutions of higher education? Three characteristics come to mind: community, service and preaching.

First, Villanova sees itself as a place where learning takes place in an atmosphere of people who care about one another. Faculty, administration, and staff are concerned with fostering a sense of community. Why? Quite clearly because it is one of the foremost Gospel values. If a Christian spirit pervades the campus, if people know that others care, they can be freer to pursue their education and search for truth.

Villanova also seeks to provide an atmosphere where the Gospel may be preached. Through the call to faith one is encouraged to examine one's beliefs, to search for truth and to reflect on one's relationship with God. It is through preaching that one's faith is challenged and that we are given the space to listen to and respond to God's Word. Not all preaching is from the pulpit. Faculty, staff and administration seek to preach by sharing their faith with students and with each other, inside and outside the classroom.

Lastly, the effect of the proclamation of the Gospel and the attempt to build a Christian community is seen through the efforts of administration, faculty and staff who daily strive to be of service to the students. This service may take many forms, but it is based upon the example of Christ who came to serve, not to be served.

With these characteristics in mind, what then should the administration, faculty and staff expect of students? Once again it may be simply stated that they expect students to be responsible enough to do all in their power to become a better educated person. But is that sufficient?

I believe that by choosing to come to Villanova students have made a statement about their own expectations of a university. The university in turn must ask questions of its students.

To what degree have students taken the responsibility for their own education? Have students allowed themselves to be challenged or have they settled for mediocrity remaining content to do as little work as possible?

To what extent have students taken the responsibility to building up the community in general and their own living situation in particular? Have Villan ovans learned the important role that self-respect and respect for others play in building a Christian community?

Have students here at Villanova taken the responsibility for the development of their own faith? The atmosphere is here for students to reflect upon their relationship to God, on prayer, on death, on their own religious identity and on their life goals. Do students use part of their time to look at these important questions? Do our students respect the beliefs of those who preach something different?

Have students taken the responsibility to be of genuine service to others? How many have had the courage to be of service by kindly confronting other students who may have an irresponsible attitude toward alcohol, drugs or sex?

The events of last weekend were nothing short of tragic, but they provide us all with the opportunity to look at some serious questions. If we choose not to do so then we have not learned from the experience of others, and if we fail to learn, we fail to become responsible persons. The decision to grow is ours alone.

The Who Still Cause a Big Sensation

By DEAN C. BALSAMINI

Close to 100,000 people jammed J.F.K. Stadium last Saturday to see the Hooters, Santana, the Clash, and the Who.

The Hooters, a local band, admirably performed a 40-minute set which included the crowd pleaser, "All You Zombies." Santana followed with a crisp set that seemed to go unnoticed by the crowd.

The Clash came next and performed twelve songs that included "Rock the Casbah," "Clampdown" and "London Calling." The crowd initially responded enthusiasticaly but then, for no apparent reason, lost interest. This seems to be the rule rather than the exception of outdoor concerts. The crowd gets restless and wants to see the headliners, in this case, the Who.

Well, the group that once wrote, "Hope I Die Before I Get Old" is still going strong after 18 years. But if last week's concert here was indeed the Who's final appearance, they sure went out in style.

Belting out 23 songs in what sounded like a greatest hits album, the band put on a whale of a show. Peter Townshend looked fit and trim clad in a blue cutoff shirt, dungarees, leather jacket and sneakers. Townshend has said he is feeling great now that he is winning his bout with alcoholism. Roger Daltery, whose voice does not seem to have lost much, was dressed smartly in a turquoise suit with John Entwistle fitted in purple.

The band hit the stage a little after 4 p.m. and broke into "Substitute," followed by "Can't Explain." The Who has begun its performances with these two songs for years. Although impossible to satisfy everyone, the Who did its best, playing songs from a number of its albums. Highlighted albums were "Quadrophenia" and "Who's Next." Several songs from the rock-opera "Tommy" were also performed. The band also introduced material from its latest LP, "It's Hard." Songs included "Cry If You Want" and "Eminence Front," a song that the crowd embraced warmly. The Who did not bother playing much from the recent "Face Dances" album, an LP that did not receive much critical acclaim.

Enthusiastic throughout, the crowd was its loudest during anthem classics "Baba O'Reilly" and "Won't Get Fooled Again." Daltery twirled the microphone like a cowboy would his lasso while Townshend ignited the crowd with his patented scissors splits and windmills. Kenney Jones' machine gun drumming proved that he finally feels comfortable with the band. Entwistle, not unlike the Rock of Gibraltar supplied the steady, thumping bass lines.

After finishing the regular set with "Won't Get Fooled Again" (in which Daltry let go with an earth-trembling scream), the crowd stomped and cheered for the band to return.

In what Daltrey called the "audience participation" part of the show, The Who started the first of two encores with "Magic Bus." Townshend cried "You can't have it!" while Daltrey answered "I want it!" "I want it!" and the crowd responded "Magic Bus!"

The band chose to perform as its final encore "Twist and Shout" by you know who. The song seemed very symbolic in its innocence of what rock 'n' roll used to be about. Older fans remembered what was while younger fans thought of what they had missed.

As "Twist and Shout" ended, the crowd cheered in delight. The Who took a bow and said thank you very much. No farwell speeches or rhetoric for that is just not the Who's style.

Overall, the Who gave a splendid, tight performance. But realistically they cannot be expected to tour much longer. Both Daltery and Townshend are close to 40 years old. Physically, the band cannot handle the constant grind that a tour presents. Also Townshend (who was never crazy about touring) is gradually losing his hearing. Finally, each member of the group would like to pursue solo careers.

As said before, if this is indeed the farewell performance of the Who then that is fine. This writer has enough memories to last a lifetime. But God, do I miss Keith Moon.

A Plethora of Pomposity

By GREG ANTON

Finally, it appears that Valley Talk has run its course and is being dropped from casual conversation, to the delight of many. However, this euphoria is proving to be temporary, for another craze is growing to epidemic proportions. Bruce Feirstein's extremely popular book, Real Men Don't Eat Quiche, has generated a new onslaught of jargon.

After reading Real Men Don't Eat Quiche one has to wonder what kind of self-aggrandizing, pompous ass Feirstein is. How else could he have written such an insipid, obnoxious and trivial book? The book claims to shed some light on the problems that are facing men and society today. Feirstein hopes to resolve all the ambiguities by listing real men qualities, manners and attitudes, covering such topics as literature, films, food, sports and, of course, sex. And at the same time, he tries to be witty and humorous. However, he fails miserably.

Reading the extremely small book, with its barrage of lists, becomes a terribly tedious chore. It seems as if one could finish Webster's New World Dictionary in less time. Real Men Don't Eat Quiche flounders in its banality and becomes a dreadful bore.

Perhaps Feirstein has spent the past 25 years in a vacuous bubble and has never heard of the 1960s and '70s. Of course, one could argue that that is precisely his point: longstanding traditions have been disregarded or destroyed. But, society has advanced and bettered itself by eradicating many biases and prejudices. Yet Feirstein chooses to recapitulate and re-establish all the hackneyed stereotypes concerning men and male-female relationships. It would all be tolerable if Feirstein conveyed an appropriately light hearted tone. But, the tone of Real Men Don't Eat Quiche is as light hearted as a lynching by the Klu Klux Klan.

Archie Bunker is funny because he exudes a certain vulnerability that allows one to laugh at him, yet with him. Feirstein dare not exhibit such a vulnerability and hence comes off as an arrogant and obnoxious man, incapable of humor.

When he does drop his shield and temporarily abandons his restrictive, dogmatic style, he is, at times, funny. The funniest thing in the book is his compilation of the lyrics of every Bruce Springsteen song ever written. It is extremely clever. These few scattered items however do not make up for the book's overall shortcomings. It seems that Feirstein would have been much better off if he adopted a less pretentious project.

Feirstein's motivation and purpose for writing the book are unclear. Does he hope to change all those who currently have not attained the ranks of a real man? Yet, surely such wimps are beyond all hope. Or does he want to set in print an established set of rules, a guidebook, for those who have? Clearly, this is an incon-

Real Men Don't Eat Quiche

A Guidebook to All That Is Truly Masculine

'Inchon' Rehashes War Propaganda

By BILL SANTOS

Many well-known stars fill the screen in "Inchon," but something vital is missing. The mere presence of Ben Gazzara, Jacqueline Bisset, Laurence Olivier, Richard Roundtree and Toshira Mifune cannot create a coherent film. "Inchon" is nothing more than an exaggerated history lesson highlighted by 1950 war footage.

"Inchon" is a movie about the Korean War, as seen through the eyes of the South Koreans. With Sun Myung Moon as "consultant advisor," and reputed financier to the tune of $40 million, the film imposes a distorted, even ludicrous, interpretation that even Korean War films from the '50s did not. Moon is obviously trying to exert his mind control powers throughout the film, this time in a gross over-simplification of history. What he fails to understand, however, is that the typical moviegoer cannot be brainwashed so easily by a movie as patently bad as this.

The film asserts in the very beginning that it is not a documentary, but rather a dramatization of how the war affected a couple's lives. Bisset plays a rich, Philadelphia Main Line woman who has recently divorced her husband (Gazzara). She currently lives in the American Embassy in South Korea, and he, an American soldier, is stationed in Korea. The movie never explores their relationship or the changes that have manifested. Instead, it only shows the superficial changes that have taken place in the couple's attitudes toward each other.

Olivier, in arguably his worst performance ever, plays the other main character in the movie, Gen. Douglas MacArthur. MacArthur is depicted as an irrational leader who simply does not know what he is doing. Olivier and all the other actors are victims of stereotyped characters which greatly hampers their ability to give commanding performances. It is almost beyond comprehension how such talented stars could prostitute themselves by appearing in such a second-rate production. But, one only needs to look at the salaries they earned for the roles to figure out just what the motivating factors were.

For those who still want a quick synopsis, the plot of "Inchon" centers around many far-fetched, coincidental meetings of the various characters, who are somehow involved in the American blockade at Inchon, a port near Seoul, South Korea. This is where the American troops established a barricade between North and South Korea, keeping the enemy out of South Korea. The plot is strung out, contains many inconsistencies and coincidences. The movie moves along extremely slowly, with a multitude of gratuitous combat scenes plaguing the screen.

On the whole, "Inchon" is a slipshod, ridiculous movie. It's no wonder it took Moon four years to find a distribution company. The film has no apparent theme and little or no character development. Virtually all the actors are used for their box office appeal and are poorly typecast. "Inchon" is nothing but an add piece of celluloid propaganda promoting the atavistic, right-wing views of Moon. The best thing that can be said about the movie is that it is so terribly amateurish that no one can possibly pay attention long enough to be fooled by it.

sistency, for a real man obviously never needs to consult a guide book. It seems Feirstein merely wanted to have some fun and amuse the reader. But anyone who considers Bruce Jenner, one of the most self-aggrandizing asses ever, a real man must suffer from a demented sense of humor. So, I will continue eating quiche, considering myself one of the fortunate who do not have to prove one's virility by writing a chauvinistic, homophobic and masochistic guidebook.

The Gang of Four Return

By PAUL DURAND

The Gang of Four will be performing Oct. 2 at Irvine Auditorium on the Penn campus. They have played sold out shows in the past at both the East Side Club and Emerald City and each time they've been received very well.

They emerged about three years ago as a quartet with a unique sound and philosophy amidst new wave havoc which is still plaguing many new bands. They are British, but fortunately, they stood apart and generated some American interest in their music. Their debut LP, "Entertainment," garnered favorable attention from the music press. It was dance oriented rock featuring choppy guitars and rapid vocal exchanges over a tight rhythm section. They are intensely political in their lyrics and that LP was like fresh air next to the humdrum that radio was playing.

Since "Entertainment," Gang of Four's releases have come in spurts: EP, LP, EP and LP. After a second album, Dave Allen (bass) left to form his own band, Shriekback, and was replaced by Sara Lee from Robert Fripp's "League of Gentlemen" project. Although the Allen originated bass style was a big part of the Gang's uniqueness, Lee has filled the gap very well.

The first album recorded with Lee is their new one, "Songs of the Free," for which they're now touring. To the Gang of Four fan it may sound very different at first, but it'll grow on one. For the album an tour, another female has been added, making the Gang of Four a quintet at times. But of course, everyone knows they're named after the rebellious Chinese of a few years back, so five doesn't matter; it's just a name!

The Gang of Four

"Songs" has a lot of punchy bass and the mix is excellent; credit goes to Mike Howlett. The lyrics are as alive as ever for the Gang; they've always been good at catchy lines, but this time they may have outdone themselves. And this album, as a whole, pieces together the best of the three.

In concert they're wild! Jon King (vocals and occasional hooter) uses the entire stage to make his point. Andy Gill's guitar work is perhaps the most fun to watch after Pete Townshend's. The atmosphere is in their total control. They are very present on stage. And it's obviously not a sit-down performance although Irvine Auditorium has seats. The Gang of Four work hard; they are probably the hardest working socialists in the world.

Dining Out:

Sechuan Gardens

By JAYNE STUART

It would be terribly difficult for someone who has been eating at Dougherty Hall, more commonly known as the Pit, to go out to dinner and give the food a bad review. Taking this into consideration, it was hard to find fault with Sechuan Gardens, a Chinese restaurant located at 1322 Walnut St., in Philadelphia.

The service was efficient and pleasant. We were seated promptly at a table in a dimly lit dining room. Reservations were not necessary. The dining room was tastefully decorated with oriental plants and vases. The quiet music in the background added to the pleasant atmoshphere.

The menu had quite a selection of beef, pork, chicken and seafood dishes. The dishes are marked so as to inform you of the degree of spiciness. Be forewarned, the servings are generous, so if you have a small appetite steer away from the appetizers, though they are quite appealing. For the hearty eater the spare ribs are a fine choice for an appetizer. It consists of four ribs accompanied by a tangy apple-like sauce. For a less filling appetizer, try the Wonton soup.

For the seafood lover, the Seafood Delight was exceptional. This dish consisted of crab, shrimp, scallops, water chestnuts, mushrooms and green beans that actually crunched, basted in an egg suace. One of the nicer parts of this entree was that the hot mustard was served on the side so that the flavor could be regulated to one's own taste. The Hunan Chicken was a plateful of small pieces of chicken smothered in a spicy ginger-based sauce. The chicken was especially tender and seemed to melt in one's mouth.

For the excellent food, as well as service of high caliber, the prices are very reasonable, with the average price of an entree being $9; seafood prices, of course, varys with market prices.

So, for that night when the Pit's food just won't do the trick and you has some extra cash, try Sechuan Gardens.

Women Place Second at Trenton

By BEVERLY REILLY

The Wildcat women harriers settled for second place at the Trenton State Cross Country Invitational last Sunday.

In a field of 23 teams, the Wildcats climbed their way to the top, gathering 60 points. However, the harriers were not able to surpass their rivals from West Chester, who compiled a lower score of 42.

Coach Bob Shoudt commented on this early season meet, "We have not been training specifically for this meet. Right now, we are concentrating on peaking for the more important meets later in the season. Last year West Chester beat us in every meet, except for the one that counted. Consequently, we are the 1981 EAIAW Cross Country Champions."

Although three of the women harriers graduated last year, the Wildcats still placed for women in the top 15 at Trenton State. Returning sophomore Mary Ellen McGowan took team honors by placing sixth.

Jan Yerkes captured eighth place in her first cross country race ever. Yerkes, an excellent marathoner, is in her first year at Villanova as a junior.

"This type of racing definitely feels a little weird at first, but I'm looking forward to some better performances in the future," admits Yerkes.

Although troubled with a heal injury at the onset of the season, Yerkes is back in competition and will be a strong asset to this year's team.

Returning senior and captain Beverly Reilly ran a strong race to place eleventh and score for the Wildcats.

Freshmen Nancy Flemming and Vicky Brown completed the scoring by placing 13th and 23rd respectively.

Earlier this season the team ran at Lafayette with a mainly freshman squad. Freshman Vicki Brown placed sixth overall followed by classmate Nancy Flemming in eighth. Captain Bev Reilly scored next for Villanova in ninth place. At the same meet there was an open division which former Wildcat star Brigid Leddy won. Leddy is a 1980 graduate who is now training with the team.

The Wildcat women definitely have a competitive season ahead. This year, the women's team moved into NCAA Division I competition. This Saturday, the harriers travel to New Brunswick for the Rutger's Cross Country Invitational.

Sophomore Mary Ellen McGowan started out the 1982 season in the same top form as she ended her freshman season in 1981, where she scored in every meet.

Villanova Misses Football

By STEPHEN FALLON

The strike which halted play in the NFL last week left the country without one of its favorite fall leisure time diversions — pro football. This means that even more attention will be focused on a complete football sub-culture, the college game. The NCAA this week approved the playing of games on Sunday, thereby providing a viable substitute for the NFL. Forget that perversion of the game which comes from north of the border, this will be real football with eleven men, a 100-yard field and mascots which mean something. (What is an Alouette, anyway?)

Perhaps a little re-acquaintance is necessary between Villanova and college football. The "world" of college football is one of bragging rights, fanatical fandom and regional dedication. For those consumed by the game, the whole calendar year is a prelude to the annual showdown with an arch-rival.

There are admitted problems with college football; the subjective polls used to determine a champion, the failure of many players to graduate and the overall big business attitude which is creeping over the game. But these problems cannot interfere with Saturday afternoon, when tradition is honored and ritual practiced.

The crowds assemble early in the morning outside the stadium, everyone is sporting the school colors and they begin the vaunted practice of tailgate parties. The smell of hamburgers permeates the parking lot and mixes with the sound of people having fun. The students put the week behind them and socialize, meeting people they pass everyday but never get to know; alumni cast their memories back to "I remember when . . ." and everyone provides their prediction of the outcome of today's game.

As game time approaches, the migration to the stadium begins, here all eyes focus on the game. A win would be a great way to end the day, but win or lose the day will be fun and an entire school—students, alumni, parents and friends — is able to come together.

The success of a team in a given year is irrelevant; the scene was acted out this weekend everywhere from Seattle, Wash., where the number-one-ranked Huskies played Oregon; to Evanston, Ill., where the Wildcats of Northwestern broke a 34-game losing streak against Northern Illinois.

There were such days here at Villanova for 87 years. I remember when I was a freshman, standing on the parking lot on a crisp autumn day enjoying part of what I considered to be part of the total college experience, just relaxing and gathering a sense of school spirit. Now Saturdays find this beautiful campus vacant. Instead of the sense of unity and identity which football helps foster, Villanova remains torn and embittered over an issue already two years old.

Some people consider the issue of Villanova football to be a dead one, but it will remain alive and the source of controversy as long as on a Saturday in the fall people are able to look at the empty parking lot and the empty stadium and say, "I remember when . . ."

Tennis Team Ups Record

By LAUREN SEAVER

The women's tennis team is proving to be one of Villanova's most successful athletic organizations this fall. Beginning the season with nothing but triumphs, the team added three more victories to their record last week, followed this week by their first defeat.

According to senior Co-Captain Dawn Fisher, this year's team, "is young and has a lot of depth." Villanova added two new outstanding players this year who have already assumed the number-one and two spots on the roster. Oddly enough, they are sisters. Last week's athlete of the week, Zenia Matkiwsky is a junior transfer from Penn State and holds the number-one position on the team. Her freshman sister, Luba, plays the number-two position. "Since everyone returned from last year's team, we are very strong," said Coach Langran, "I just moved everyone back with Zenia and Luba as number one and two. Any coach would love that."

Some of the other starting singles players are Co-Captain Carol Harrison, Trish Stairiker, Dawn Fisher and Cynthia Burke. Defending Villanova's doubles matches are the Matkiwsky sisters, Carol Harrison and Dawn Fisher, and Sue Golden and Trish Stairiker.

Last Thursday, the women's tennis team faced Bryn Mawr on the Villanova courts. Winning all the singles matches after only two sets, as well as the first two doubles matches, Villanova earned eight points. Although the third doubles match was lost, Villanova finished the match with an 8-1 victory.

The following day, the tennis team faced one of its toughest opponents, Seton Hall. Although Villanova won three out of six singles matches and one doubles match, Seton Hall pulled away with a 5-4 victory. Thus far, this has been the only defeat of the season for the team.

Last Saturday, the women traveled to Mount St. Mary's for a 9-0 victory. There was no need to play the third set in any of the matches since each one ended successfully for Villanova, after the first two sets.

On Sunday, the tennis team played St. John's. The Cats were victorious in four of the singles matches and one of the doubles matches. According to Fisher, the doubles victory was, "quite an accomplishment." Cynthia Burke had to replace one of the number-one doubles players to aid in a surprising victory. Unfortunately, Zenia Matkiwsky, who normally plays first doubles, suffered a badly twisted ankle during the singles match; it is uncertain as to when she will be able to return to the courts. The team finished the match with a 5-4 victory.

"The season has started beautifully," commented Langran.

Field Hockey Team Drops Another Close Decision

By BOB HELLER

This past Monday, Sept. 27, the Villanova University field hockey team travelled to Kutztown to play the much improved Kutztown State team. The Kutztown team had previously defeated the Cats 3-0 in a scrimmage game earlier this season, and defeated the strong LaSalle team 3-2, two weeks ago.

The 1-3 Wildcats were coming off of a very demoralizing 4-1 loss to Lehigh last Tuesday, and two consecutive losses up in Ithaca a few days before that. They entered the Kutztown game hoping to get their offensive guns into full swing. The team has scored a total of only six goals so far this season, as opposed to their opponents who have scored more than twice as many against the Cats alone. However, a victory for the Cats was just not in the cards. They lost a very tough game, 1-0. This loss dropped their record to 1-4 for the season.

The defensive-minded Wildcats started out very slowly after the opening whistle and were not getting many opportunities to score a goal. Things started to turn around, however, in the second half. The Cats started to play a better offensive game. They were getting many more opportunities to score, but were unable to connect on any of them. The only goal scored by either team was scored quite by accident. With Kutztown attacking, the ball was hit about three feet high into the air, deflected off a Kutztown stick and managed to get past the Nova goalie, Lisa Buschmann. This goal proved to be a costly one; since the Cats did not score, it cost them a victory.

Defensively, the Cats started to play much better in the second half. They inserted a substitute at forward, sophomore Robin Garcznski "Robin started to turn things around for us," commented assistant coach Cheryl Massaro. The Cats had good games from senior tri-captain Beth Moyer at the sweeper position and by Buschmann.

'Inchon' Rehashes War Propaganda

By BILL SANTOS

Many well-known stars fill the screen in "Inchon," but something vital is missing. The mere presence of Ben Gazzara, Jacqueline Bisset, Laurence Olivier, Richard Basehart and Toshiro Mifune cannot create a coherent film. "Inchon" is nothing more than an exaggerated history lesson highlighted by 1950 war footage.

"Inchon" is a movie about the Korean War, as seen through the eyes of the South Koreans. With Sun Myung Moon as "consultant advisor," and reputed financier to the tune of $40 million, the film imposes a distorted, even ludicrous, interpretation that even Korean War films from the '50s did not. Moon is obviously trying to exert his mind control powers throughout the film, this time in a gross over-simplification of history. What he fails to understand, however, is that the typical moviegoer cannot be brainwashed so easily by a movie as patently bad as this.

The film asserts in the very beginning that it is not a documentary, but rather a dramatization of how the war affected a couple's lives. Bisset plays a rich, Philadelphia Main Line woman who has recently divorced her husband (Gazzara). She currently lives in the American Embassy in South Korea, and he, an American soldier, is stationed in Korea. The movie never explores their relationship or the changes that have manifested. Instead, it only shows the superficial changes that have taken place in the couple's attitudes toward each other.

Olivier, in arguably his worst performance ever, plays the other main character in the movie, Gen. Douglas MacArthur. MacArthur is depicted as an irrational leader who simply does not know what he is doing. Olivier and all the other actors are victims of stereotyped characters which greatly hampers their ability to give commanding performances. It is almost beyond comprehension how such talented stars could prostitute themselves by appearing in such a second-rate production. But, one only needs to look at the salaries they earned for the roles to figure out just what the motivating factors were.

For those who still want a quick synopsis, the plot of "Inchon" centers around many far-fetched, coincidental meetings of the various characters, who are somehow involved in the American blockade at Inchon, a port near Seoul, South Korea. This is where the American troops established a barricade between North and South Korea, keeping the enemy out of South Korea. The plot is strung out, contains many inconsistencies and coincidences. The movie moves along extremely slowly, with a multitude of gratuitous combat scenes plaguing the screen.

On the whole, "Inchon" is a slipshod, ridiculous, movie. It's no wonder it took Moon four years to find a distribution company. The film has no apparent theme and little or no character development. Virtually all the actors are used for their box office appeal and are poorly typecast. "Inchon" is nothing but an add piece of celluloid propaganda promoting the atavistic, right-wing views of Moon. The best thing that can be said about the movie is that it is so terribly amateurish that no one can possibly pay attention long enough to be fooled by it.

The Gang of Four Return

By PAUL DURAND

The Gang of Four will be performing Oct. 2 at Irvine Auditorium on the Penn campus. They have played sold out shows in the past at both the East Side Club and Emerald City and each time they've been received very well.

They emerged about three years ago as a quartet with a unique sound and philosophy amidst new wave havoc which is still plaguing many new bands. They are British, but fortunately, they stood apart and generated some American interest in their music. Their debut LP, "Entertainment," garnered favorable attention from the music press. It was dance oriented rock featuring choppy guitars and rapid vocal exchanges over a tight rhythm section. They are intensely political in their lyrics and that LP was like fresh air next to the humdrum that radio was playing.

Since "Entertainment," Gang of Four's releases have come in spurts: EP, LP, EP and LP. After a second album, Dave Allen (bass) left to form his own band, Shriekback, and was replaced by Sara Lee from Robert Fripp's "League of Gentlemen" project. Although the Allen originated bass style was a big part of the Gang's uniqueness, Lee has filled the gap very well.

The first album recorded with Lee is their new one, "Songs of the Free," for which they're now touring. To the Gang of Four fan it may sound very different at first, but it'll grow on one. For the album ankour, another female has been added, making the Gang of Four a quintet at times. But of course, everyone knows they're named after the rebellious Chinese of a few years back, so five doesn't matter; it's just a name!

The Gang of Four

"Songs" has a lot of punchy bass and the mix is excellent; credit goes to Mike Howlett. The lyrics are as alive as ever for the Gang; they've always been good at catchy lines, but this time they may have outdone themselves. And this album, as a whole, pieces together the best of the three.

In concert they're wild! Jon King (vocals and occasional hooter) uses the entire stage to make his point. Andy Gill's guitar work is perhaps the most fun to watch after Pete Townshend's. The atmosphere is in their total control. They are very present on stage. And it's obviously not a sit-down performance although Irvine Auditorium has seats. The Gang of Four work hard; they are probably the hardest working socialists in the world.

Dining Out:

Sechuan Gardens

By JAYNE STUART

It would be terribly difficult for someone who has been eating at Dougherty Hall, more commonly known as the Pit, to go out to dinner and give the food a bad review. Taking this into consideration, it was hard to find fault with Sechuan Gardens, a Chinese restaurant located at 1322 Walnut St., in Philadelphia.

The service was efficient and pleasant. We were seated promptly at a table in a dimly lit dining room. Reservations were not necessary. The dining room was tastefully decorated with oriental plants and vases. The quiet music in the background added to the pleasant atmoshphere.

The menu had quite a selection of beef, pork, chicken and seafood dishes. The dishes are marked so as to inform you of the degree of spiciness. Be forewarned, the servings are generous, so if you have a small appetite steer away from the appetizers, though they are quite appealing. For the hearty eater the spare ribs are a fine choice for an appetizer. It consists of four ribs accompanied by a tangy apple-like sauce. For a less filling appetizer, try the Wonton soup.

For the seafood lover, the Seafood Delight was exceptional. This dish consisted of crab, shrimp, scallops, water chestnuts, mushrooms and green beans that actually crunched, basted in an egg suace. One of the nicer parts of this entree was that the hot mustard was served on the side so that the flavor could be regulated to one's own taste. The Hunan Chicken was a plateful of small pieces of chicken smothered in a spicy ginger-based sauce. The chicken was especially tender and seemed to melt in one's mouth.

For the excellent food, as well as service of high caliber, the prices are very reasonable, with the average price of an entree being $9; seafood prices, of course, varys with market prices.

So, for that night when the Pit's food just won't do the trick and you has some extra cash, try Sechuan Gardens.

Women Place Second at Trenton

By BEVERLY REILLY

The Wildcat women harriers settled for second place at the Trenton State Cross Country Invitational last Sunday.

In a field of 23 teams, the Wildcats climbed their way to the top, gathering 60 points. However, the harriers were not able to surpass their rivals from West Chester, who compiled a lower score of 42.

Coach Bob Shoudt commented on this early season meet, "We have not been training specifically for this meet. Right now, we are concentrating on peaking for the more important meets later in the season. Last year West Chester beat us in every meet; except for the one that counted. Consequently, we are the 1981 EAIAW Cross Country Champions."

Although three of the women harriers graduated last year, the Wildcats still placed for women in the top 15 at Trenton State. Returning sophomore Mary Ellen McGowan took team honors by placing sixth.

Jan Yerkes captured eighth place in her first cross country race ever. Yerkes, an excellent marathoner, is in her first year at Villanova as a junior.

"This type of racing definitely feels a little weird at first, but I'm looking forward to some better performances in the future," admits Yerkes.

Although troubled with a heal injury at the onset of the season, Yerkes is back in competition and will be a strong asset to this year's team.

Returning senior and captain Beverly Reilly ran a strong race to place eleventh and score for the Wildcats.

Freshmen Nancy Flemming and Vicky Brown completed the scoring by placing 13th and 23rd respectively.

Earlier this season the team ran at Lafayette with a mainly freshman squad. Freshman Vicki Brown placed sixth overall followed by classmate Nancy Flemming in eighth. Captain Bev Reilly scored next for Villanova in ninth place. At the same meet there was an open division which former Wildcat star Brigid Leddy won. Leddy is a 1980 graduate who is now training with the team.

The Wildcat women definitely have a competitive season ahead. This year, the women's team moved into NCAA Division I competition. This Saturday, the harriers travel to New Brunswick for the Rutger's Cross Country Invitational.

Sophomore Mary Ellen McGowan started out the 1982 season in the same top form as she ended her freshman season in 1981, where she scored in every meet.

Villanova Misses Football

By STEPHEN FALLON

The strike which halted play in the NFL last week left the country without one of its favorite fall leisure time diversions — pro football. This means that even more attention will be focused on a complete football sub-culture, the college game. The NCAA this week approved the playing of games on Sunday, thereby providing a viable substitute for the NFL. Forget that perversion of the game which comes from north of the border, this will be real football with eleven men, a 100-yard field and mascots which mean something. (What is an Alouette, anyway?)

Perhaps a little re-acquaintance is necessary between Villanova and college football. The "world" of college football is one of bragging rights, fanatical fandom and regional dedication. For those consumed by the game, the whole calendar year is a prelude to the annual showdown with an archrival.

There are admitted problems with college football; the subjective polls used to determine a champion, the failure of many players to graduate and the overall big business attitude which is creeping over the game. But these problems cannot interfere with Saturday afternoon, when tradition is honored and ritual practiced.

The crowds assemble early in the morning outside the stadium, everyone is sporting the school colors and they begin the vaunted practice of tailgate parties. The smell of hamburgers permeates the parking lot and mixes with the sound of people having fun. The students put the week behind them and socialize, meeting people they pass everyday but never get to know; alumni cast their memories back to "I remember when . . .," and everyone provides their prediction of the outcome of today's game.

As game time approaches, the migration to the stadium begins, here all eyes focus on the game. A win would be a great way to end the day, but win or lose the day will be fun and an entire school— students, alumni, parents and friends — is able to come together.

The success of a team in a given year is irrelevant; the scene was acted out this weekend everywhere from Seattle, Wash., where the number-one-ranked Huskies played Oregon; to Evanston, Ill., where the Wildcats of Northwestern broke a 34-game losing streak against Northern Illinois.

There were such days here at Villanova for 87 years. I remember when I was a freshman, standing on the parking lot on a crisp autumn day enjoying part of what I considered to be part of the total college experience, just relaxing and gathering a sense of school spirit. Now Saturdays find this beautiful campus vacant. Instead of the sense of unity and identity which football helps foster, Villanova remains torn and embittered over an issue already two years old.

Some people consider the issue of Villanova football to be a dead one, but it will remain alive and the source of controversy as long as on a Saturday in the fall people are able to look at the empty parking lot and the empty stadium and say, "I remember when . . ."

Tennis Team Ups Record

By LAUREN SEAVER

The women's tennis team is proving to be one of Villanova's most successful athletic organizations this fall. Beginning the season with nothing but triumphs, the team added three more victories to their record last week, followed this week by their first defeat.

According to senior Co-Captain Dawn Fisher, this year's team, "is young and has a lot of depth." Villanova added two new outstanding players this year who have already assumed the number-one and two spots on the roster. Oddly enough, they are sisters. Last week's athlete of the week, Zenia Matkiwsky is a junior transfer from Penn State and holds the number-one position on the team. Her freshman sister, Luba, plays the number-two position. "Since everyone returned from last year's team, we are very strong," said Coach Langran, "I just moved everyone back with Zenia and Luba as number one and two. Any coach would love that."

Some of the other starting singles players are Co-Captain Carol Harrison, Trish Stairiker, Dawn Fisher and Cynthia Burke. Defending Villanova's doubles matches are the Matkiwsky sisters, Carol Harrison and Dawn Fisher, and Sue Golden and Trish Stairiker.

Last Thursday, the women's tennis team faced Bryn Mawr on the Villanova courts. Winning all the singles matches after only two sets, as well as the first two doubles matches, Villanova earned eight points. Although the third doubles match was lost, Villanova finished the match with an 8-1 victory.

The following day, the tennis team faced one of its toughest opponents, Seton Hall. Although Villanova won three out of six singles matches and one doubles match, Seton Hall pulled away with a 5-4 victory. Thus far, this has been the only defeat of the season for the team.

Last Saturday, the women traveled to Mount St. Mary's for a 9-0 victory. There was no need to play the third set in any of the matches since each one ended successfully for Villanova, after the first two sets.

On Sunday, the tennis team played St. John's. The Cats were victorious in four of the singles matches and one of the doubles matches. According to Fisher, the doubles victory was, "quite an accomplishment." Cynthia Burke had to replace one of the number-one doubles players to aid in a surprising victory. Unfortunately, Zenia Matkiwsky, who normally plays first doubles, suffered a badly twisted ankle during the singles match; it is uncertain as to when she will be able to return to the courts. The team finished the match with a 5-4 victory.

"The season has started beautifully," commented Langran.

Field Hockey Team Drops Another Close Decision

By BOB HELLER

This past Monday, Sept. 27, the Villanova University field hockey team travelled to Kutztown to play the much improved Kutztown State team. The Kutztown team had previously defeated the Cats 3-0 in a scrimmage game earlier this season, and defeated the strong LaSalle team 3-2, two weeks ago.

The 1-3 Wildcats were coming off of a very demoralizing 4-1 loss to Lehigh last Tuesday, and two consecutive losses up in Ithaca a few days before that. They entered the Kutztown game hoping to get their offensive guns into full swing. The team has scored a total of only six goals so far this season, as opposed to their opponents who have scored more than twice as many against the Cats alone. However, a victory for the Cats was just not in the cards. They lost a very tough game, 1-0. This loss dropped their record to 1-4 for the season.

The defensive-minded Wildcats started out very slowly after the opening whistle and were not getting many opportunities to score a goal. Things started to turn around, however, in the second half. The Cats started to play a better offensive game. They were getting many more opportunities to score, but were unable to connect on any of them. The only goal scored by either team was scored quite by accident. With Kutztown attacking, the ball was hit about three feet high into the air, deflected off a Kutztown stick and managed to get past the Nova goalie, Lisa Buschmann. This goal proved to be a costly one; since the Cats did not score, it cost them a victory.

Defensively, the Cats started to play much better in the second half. They inserted a substitute at forward, sophomore Robin Garczynski "Robin started to turn things around for us," commented assistant coach Cheryl Massaro. The Cats had good games from senior tri-captain Beth Moyer at the sweeper position and by Buschmann.

Soccer Team Rolls

Booters Blitz Swarthmore

By COLLEEN LYNCH

Villanova's womens' soccer team jumped to a 5-0 opening victory ove the visiting Swarthmore Garnets Tuesday afternoon.

"Today was our first test," said Wildcat Coach Lee Stevens moments after the victory. "I knew we were good, but we had to prove it on the field. We played as a team and all 22 girls played and contributed to this victory."

The scoring honors, however, belonged to freshman Cathy Ford and junior Denise Finn, who were responsible for three of Villanova's five points and all five assists.

Freshman Mary Lou Curley scored the first goal of the season with an assist from Ford early in the first period. Ford followed with a goal from a Finn assist, and minutes later the two combined for the same play which gave Villanova a 3-0 lead. Finn made good on an assist by Ford and at halftime the Wildcats led 4-0.

Late in the second period, Villanova scored again. This time it was junior Linda Pudula captilizing on an assist from Finn which put the icing on the cake. Swarthmore's only bright moment faded quickly as a last second goal was nullified by an outside call. The second half featured exceptional performances by both goalies; Swarthmore's Michelle Fowler saved 18 shots and Villanova's Sue Onnembo had 13 saves.

"We played what we practiced," said Stevens, "We worked on a ground game — short passing and keeping the ball out of the air. If the other team put the ball in the air we tried to bring it to the ground. We succeeded."

The Villanova women's soccer team scored an impressive 5-0 victory over Swarthmore in Tuesday's season opener.

Harriers Split at Tri-Meet

By PAUL MACCHIA

The Villanova Wildcats opened their 1982 cross-country season with a triangular meet between Georgetown University and George Mason University. The Wildcats were victorious against George Mason 27-31, but fell short against the Georgetown Hoyas with a score of 31-25.

The race was run last Saturday, at Georgetown. Conditions of the 5.2 mile course were good, but the weather was not optimum for racing. The hot, sunny, humid day took its toll on many of the runners, leaving behind chances for very fast times.

Many of the Wildcat runners were tired as they trained through this meet with 80-100 mile weeks. Cross-country Coach Jack Pyrah was pleased the way his squad performed under pressure to Georgetown's home advantage. Pyrah remarked, "This is the earliest we've run in quite a few years, usually we don't start competing until early October."

The trio of Marcus O'Sullivan (27:14), Anthony O'Reilly (27:23), and Brian O'Keeffe (27:42) were the first three Wildcat finishers placing fifth, sixth and eighth respectively.

Dermot Anderson finished tenth in 27:44. Freshman J.J. Clark was fourteenth in 28:02 while Ken Lucks (28:03) and Peter Carroll (28:04) respectively finished fifteenth and sixteenth. John Keyworth, recovering from a chest illness, finished eighteenth in 28:39.

The course at Georgetown is a winding, hilly course run on surfaces of grass, gravel and woodchips. Lucks described the course as "mentally demanding." O'Reilly remarked, "You could lose concentration with all the loops, hills, dips, and bends."

The Wildcats are looking forward to their next meet on October 9 at Lehigh University for the Lehigh Invitational. Coach Pyrah hopes, "With our next meet not until two weeks, we'll be able to get more practice under our belts."

Wildcats Win One

Spikers

By JUDY ROGERS

Another busy week passed for the Cat's volleyball team. On Sept. 22, they played at Lehigh and defeated the Engineers 3-1, and last weekend the women played in a very important tournament at Temple. The Wildcats competed against three teams in a round-robin event and were the victors over the University of Connecticut and New York Tech before bowing to Syracuse. The team finished second in their pool to Syracuse. The women qualified for the elimination round in which they were pitted against Georgetown, a Big East opponent. Coach Bob Covell's only comment was "we were soundly beaten."

The women, who are led by their junior captain, Stephanie Moore, are placed in the "middle of the league" with a .500 record of five wins and five losses. The team is working hard towards coming away winners in the Big East tournament so that they will be extended an invitation to the NCAA tournament in November.

The coach feels that, at the moment, the Cats are playing "alright as a team." Their weakness lies in not enough consistency, said Covell, and the team's strength is good, reliable defense.

Budweiser.
KING OF BEERS.
ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

By JOE MARUSAK

If you take the "Budweiser Athlete of the Week" award as any indication, you'll know that something's going right with the women's varsity tennis team here at Villanova.

For the second week in a row, a member of Dr. Robert Langran's tennis squad has received the honor. Last week, the team's number-one seed, Zenia Matkiwsky, won the award. This time around it's Trish Stairiker, who has excelled in both match and set play.

Stairiker, a junior, is undefeated in match competition. Some of her most recent victories came last Friday, Saturday and Sunday over opponents from Seton Hall, Mt. St. Mary's and St. John's, respectively. Add five previous wins to those three and you'll find she has an 8-0 record.

To make her early-season charts even more impressive, Stairiker has produced 16 set-play triumphs against only one defeat.

Two years ago, in her first year of collegiate tennis and as the team's number-two seed, the native of North Caldwell, N.J., had a match record of 16-3. "My freshman year, I had my best year ever," she recalled earlier this week. A year later, as still the number-two ranked performer, she posted an 11-6 mark.

As it now appears, Stairiker will topple those two previous records. A big plus has been her confidence: "I'm playing much better this year," she asserted.

Because of the addition of the two Matkiwsky sisters, Stairiker has been moved to the number-four position on the team. Clearly, it's a sign that the club is good — indeed, very good. "This is the best tennis team we've ever had here, and that includes the women's and men's (programs)," she emphasized.

And as for next year, when the current Bud Athlete is a senior, "we'll be even better."

Although she has been working wonders on the courts, Stairiker sees her future lying in a different area — accounting. "I'll be an accountant and probably play club tennis," she said.

If someday she learns to work figures like she currently plays tennis, Stairiker will certainly discover all aces and no losses.

Death Lesson

To the Editor:

I feel I have to comment on the letters written last week. It concerns the unfortunate mishap that occurred early Sunday morning, Sept. 26 when Monica Buckley was killed.

The concern and support that the students have shown the family is appreciated and helpful. However, the letters blaming Villanova University for not allowing parties with alcoholic beverages on-campus is unnecessary. Do you realize that the drinking age in Pennsylvania is 21? Do you honestly think that the law can be broken just for Villanova University campus parties? Do you really need alcoholic beverages to enjoy your weekend?

Each student must personally evaluate their own idea of a great time or a great party and if alcohol is a necessity.

As a student, I fully understand that the weekends are for relaxation, but alcohol doesn't necessarily have to be a part of it.

Monica's death should be a lesson to everyone, and one that we should carry deep in our hearts.

Monica was a beautiful person, so full of life, love and an overflowing personality.

This subject is very delicate to me and I hope that you will never forget the girl who touched the hearts of so many is such a short time, just as she has touched mine.

Drunks

To the Editor:

How can anyone seriously put forward the idea that relaxed alcohol policies will solve our problems? The only thing that will do this is responsibility by the people having the parties and by the people doing the "partying." If the resident or commuting student at a party on or off-campus can't learn the rather simple formula that drinking and driving just aren't compatible, then nothing the Administration might do will help very much. Those who argue that a liberal attitude toward drinking on campus would prevent drunks on the road are naive. Drunks being drunks often want to drive. Their drunken "buddies" often let them. What's the harm in a simple cruise, eh? Ask Monica.

How many more of our friends will have to suffer before we realize that parties are not a justification for death?

V.U. No Island

To the Editor:

Last week's editorial and letters to the editor seemed to follow closely with student opinion reguarding the tragedy that occurred two weeks ago. Most people felt that Villanova University deserved most of the blame was that if the school would change its alcohol policy, tragesity deserved most of the blame for what happened that Sunday morning. The general consensus was that if the school would change its alcohol policy, tragedies such as this could be avoided and all of our problems would be solved.

However, with a little closer look we see that it is not that simple. There is a factor which we have overlooked: Villanova is not an island in Pennsylvania, in fact, we are not even detached from the Main Line. We are a part of Pennsylvania as well as the Main Line. This certainty, which serves us well in some areas and not so well in others, cannot be overlooked. Villanova University cannot do what it wants to do with its alcohol policy. The University has already stretched the framework to its limits with the current policy. There is no way Villanova would get away with making its present policy less restrictive. History clearly shows that Villanova University would prefer to give students more freedom in this area, but this is no longer possible.

It would be hard not to notice that the nation as a whole is becoming more concerned with alcohol and the problems which surround it. Rumor has it that other schools have more freedom. However, if you check with the students at those schools, you would find that they have less freedom than they did five years ago. It is unfortunate that Villanova does not have fraternity houses on campus like Penn and other schools. If we wanted to use our energies more effectively we might think about improving our relations with Radnor residents so they would not resist our proposals to put fraternity houses on campus.

Be that as it may, we are still left with a problem. The fact of the matter is that college is not real life. We are protected from problems, many of which we will have to face in the future. Problems related to alcohol must be confronted now. Let us say we were allowed to drink as much as we wanted to on campus. Sooner or later we would have to decide whether or not to drink and drive. Lets fact it, after we graduate there will be no policy that allows us to drink near where we live.

Often, no matter how overwhelming the evidence, we are reluctant to accept anything that is contrary to what we want to believe. This seems to be the case with drinking and driving, the consequences are so overwhelming, we look for excuses. It is vital that we accept what has been obvious all along, the only way to end drinking and driving fatalities is to stop drinking and driving.

Correction

In last week's issue of the Villanovan, two paragraphs of a letter head-lined "ROTC Reply" were inadvertently combined. The correct pangraphs should have read:

"Ever since President Franklin D. Roosevelt selected Villanova as one of the 12 colleges to establish the famous V-12 program, Villanova has been training prospective service officers. Villanova's NROTC program is an integral part of the University, and also ranks as one of the ten-highest quantity Navy-Marine Corps officer procurement ROTC units in the country.

"If Villanova is to continue to produce such high quality officers as Gen. P.X. Kelly, assistant commadant of the USMC, midshipmen in the unit must become both John Paul Jones' "Gentlemen of liberal education" and motivated and dedicated defenders of democracy and international stability."

What Stimulates Your Subconscious

By CATHY PILIERO

Maryann Smith, a typical, middle-class teenager, went into the drugstore on her way home from school. She spent $15 on mouthwash, shampoo, a feminine deodorant and cosmetics.

Does this sound unusual? It shouldn't. Millions of people do this every day and if they're asked why, they'll say they need the items for one reason or another. But what would you think if someone injected that idea into Maryann's subconscious so that she bought those items without really knowing why? It sounds like something that would happen in a science fiction movie, but chances are that is what happened to her. By the use of subliminal words and images, advertisers have virtually been brainwashing the people of America into buying their useless products.

Most people have heard of this "subliminal seduction" being used in movie theatres. During the film, "Eat popcorn," "Drink Coke" have been flashed on the screen. The words are flashed so fast that only the subconscious can pick up the message. During the six-week testing period, popcorn sales increased 57.7 percent and Coke 18.1 percent.

But does the public know of the other ways they're being seduced? I doubt it. People probably aren't aware of it because they can't see what's going on.

For example, advertisers frequently have the letters S-E-X written on models' faces, bodies and even on products so lightly that it can't be seen unless the picture is studied intently. Even though 'sex' is not seen consciously by the consumers' eyes, the message still registers subconsciously.

The use of phallic symbols is another way advertisers deluge our society with sex. Ads for lipstick, cigarettes, Tickle deodorant, and Pierre Cardin's men's cologne (the bottle is shaped like a penis) are all sexploitative.

Guilt is another way advertisers force people to buy their products, especially women. A classic example is an ad for a feminine deodorant. The caption says, "FDS. Because you're a woman." This implies a woman is dirty and should feel ashamed, unless, of course, she "deodorizes" herself. The ad fails to state that the vagina is a self-cleansing organ and the use of these sprays is unnecessary and even harmful (they've been linked with cancer and infections).

Advertisers often degrade people indirectly. This causes the consumer to feel no one will accept him unless he uses the certain product. Mouthwash is sold this way. It is said to kill 'bad breath germs.' This has convinced Americans that using it is useful and makes them more desirable. Actually, mouthwash has no advantage over a saline solution, but since it is the mouthwash that is glamorized on TV, people will still spend $300 million a year on another useless product. (By the way, thre is no such thing as 'bad breath germs.' Bacteria present in the mouth are destroyed by the alcohol in the mouthwash only when the mouthwash is in the mouth!)

Degradation also sells bust developers, one of the most facetious devices on the market. The ads show vivacious, well-endowed women saying how their once flat-chested, miserable lives have become so wonderful since they added five inches to their chests. Can a 36D bra size really make one's life as happy as it's claimed? Probably. But only after a woman has been insulted with the words 'plain,' 'undesirable' and 'embarrassing.' (Mark Eden uses these adjectives to describe a 34 bust.) She is made to feel ashamed of her chest unless she increases it to a 38, which is then described as gorgeous, curvaceous, shapely and desirable.

With all the money these desperate women spend on those useless items, they can buy weights and build their pectoral muscles. Weights probably won't add five inches, but neither will the Mark Eden program, BustBeauti, et. al.

Useless gimmicks like that make money, but ads for cereal, cigarettes, cosmetics and liquor bring in the most cash. They all illustrate fun, adventure, excitement and most of all acceptance. Advertisers know most people don't have the fun and excitement they want, so ads that illustrate it are used. Thus, the consumer thinks he can fill the gaps in his life by using those products.

If everyone in this country accepted himself, ads wouldn't be as effective. This doesn't seem likely, though, because of the way advertisers subliminally make people feel degraded and worthless.

Today, it's not what you see that sells, it's what stimulates the subconscious.

Switzer to Speak on Myth

By GREG MIZII

Judith Switzer, professor of cinema studies at Bucks County Community College, will be speaking for the Villanova Cultural Film Series on Sunday, October 10 at the Connelly Center, Villanova University. The topic will be the film "Beauty and the Beast," with discussion on its mythical contents. Switzer, who will be teaching a course dubbed "Women And Film" next semester at Villanova, feels that the Film Series is a valuable education program since it offers first class films and the opportunity for group discussion.

Switzer is a firm believer that film is the major art form of our time and that it offers education as well as entertainment. On the whole, she feels that people have not been exposed to a serious study of film because the academic community doesn't believe it to be a worthy part of the educational process. She is glad, though, to see that schools like Villanova are starting to explore the art form. Switzer also commented that the movie theatre is a good place to be educated about films. "Commercial T.V. cuts film to pieces while Beta, V.C.R., and Cable are limited to a small screen . . . the movie theatre is the best way to see what the director and the actors are saying; they create movies for the big screen and seeing movies in the theatre is all a part of the learning experience." Switzer concluded that nothing should replace the theatre and if T.V. gets a stranglehold on the movies it would be a detriment to creativity in the film world.

Judith Switzer

The new course, "Women and Film," will explore three major topics: films portraying women, films that make comments about women, and films made by women. Switzer pointed out that this three-pronged focus will cover the general roles and theories of women throughout film history and will discuss the sexist attitude toward women in the film industry. She explained that the history of film has been completely dominated by men. "Out of 30,000 films, only one-tenth of one percent have been made by women, and for the most part it has always been the male directors who have been casting women as objects of display. I'd like to see more women having the chance to be recognized as script writers and holding jobs in executive positions." Switzer noted that her course will be more in the mold of socially concerned film rather than the adventure film.

A graduate of N.Y.U.'s department of Cinema Studies; she is also a fan of the film director, Stanley Kubrick ("2061," "A Clockwork Orange," "The Shining," "Dr. Strangelove)." She wrote her Ph.D. dissertation on Kubrick and expresses the need for understanding Kubrick as a moralist and satirist instead of a negative film director. "His films are like puzzles that challenge the viewer to find out what they are all about. He is a moralist who simply stresses the weaknesses of human nature, but does not give us the answers to the problems." Switzer added that Kubrick is one of the most misunderstood directors in the film industry.

When asked about her future, Switzer replied that she is satisfied with teaching and that she loves to write about film. Switzer, who has been published in "The Film Reader" and "The Millenium Film Journal," feels that publishing is a challenging area. She believes that one has to participate in order to stay sharp and that's the reason why she will be speaking for the Villanova's Cultural Film Series.

Good American Schooling for International Students

By DINA KAMILATOS

Most Villanova students will not get to meet Alma Risech during their stay at college. She is the international student advisor for all foreign admissions to the University.

But about 150 undergraduates and graduate students will meet Risech this year in her office in Corr Hall.

Alma Risech, International Student Advisor. Charlie Guida Photo

It is extremely difficult for a foreign high school student to gain acceptance here at Villanova University. The requirements include good academic standing in high school (as always); good grades on an English proficiency test; and, if that wasn't difficult enough, they must show proof of tuition and expenses for one full year.

The proficiency test is called TOEFL (Test of English as a Foreign Language), and must be taken in his native country. The results are then sent to Risech, who looks over them, along with high school grades, and bank statements for proof of tuition. There is absolutely no financial aid given to international students (unless, of course, it is from his own government).

Indeed, the admissions requirements are tough, because many applicants are turned down due to a lack of tuition. Of those accepted to study at Villanova, several do not come because they are not guaranteed on-campus housing.

Of the 150 international students, about 100 are here for graduate work. Most of the graduate students study computer science.

Why the increase in foreigners at V.U? According to Risech, probably because of the phenomenon of word of mouth. Last year, only half as many international students attended Villanova. The numbers increase because satisfied alumni and their families relay the message to friends and relatives.

You may see these students on campus or in your classes — they come from 40 countries: including India, Taiwan, Venezuela, Phillipines, Ireland, Panama, Canada.

Augustinian high schools in Peru, Canada, and Panama encourage their students to attend Villanova University for a good American education.

After four years at Villanova (two years for graduate students) foreigners must return to their native country. This is due to immigration laws (a temporary student visa lasts four years). A practical visa allows for one extra year in the U.S. to work.

Room 102 in Corr Hall is mostly "a resource office. "Once the students are settled into college life, Risech handles specific problems such as job-hunting and passport and immigration complications.

"Students of the same culture stick together — they help each other find housing and they find solace with someone who knows their own native language. Several cultural groups exist at Villanova for these purposes," Risech commented.

Many of these Villanovans eventually remain in the United States (the University doesn't know exactly how many). After four years in a foreign country they change values, become "Americanized." It really is hard to go home.

Campus Clip

Could this be a training ground for the pros? Nope, it's just one of Villanova's intramural football games. Keep up the good work girls.

You Bet Your Life

By ANNE McRAE

The Air Force nurse is a special kind of health professional — she is both a nurse and a United States military officer. While many nurses today are struggling for greater autonomy and professionalism, the Air Force encourages personal growth and increased responsibility through continuing education. Today the Air Force offers a wide variety of career possibilities ranging from genetic specialization to nursing epidemiology.

Nurses specializing in genetics play a major role in counseling individuals affected by inborn genetic errors as well as detecting these defects. Patients are referred to genetic counselors by physicians who often do not have the extra time necessary to spend keeping up to date on advances in genetic science.

Aerospace nursing is largely preventative in nature. The aerospace nurse evaluates the health status of aircrew personnel and workers in hazardous occupations, setting up hearing and vision conservation, screening, and detection programs, dealing with material and child welfare, as well as nutritional and epidemiological problems. This expanded nursing role incorporates many of the duties once under the realm of the flight surgeon.

The Air Force Nurse Midwifery program is growing quickly. The nurse-midwife is an RN who has completed an intensive nine-month Residency Training Program and who passes a national certification exam. These nurses give obstetrical counseling and care for patients in all phases of normal pregnancies. Air Force nurse midwives are given a great deal of autonomy and have the necessary time to spend counseling their patients in the postpartum period.

The nurse epidemiologist routinely evaluates patients and environments for infection control purposes. She makes frequent rounds on nursing units in order to supervise isolation techniques. Other functions include maintaining records of patients who acquire infections while in the hospital and determining the effectiveness of sterilization and disinfection methods used. Nursing epidemiology is a dynamic specialization which requires thorough investigation and research to bring about needed changes in hospital techniques and policies.

These examples are just a few of the many specialties the Air Force has to offer its nurses. Yet, while these roles are quite varied, there is a single theme which underlies each one — autonomy. And as many nurses and nursing students know, autonomy in nursing is an extremely valuable thing to have especially in these swiftly changing times

Nation's Colleges Get Tough; Alcohol Rules Changed, Enforced

By LEONARD J. La BARTH

Colleges and universities around the country are imposing strict new alcohol policies and are creating new means of enforcing the policies as a result of pressure from various action groups and state legislators.

Students who are found in violation of the new rules are facing disciplinary actions ranging from reprimands to suspensions, with mandatory attendance at alcohol education classes included in the punishment. Some schools, including Notre Dame University, are being fined a minimum of $100 for violations.

The administrators of universities are cracking down on the drinking following law changes in dozens of states over the last three years.

The University of Maryland, Penn State, Rutgers, Arizona, Yale, the University of Denver and St. Bonaventure are a few of the schools attempting to develop or update alcohol policies this year.

Villanova University's alcohol policy, which was found to be in conflict with the state laws by the Pennsylvania Liquor Control Board (LCB) in 1978, has been under evaluation since then.

The Villanova Code of Student Conduct, Section 10 reads: "The possession, purchase, attempt to purchase, consumption or transportation of alcoholic beverages by any person under 21 years of age is illegal under the Pennsylvania state law. It is also illegal to give or sell alcohol beverages to a minor. Students who are 21 or older are permitted by the university to consume alcoholic beverages in moderate quantities in dormitory rooms; however, students are not permitted to consume alcoholic beverages in public places or buildings on University grounds or to dispense alcoholic beverages at functions sponsored under the name of the University without the expressed approval of the Vice-President for Student Life."

"Students who are 21 or older living in the dorms are allowed to have a can of beer or so while relaxing and watching football or something on television," said Dean of Students Rev. John Stack, O.S.A. "If the one student who is having a drink is joined by a friend, that's fine. But a party cannot be held and that one student cannot act as a distributor to the others in the dorm."

Early in 1978, the alcohol policy was reviewed and changed by the administration after LCB agents had visited the officials to advise them that there were obvious discrepancies with state liquor laws and the traditional "Cat's Eyes," a Villanova Union sponsored event.

On Sept. 14, 1978, the LCB raided the first "Cat's Eye" and charged four students with the sale of alcoholic beverages without a license. The charges were later dropped and a fine was paid.

Requests for exceptions to the current policy on the campus for alcoholic beverages at social events can be granted by the vice president for student life. This includes serving minors at various functions that have been university approved.

At Notre Dame, students can no longer bring alcohol onto university property. Maryland University has just banned alcohol for outdoor parties in order to comply with the state's new higher drinking age.

Because it would be "far too difficult to effectively monitor" outdoor parties for underage drinkers, the school has banned drinking altogether at such events, said Sandy Neverett, assistant resident life director.

The University of Arizona has cracked down on student partygoers also, issuing a rule that it is

'Third Rail' Danger Noted

By KIM RUSHTON

The third rail that powers the P & W trolley tracks above the S. Ithan Avenue bridge is "very, very dangerous" for anyone to go near, according to a Southeastern Pennsylvania Transportation Authority (SEPTA) spokesperson.

The spokesperson who requested anonymity, explained that the third rail powers the trains that use the tracks. Six hundred volts of electrical power travels through the tracts. The third rail is located to either side of the running rail, approximately one and one-half feet above it.

In addition, the spokesperson explained that contact with both the third rail and the running rail simultaneously would "instantaneously" kill a person.

The P & W bridge was the scene of an accident involving two sorority pledges Sept. 15, in which both sustained injuries when they were struck by a P & W trolley while attempting to paint the Ithan Avenue bridge.

Assistant Director of Student Activities Gary Bonas stated that all university organizations were urged not to paint the bridge, and was optimistic that all would cooperate. No official memoradum has yet to be sent to the organization presidents.

Bonas stated that there is a question of what jurisdiction Villanova has over the tracks, which are SEPTA property.

"Our only concern is the safety of our students — we don't want any other accidents such as falls or electrocutions. We want to do this without adding any more constraints — we are hoping that the students own a sense of responsibility that will take care of the situation."

Dean of Students Rev. John Stack, O.S.A., emphasized the need for students to avoid the tracks all together. "Even if a person thinks they are crossing the tracks with plenty of time can panic when they see an approaching train or accidently fall onto the third rail in a rush to get across the tracks," he said. Stack continued, "Simply being aware of the position and the great potential danger of the third rail does not mean that one could not accidently come in contact with it."

In addition, Stack added that the third rail's placement varies with the position of the banks of the tracks, and that a person could easily misjudge the position of the third rail at another P & W station.

The SEPTA spokesperson emphasized that proper use of facilities would prevent anyone from being injured. In addition, the spokesperon strongly advised people to stay away from the tracks.

V.U. Security Tightens Parking Lot Regulations

By CAROL ALKONS

Villanova Security is initiating a new program to eliminate illegal parking in University parking areas by issuing tickets indicating violations incurred and fining vehicles without current parking permits parked in unauthorized areas, according to Captain Joseph Cunnane, head of security.

Cunnane explained that the fines are "another means of eliminating cars that should not be parked here. Students, faculty members and other employees all pay to park. Those who do not pay are subject to be ticketed. We would expect that the persons who are not eligible to park here would arrange to park off-campus or keep their cars home.

"We are not in the business of harassing people; our interest is in attempting to obtain space for off-campus residents, commuters, and junior and senior residents who are eligible to park here. Freshmen and sophomore on-campus residents are not permitted to park," added Cunnane.

Currently, there are 800 inner-campus parking spaces for 1,200 faculty members and staff. The fee for inner-campus parking is $50 per academic year.

There are 2,400 parking spaces at St. Mary's, Stanford, Good Counsel, the Law School and the Lancaster Avenue parking lot for student parking; student parking permits cost $35 per academic year.

Those who receive a ticket for illegal parking are expected to pay the fine within five days or else the amount of the fine plus a $5 fee will be charged to the student violator's account, or deducted from a faculty/staff violator's salary.

"People parking without parking stickers have no excuse because the rules and regulations are well-publicised," explained Cunnane.

In regard to the towing of cars, Cunnane stated that vehicles committing multiple violations will be towed, and "flagrant violators causing lockages or congestion will be towed immediately."

University College Enrollment Up

By JACK McHUGH

Villanova University College enrollment has risen 24 percent in two years, according to a report released by the college.

Budget cuts in educational grants and loans, initiated by the Reagan Administration in 1980, accounts for part of the increase, according to the study.

Fall semester enrollment has grown from 1,516 in 1980 to 2,158 in 1982. The increase from 1981, when the enrollment was 1,877, is 15 percent.

Dean of University College, Angelo Armenti. Charles Guida Photo

According to Dr. Angelo Armenti Jr., dean of the college, the surge is due in part to the financial limitations being imposed on the students.

"A proportion of the increase were full-time students somewhere — not necessarily Villanova," Armenti said. "They simply decided that they could no longer afford to go full-time."

Financial aid is available to University College students provided that they meet two conditions: the student must be matriculated (they must have announced a major), and the student must be carrying at least six credits. According to Armenti, only about 50 percent of the students meet these requirements. All other aspects of financial aid are the same for the University College students.

Concerning future enrollment, Armenti expects it to increase but not at its present rate. Armenti also expects the University to reach a saturation level.

To handle the influx of students at the college, Armenti has introduced a 4:30 to 5:45 class this semester. "This has been a great success," Armenti said, "We started out with just seven sections and we were forced to have ten." Three classes were divided due to the large number of students wishing to take classes. The college will expand the number of classes held on Saturdays as well as the classes held on weeknights from 9 to 10:15.

Although the University College has its own admissions office, its requirements for the matriculated programs are the same as the undergraduate colleges at Villanova. The main difference, according to Armenti, is that the University College is willing to "take a chance on someone as a non-matriculated student. A typical case is someone who graduated twenty years ago and now wants to come back to school. They may only want to come back one course at a time."

After approximately 24 credits are earned, all students are encouraged to consider applying those credits toward a given major.

University College offers a total of 186 courses for college credit and 200 total. The college also offers a total of 14 degrees with two each in business and engineering, four in science, and the remaining six in liberal arts. University College also offers three minors through the arts and two in business.

The most popular degree programs are the two offered in business, accounting and business administration; the two offered by engineering, mechanical and electrical, computer science in science, and general arts.

Trustee Says Football Decision 'Unconscionable'

Thomas Labrecque, a University trustee and former chairman of the trustee Ad Hoc Committee on Athletics, in an April 1981 letter recently obtained by the Villanovan, said "the peremptory process used to arrive at the decision (to drop football) was not one to be proud of."

Labrecque, president of The Chase Manhattan Bank, wrote the letter to a fellow trustee, Joseph Walters, shortly after the Board of Trustees voted to discontinue Villanova's varsity football program.

In the letter, Labrecque said the "decision is wrong" and it was "unconscionable" that the trustees were not even informed prior to the April meeting that the matter was being considered. Labrecque was not at the meeting at which the decision was made.

Labrecque noted that his Ad Hoc Committee on Athletics, after more than a year of studying the feasibility of football, had concluded that "for a number of reasons, it should be kept."

Consequently, he said, "Given the history of the football issue, an abrupt decision with no advance warning to the Board brings into serious question the role of the Board and the importance and meaning of the studies it has commissioned."

He concluded that "this is a low point in terms of our integrity in communicating with each other, and in the decision making process . . ."

A spokesman for Labrecque said this week, "Mr. Labrecque is not going to comment on the letter at all. He considers it a private matter between himself and another Board member."

The full text of the letter appears below, unedited.

April 21, 1981

Mr. Joseph E. Walters, Jr.
J. E. Walters Corporation
Rosemont Plaza
1149 West Lancaster Avenue
Rosemont, PA 19010

Dear Fellow Trustee:

Tuesday, April 14, was a very troubling day in the history of Villanova University. Not so much because a decision was made to drop football, which I am clearly against, but much more importantly, because the peremptory process used to arrive at the decision was not one to be proud of. Given the history of the football issue, an abrupt decision with no advance warning to the Board brings into serious question the role of the Board and the importance and meaning of the studies it has commissioned.

Two years ago, the Board decided to form an ad hoc committee on athletics to review our entire program and facilities in the context of the 1980's. The Board asked me to chair that study; I agreed to do so. To accomplish the purposes of the study, we set up a committee which had broad university participation, including the trustees, the administration, the faculty, the athletic department and students. We formed a series of subcommittees to study several matters: the evolving Title IX issue and our evolving men's and women's sports; physical facilities to support a comprehensive program; and ways to finance these activities.

After more than a year of study and deliberation entailing hundreds of hours by all concerned, a series of recommendations were made. They included the upgrading of a number of women's sports, additional coaches for women's sports, and the retention of the current men's athletic program. The study also recommended the immediate rehabilitation of the stadium to provide for broader use by all athletic teams: intercollegiate, club, and intramural. It allowed for fuller use of the stadium by women, which improved our Title IX situation. It also provided for other student use for everything from band practice to a safer place for winter jogging. The financial recommendations were reviewed by representatives of the development office who participated in the study, and who subsequently recommended to the Board of Trustees that these needs be folded into the second Covenant Campaign, along with the second facilities recommendation, which was an indoor athletic building.

In addressing football, the committee concluded that for a number of reasons it should be kept, but emphasized that considerable effort should be made to develop a more eastern schedule with comparable schools. In coming to this conclusion, we talked to many people and observed that a number of universities of our caliber which had dropped the sport were now bringing it back, among them both Fordham and Georgetown. In trying to evaluate their reasons for reestablishing football, it was clear that this kind of activity adds to campus life on weekends in the Fall. It provides not only a social rallying point for students, and activity for bands, but also provides a significant gathering point for faculty, administration, and students to meet with alumni.

We also spent considerble time looking at costs. Each item was analyzed against the question, "What costs would go away if we dropped football?", as against costs which will continue irrespective of football. When we compared these truly marginal costs against the revenues received, the true cost to the University was considerably smaller. Given this cost picture and the other factors noted above, continuance of football appeared to be warranted, but no further expansion of scholarships or level was indicated.

This report was submitted to the Board over two meetings and was discussed in depth. As a result of this report and discussion the Board approved continuation of football. Significantly, both the process and the decision were made known to the entire Villanova community and the general public.

At our February 1981 Board meeting, Father Driscoll in his President's Report, informed us that he had received a feeler from Colgate, requesting that Villanova consider becoming part of an Eastern Football League which he stated he would like to pursue in the coming months.

It is now my understanding that the Executive Committee met a few weeks ago, and in their deliberations on the budget, decided to recommend to the Board to drop football. Subsequent to that meeting, no meeting, prior to the Board vote, was made by any member of the Executive Committee or the administration to notify me, the trustee most closely associated with the athletic report. No check was even made as to whether I would be present at the April board meeting, even though the President's secretary had been informed much earlier that the April meeting would be the only one I would not be able to attend this year. When I asked a few days ago why such an effort had not been made, I was told that they could not risk a leak. (However, the Board did not seem to have a similar concern about my ability to handle such delicate matters when they asked me to appear before the administration, faculty and student body to explain our report prior to the Board's final decision a year ago.)

It is unconscionable that a discussion on football was not even noted on the April agenda. The Executive Committee knew that football was important enough for study by twelve people for hundreds of hours over a year's time, and decided upon only after lengthy Board discussion. Yet they proposed to raise it again for yet another decision without giving members the opportunity even to look over the facts in the previous report.

In summary, I believe the decision is wrong, but that is not the fundamental issue. I believe that the process to reach such a decision falls short of an acceptable standard, relying heavily for justification upon an overstated need for action and speed, and denying the Board's ability to hold confidential information in trust. Villanova as an institution should strive to be irreproachable in every respect. In my judgment, this is a low point in terms of our integrity in communicating with each other, and in the decision making process, and will be viewed as such by the Villanova community and the public at large.

By copy of this letter I am requesting the Chairman of the Board to call a special meeting to consider this matter, allowing a more regular and open process to operate on this important question. In the long run, of course, the integrity of the process is as important as the decision itself. Advance notice of a deliberation on such an important issue is essential if we as Trustees are to be able to fulfill our responsibilities. If we are not to be trusted with notice regarding important issues, I believe we each have a decision to make with respect to remaining on the board.

Sincerely,
Tom Labrecque

Cunnane estimated a $35 towing charge from Radnor Garage, the official towing service of Villanova.

"It takes a little while to get people registered for a parking permit because many people will wait until they see a tow truck. Well, we're giving them fair warning, and we expect compliance," he stated.

New Minority Scholarship Established

By SCOTT MEYER

Father President John Driscoll, O.S.A. has established two Presidential Minority Scholarships this year as a result of the work of the Affirmative Action Program.

Edward Collymore, director of Social Action Programs, who provided the main impetus behind the scholarship initiation, wants to see more minorities enrolled at Villanova. "I would still like to see the Admissions Committee increase their recruiting in minority areas," Collymore said. Minority enrollment at Villanova is currently two percent.

The Affirmative Action Program attempts to monitor Villanova's standing as an equal opportunity and educational institution. When a teaching position is available, the Office for Social Action Programs requests notification to insure that the opening is properly advertised.

"I question the legitimacy of the search conducted by some departments," Collymore said. "The office attempts to increase the awareness of the affirmative action situation of those involved in hiring."

Two other established programs, the Academic Advancement Program and the Volunteer Programs, are also the responsibility of the Office for Social Action Programs. The Academic Advancement Program aids Pennsylvania residents who would not normally qualify for admission to Villanova, but who show evidence of probable success in college.

The program receives both state and university funding and is directed mainly at students who come from educationally disadvantaged backgrounds. The 90-100 students at Villanova receive tutoring and continual monitoring of their progress.

"The program has its failures, said Collymore, "but many of the students become highly motivated and continue into post-graduate education."

The Volunteer Program encourages Villanova students to contribute their time to the community. The program deals mainly with institutions for the physically, mentally or emotionally handicapped. Collymore believes that the cutbacks in student aid has forced many students to find paying jobs which has resulted in decreased involvement in the program. He still anticipates an enthusiastic response for Sunshine Day, an annual day of fun and games held at Villanova for the retarded. "This office is the nucleus of many things, but it takes students to make it work," said Collymore.

Alcohol

illegal to transport or consume alcohol in university vehicles. Recently, several student government officials were caught with 20 cases of beer in a university-owned station wagon and were publicly admonished as well as issued a severe warning.

University officials attribute the "toughening up" to increasing pressure by groups including Mothers Against Drunk Driving (MADD) and Jerry Falwell's Moral Majority.

State legislators around the country have enacted stiffer laws against drunk drivers, raised the drinking ages and increased pressure on liquor stores and bars not to sell alcohol to either minors or those who are intoxicated.

The colleges are responding to what they call "an increased public awareness of school abuse and demands for stricter controls."

"There's definitely a greater level of concern throughout the higher education community to address (alcohol) problems," observed Dr. Gerardo Gonzalez, president of Boost Alcohol Consciousness Concerning the Health of University Students (BACCHUS), and director of the Campus Alcohol Information Center at the University of Florida.

"There's no question we have a big problem," Gonzalez said. "About 90 percent of all college students drink, and we know from studies that 15 to 20 percent are problem drinkers."

He defines a problem drinker as "any student whose use of alcohol results in frequent negative consequences to themselves or to others."

Jane Whitney To Be Honored

By MICHAEL O'BRIEN

Jane Whitney, host of WCAU-TV's "Jane Whitney Show," will attend a fund-raising benefit in her honor to be held Oct. 16, at the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center.

The fund-raiser is being sponsored by the Domestic Abuse Project of Delaware County, which is a non-profit organization created to offer advice and support for the victims of domestic abuse.

Assistant Director of the Domestic Abuse Project, Sally Anne Hard said that, "Ms. Whitney is being cited for her efforts in bringing attention to the problems of domestic violence in our community."

The project, initiated in 1976, currently has two offices, one in Chester, and one in Media. It employs ten full-time staff members, as well as 60 active volunteers. Last year, the project served 2,100 victims of all socio-economic groups, of which 98 percent of these were women. The project offers a 24 hour-telephone hotline, long term counseling and emergency housing for victims.

Hard further stated, "The project is working toward the hope of building a shelter to house these domestically abused victims. The Delaware County currently has two shelters for abused animals, and none for the victims of domestic abuse."

The benefit will be a gourmet buffet/dance beginning at 8 p.m. Tickets are $20 per person.

Walkways To Be Completed

By BETH BONINA

The construction of walkways for students in the area between Alumni Hall and Falvey Memorial Library was vandalized Saturday, October 2, according to Thomas Trucks, director of maintenance.

The paths, which were approved in late August, are expected to be completed next week.

Trucks stated that the paths, which are being constructed by P.J. O'Shaughnessey & Sons Construction Company of Philadelphia, which were expected to be completed this week, but will not be finished until next week due to the vandalism over the weekend. The extra days work will cost the University approximately an additional $2,000, according to Edward Meagher, maintenance supervisor. Originally, the construction was estimated to cost approximately $8,280.

The project was instituted in order to facilitate students who are walking from the Corr Hall area to the Mendel Hall area.

"When it rains, the area becomes very messy and muddy with the students walking over it," stated Meagher. "Also, the area was unattractive, and we couldn't get any grass to grow in the area, so we thought that new paths would be our best bet for beautifying the Grotto vicinity," remarked Trucks.

Jim Sheeran, a senior business administration major, commented, "I think that the paths are a wonderful idea. It will certainly be better than walking through the mud from Bartley to Mendel when it rains."

Trucks concluded, "Anything that I comment on the vandalism couldn't be printed. We try to make things nicer and more convenient for the students by building these paths and someone has to go and mess things up by vandalizing them. There are far too many of these instances of vandalization here. It really is a shame."

Villanova's Common Heritage Institute (CHI) has recently been designated as a Non-Governmental Organization (NGO) by the United Nations, where Dr. John Logue, Director of the Institute, and his assistant, Colleen D. Sullivan, will serve as the Institute's representatives to the U.N.

Dr. John Logue, CHI director.

NGO status allows the Institute a number of privileges at the New York headquarters of the world organization. These include representation, the submission of policy recommendations, use of U.N. facilities and receiving of U.N. documents.

The Institute's new designation from the U.N. comes just as it is about to mark its 15th anniversary.

Since its inception, the Institute has sponsored discussion and research on many policy problems and published a number of studies. It has put special emphasis on three problem areas: the reform and restruction of the U.N.; disarmament and arms control; and the law and politics of the oceans.

The Institute's Advisory Board includes ocean explorer Thor Heyerdahl, University of Notre Dame President Theodore Hesburgh, Jan Tinbergen, a Nobel Prize-winning Dutch economist and Philadelphia attorney Bernard Segal, a former President of the American Bar Association.

Logue, who is a professor in Villanova's political science department, has been involved for many years with the work of the U.N. Law of the Sea Conference. Sullivan has concentrated on disarmament and arms control issues.

Although the number of students with alcohol problems appears to have peaked in the last few years, Gonzalez said, "it has stabilized at a drastically high level."

Twenty years ago, he points out, only 70 percent of the college students were alcohol drinkers, and only six percent were classified as problem drinkers.

Following the "Cat's Eye" raid, an LCB official told the Villanovan that if the university gives permission for a party and illegal drinking goes on, it "ties them in."

Edward B. Portnoy, then acting assistant supervisor of the LCB's Philadelphia office, said that the LCB does not free-lance to universities looking for law breakers. "The agency has the power of arrest to enforce the liquor code, and can enter any building, private or public, dormitory or classroom, without a warrant, if they have probable cause," Portnoy said.

Financial Assistance Explained

By LEONARD J. La BARTH

The U.S. Department of Education has prepared a comprehensive study in an attempt to clarify the current status and availability of student financial assistance.

In the article prepared by Edward M. Elmendorf, deputy secretary for student financial assistance, the study affirms that the budget reductions for financial assistance is a "return to original intent . . . to help students cover the cost of a college education — not to carry the whole burden."

Federal financial assistance is divided into three categories. "Grants" are awards of money which do not have to be paid back. "Loans" are borrowed money which a student must repay with interest. "Work study" provides the student with a chance to work and earn money to off-set college costs while attending classes.

The Pell Grant is the best known of the federal student aid programs. Formerly called the Basic Educational Opportunity Grant, Pell is often the first source of aid requested by students.

According to the report, more than two million students have been awarded close to $2.3 billion dollars in Pell Grants for the 1982-83 academic year.

In a study prepared last March by the Villanova financial aid department, 1,064 Villanova students received $954,835 in Pell Grants for 1981-82. The estimate for 1983-84 is for 572 students to receive $513,319 in grants — a two-year 46.3 percent cutback.

The education department study asserts that the Pell Grants are targeted to help those students whose families earn less than $12,000 a year.

"Grant aid is not meant to cover all the college costs but is expected to be combined with a reasonable contribution from the student's family," the report reads. "The U.S. Department of Education uses a standard formula to determine who qualifies for Pell Grants. The department guarantees that each participating school will receive the money it needs to apply Pell Grants to eligible students."

The Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grant provides another financial aid option to the needy student. SEOG is different from the Pell Grant in that is is managed by the financial aid department of the school. Each college receives a set amount of money from the department; when that money is gone, there are no more SEOG funds for the year. The Reagan Administration is seeking total elimination of the aid.

For the 1982-83 academic year, more than a quarter-million dollars is being provided to 440,000 students.

Another type of financial aid assistance is the College Work Study Program, designed to provide on or off-campus jobs for undergraduate and graduate students who need financial assistance.

An expected 280 students will receive approximately $392,953 in the program — a 27.8 percent cut from last year. According to the government financial aid study, 950,000 students will receive $528 million under this program in 1982-83.

The National Direct Student Loan, a federal program with a repayment on the loan at an interest rate of five percent, makes available loans that students must begin repaying six months after completing school. Up to ten years is allowed to repay the loan.

Approximately 800,000 students will receive NDSL's in 1982-83; 10,000 more than in 1981-82. By contrast, an estimated 350 Villanova students will receive $350,000 — a reduction of 145 students and a loss in funds of almost $44,000 from 1981.

According to the study, a bill signed by Secretary of Education T.H. Bell provides incentives for an institution to reduce the default rate of its NDSL program fund. The fund is a revolving account, managed by the school's financial aid department, to allow a college to continually make new loans as existing loans are repaid.

"A college which has a default rate of over 25 percent is asked to turn responsibility for collecting the debt over to the federal government," the report reads. "If an institution is not prepared to do this, and the default rate remains 25 percent or more, the federal government will cut off NDSL funding."

The Guaranteed Student Loan Program makes available to the student low interest loans which the federal government pays off while the student is in school. These loans are made by a lender (such as a bank, credit union or savings and loan association) and insured by the federal government or a state guarantee agency. This is the largest student aid program, making available over $9.5 billion in loans during the 1982-83 school year.

"Undergraduate students can borrow up to $2,500 a year and graduate students can borrow up to $5,000 under GSL," the department study asserts. "A student borrower whose family income is less than $30,000 automatically qualifies for an interest subsidized loan. Students whose family income exceeds $30,000 may still be eligible for GSL interest benefits if the college's financial aid ad-

Scholarships Reviewed

By LINDA BOND

The Villanova University fellowship committee has been interviewing candidates for the Rhodes, Marshall, Fulbright and Truman scholarships that provide financial assistance to qualified students enabling them to pursue graduate and research work.

Thirty-two Rhodes scholarships are given annually to Americans who have earned their bachelor's degree by the following fall. Tuition and all expenses are paid for two years of study at Oxford University in any discipline.

The Marshall Scholarship provides for tuition costs and all expenses are paid for two years of study leading to a British university degree at any university in the United Kingdom. As many as 30 scholarships are awarded annually.

Fulbright Grants are awarded to graduating seniors and graduate students for one year of study and research in any foreign country. Most grants include travel expenses, tuition, books and expenses. Five hundred of these grants are awarded annually.

Truman Scholarships are awarded to 100 current college sophomores planning a career in public services. The scholarship covers tuition, fees, books, and room and board for their junior and senior years, plus two additional years of law or graduate school.

Criteria for the Rhodes and Marshall awards also includes distinction of intellect and character.

"Competition for the Fulbright depends on the attractiveness of what one proposed to do in that country," said Honors Director Dr. Michael Burke. "The degree of competition depends on the popularity of the country."

Truman Scholarships are awarded on the basis of a academic record, public service and leadership, and the applicants potential for leadership in government.

Villanova previously has had students awarded Fulbrights and Truman Scholarships. The University has sent candidates to the state level of competition for the Rhodes and Marshall Scholarships, but has never had a winner.

Burke encourages students "to start thinking early" if they are interested in applying for a fellowship. He said a 3.8 to 4.0 grade point average is necessary in addition to "something special." Publication, an unusual job, exciting travel, major research or another unique qualification is needed.

Most financial aid is given through the particular institution a student will attend.

There are two other awards not handled through Villanova which must be applied for directly. Mellon Fellowships in the Humanities are given for outstanding academic promise, varied interest and ability to communicate. The National Science Foundation Fellowships are grants for work leading to an advanced degree in the mathematical, physical, biological, engineering and social sciences. A candidate is judged on his perceived ability to make significant contributions in these areas.

Graduate School Forum Planned

Representatives of 76 different programs will attend the fourth annual Graduate and Professional School Admissions Forum open to all college students in the Philadelphia area on Tuesday, Oct. 12, at Cardinal Hall on the Rosemont College campus and on Wednesday, Oct. 13, at Founder's Hall on the Haverford College campus.

There is no admission charge to the sessions, which will run from 1 to 4:30 p.m. "In addition to inviting all area college students, we welcome all parents of college students to attend the forum," noted this year's coordinator, Nancy Monnich, who is associate director of career planning at Bryn Mawr College. The forum is sponsored by Bryn Mawr, Haverford, and Rosemont Colleges and Villanova University, and rotates each year among the four campuses.

The forum allows students and parents the opportunity to talk with representatives of the different programs, to ask questions, and to collect information and literature. Three seminars have been scheduled each day on the graduate programs of primary interest to college students today: Business Schools at 1:30 p.m., International and Public Affairs at 2:30 p.m., and Law Schools at 3:30 p.m.

According to Monnich, this year's forum has attracted a record number of programs from many areas of the country; Tulane Law School, the LBJ School of Public Affairs at the University of Texas/Austin and the Public Policy program at the University of Michigan have all sent representatives. Many of the new participants, including Harvard Law School, the MIT Sloan School of Management, Stanford University, and the Yale School of Management, are among the most highly regarded graduate programs in the nation.

ministrator determines that the student has demonstrated financial need."

A new loan program started in 1981, called the Auxiliary Loan Program, allows parents, independent students and graduate students to borrow up to $3,000 a year. There is no cut off for eligibility. The interest on the loans will be lowered from 14 to 12 percent sometime in October as a result of lower average U.S. Treasury bill interest rates.

"As the economy continues to recover, we can expect a continued lowering of interest rates, thus easing student repayment costs and reducing federal expenditures," the report reads. "In addition, the Reagan Administration has embarked on a major initiative to collect delinquent and defaulted loans under the National Direct and Guaranteed Student Loan Programs. Only by maintaining its fiscal integrity can the federal government continue to play its part in bridging this gap through student aid programs," the report concludes.

Fall Just Isn't the Same Anymore

With the arrival of fall, most college students cannot help anticipating the weekends ahead, especially Parents' Weekend and Homecoming. They look forward to tailgates, marching bands, cheering crowds and the grunts and groans coming off the football field. The average college student looks forward to this, but unfortunately, the Villanova student does not.

Not to re-hash an old issue, but the cool breezes and changing leaves seem to raise a certain discomfort on this campus. It used to be that the Villanova student hardly had to plan his Saturday afternoon because it was all planned for him. But, now, he must think of other things to fill seemingly empty time.

It is with regret that we face another beautiful fall without the excitement provided by football games. Of course, there are other things to do, but they just cannot compare with the option of a football game. It is hard to organize an enticing two days for parents with the limited resources available here now, and it is even harder to get thrilled about the Homecoming activities taking place on Mendel field instead of the stadium and the parking lot. However, it is just something the Villanova student has to adapt to.

Fall does not necessarily represent football games, but no one can deny that the atmosphere here seems empty on a Saturday afternoon. Everyone must adjust to changes in his life. It is just unfortunate that we must adjust to one that appears to have been so senseless from the start.

Goals and Ideals of a Newspaper

"No story is fair if it omits facts of major importance or significance. So fairness includes completeness."
— The Washington Post
Deskbook on Style

This simple quote succinctly captures the essence of news reporting. By its very nature, the reporting of hard news must be strictly objective and detached. The reporter must distance himself from whatever personal feelings he may have about his subject and write in a fair, honest and dispassionate manner.

Unfortunately, this is often misinterpreted by some readers as being cruel, callous and insensitive. They seem to think that by reporting as many facts as can be gathered, by presenting as complete a picture of an event as possible, the news reporter is somehow trying to sensationalize or distort a story.

This is especially true when there is "bad" news. Often, those who are in some direct way connected with a tragic story have the mistaken notion that the reporter is personally abusing their feelings and the situation by recounting the story factually. Or that the newspaper is using their misfortune in order to satisfy the prurient sensibilities of a readership hungry for graphic details. No notions could be further from the truth.

The most basic function of a newspaper is to report, plainly and simply, the facts of as many newsworthy occurrences as possible, relevant to the community it serves. A paper's primary duty is to keep its readers well-informed about the happenings and events which affect their lives, both good and bad. A paper strives in its news section, only to tell the whole, objective truth, without masking, shading or dissembling.

These are the principles which we believe in and always strive to adhere to.

The Villanovan will print "Letters to the Editor" received prior to the deadline, Tuesday at 5 p.m. the week of publication. All letters must be signed, although the editors will withhold a name upon request. Because of limited space, the paper reserves the right to edit and shorten all letters.

Letters to the Editor

Villanovan 'Cruel and Insensitive'

Editors' Note: The following letter, at the request of the writer, was printed in its entirety, with no changes in style, punctuation, grammar or spelling.

To the Editor:

As a senior, in my three previous years at Villanova, I had periodically heard of the irresponsible journalism the Villanovan produces. Not until I had experienced it personally did I realize how cruel and insensitive a school newspaper could be. Once again, the Villanovan has outdone itself with its most recent exibition of cold, tactlessness.

In last weeks lead article concerning the death of a fellow student, the Villanovan, and its star writter Leonard J. LaBarth, reported the accident in a distant and uncaring manner. In their effort to remain an outside, objective reporting entity, the Villanovan has become something other than a school newspaper. The Philadelphia Inquirer and the Daily News were more compasionate and feeling in their coverage of the accident. They never refered to Monica Buckley as "the victim," or Mass will be held "Wednesday for Buckley." And I ask you, Villanovan, what other Main Chapel would we, the students, have gone to other than Villanova's?

The last issue, and the most tasteless segment of the entire article, was the quote from the "unidentified nurse." This reminded me of when one stabs another in the back and then proceeds to twist the knife. Good taste Len.

Finally, I was asked by a member of the family to mention two things. Although it was a terribly tragic accident, the Buckley's do not hold any ill-feelings toward anyone for anything. And secondly, to thank the students and the entire Villanova community for all the support given durring these difficult times.

My suggestion, Villanovan, is to change your name because as evidenced by this and other articles you print, you harm more than help the Villanova community.

Football

To the Editor:

Upon reading "Deegan Letter Revealed" in last week's issue, my first reaction was to respond to it in a way to show just how childish the contents really were.

However, after completely reviewing the Villanovan, I discovered Stephen Fallon, and what a breath of fresh air his statements in "Villanova Misses Football" were. Congratulations! Mr. Fallon, keep up the good work and perhaps someday soon students, parents and friends will be able to come together and have fun in the fall.

Homecoming

To the Editor:

I received an invitation last week to attend Homecoming, Oct. 22-24.

From 1953 through 1980 I attended every Homecoming. They all involved a football week-end, so, naturally, football is a conditioned reflex when Homecoming is nientioned.

The current Homecoming script features a Carousel and a Ferris Wheel.

You can see what I'm heading for, can't you?

I rush out to buy Carousel and Ferris Wheel tickets, for the wife and kids; the cousins; friends; neighbors; classmates, and their wives.

We try it. We like it. We re-up every year. It's neat. It brings everyone together; gets us interested in other activities at the Carnival Site. More and more, our lives revolve around the Carnival Site. We want to see all things go well for the operators of the Carnival Site at Carnival time and at all other times, and under all other circumstances — not just at Carousel and Ferris Wheel time.

Then, suddenly:

Discontinued!

There is no more Carousel and Ferris Wheel.

We ask: "Why?"

One instigator of the discontinuance accuses the Carnival Site community of having a Carousel-Ferris Wheel "mentality." He said discontinuation was "right," was "courageous." He said Carousel and Ferris Wheel did not contribute to the "mission" of the Carnival Site. It threatened to become a spawning ground for professional Carousel and Ferris Wheel persons; substituted Carousel and Ferris Wheel for academic excellence; reduced character building; resulted in disciplinary problems from the Carousel and Ferris Wheel "mentality." It led, he claimed, to a ring of thieves who, he claimed, threatened the lives of others. He even said "tens of thousands are behind" the operator of the Carnival Site for having discontinued Carousel and Ferris Wheel.

He failed to note that when tens of thousands are chasing one (to resign as operator of the Carnival Site), tens of thousands are "behind" him.

Is anyone whacky enough to think I want another scenario similar to the one they used to kill football?

To borrow the words of another wag: "NO WAY!"

Students Ought to Be Adults

At what age does one become an "adult"? 16? 18? 21? Our various laws give some idea of the diversity of opinions in this country alone.

The government believes that 18-year olds are old enough to die for their country.

Many states allow marriages to be contracted between young people of 16 without parental consent. All permit marriage at 18 without such consent.

In New York State, 18 is the legal age for purchasing or drinking alcoholic beverages. In Washington, D.C., it is 18 for beer and wine, 21 for "hard liquor." In New Jersey, the legal drinking age was just raised to 19. In Pennsylvania, a state long-known for its restrictive "blue laws," it is 21.

Needless to say, there is great variation in the level of maturity of people ostensibly the same age.

A truer gauge of maturity, or "adultness" — and it would seem to me to be the only worthwhile one — is the extent to which a person is willing to shoulder the responsibility of his or her own actions, to be responsible for one's own life and how it is lived.

Using this as my guideline, I find that the Villanova students who expressed their opinions regarding the University's alcohol policy in this past week's Villanovan think, and, I must logically conclude, act, in a most irresponsible manner.

You want to drink? Fine. You know the law. You know the rules of this school. Once in possession of the facts, it is your right to make a decision, even if it is breaking rules and against the law. But please note, it is your decision, no one else's. At least be honest enough to admit that. Do not try to tell me you are "forced" to go to drinking parties off-campus because of a lack of activities on campus. You have little imagination, and even less honesty.

Right and privileges do not come without responsibilities. I would find many of the Villanova students' opinions amusing, if they were not being so tragically short-sighted; so many supposedly "concerned" students blame, at least to some degree, the University's strigent alcohol policy for the tragic accidents of the past two weeks.

First of all, it was the legislature of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania — not the V.U. administration — who decided that the legal drinking age is 21. Villanova, for those of you who may not have noticed, is located in Pennsylvania. In adhering to a strict alcohol policy, V.U. is merely obeying the laws of the commonwealth in which it is located. All residents of Pennsylvania, students included, come under the jurisdiction of those same laws.

Second, while the V.U. administration may be acting "in loco parentis" and is therfore responsible to some degree for the actions of its students, this in no way should deflect our attention from the fact that the ultimate responsibility for a student's actions lies with the student him/herself. How very childish to claim that because of the University's alcohol policy, one is "forced" to drink off-campus!

Students are faced with many choices here: to drink or abstain, to drive while intoxicated or not to; to allow an intoxicated friend to get behind the wheel of a potentially deadly machine, or to prevent them from driving; to be a passenger in a car driven by an intoxicated friend, or not to. The consequences of each decision cannot be known exactly, but the advantages and risks inherent in each choice are sufficiently known to make an intelligent choice. At each step, choices must be made. Whatever they are, the resposibility for those choices can rest with no one but the individual who makes them.

Is it really the University's job to "teach the students responsible drinking," as one student suggested? Should that not already have been done by one's parents or family? At some point, each person must begin to take the responsibility on himself.

It's easy, though assuredly a cop-out, to cloud the essential issue with complaints of "nothing to do on campus." Certainly more on-campus activities can and should be provided for the weekends. It could only benefit the entire university community. With the Connelly Center standing as a great "Please Don't Touch" museum, the Field House, Dougherty and other buildings available, there is enough space for such legitimate student demands as Saturday night movies, concerts, parties, ect. The limit is your imagination and the cooperation of the administration and the students. The University does have a responsibility to teach and nurture students, to stimulate and enrich their lives.

However, the ultimate solution at Villanova lies with the students themselves. They must decide to demand action from the administration for increased student activities on weekends. They must decide to expand their horizons to somewhere beyond getting drunk and becoming involved in life-threatening situations. They must decide to explore other options, find other interests, discover other worlds: movies, theater, concerts, restaurants, cities full of treasures: Philadelphia, New York, Washington.

People who act responsibly show that they deserve to be treated as adults. Crying "Entertain me!," "Give me something to do or I'll get in trouble," is no more than psychological blackmail and an abrogation of responsibility — an admission of immaturity and further proof that one is not to be trusted or taken seriously.

Some decisions in life are forced upon us. Most are not. Next time you are tempted to blame "someone else" for a situation, think again, honestly.

And grow up just a bit. At least enough to acknowledge exactly which choices are made for you, and which belong to you alone.

The preceding Op-ed was written by a Villanova faculty member who asked not to be identified.

Alcohol Abuse Everyone's Fault

For a little over a month now words have failed me in expressing the deep sense of personal loss I have experienced as a result of the death of a very dear person in my life. She was killed by a drunk driver just about one month short of her 26th birthday. An accident that was not her fault resulted in death.

The recent tragic event involving the death of a Villanova student has brought all those thoughts and memories back in focus for me. The editorial in the Villanovan and the letters to the editor attempted to convey the necessity of taking some action in order to prevent future tragedies. But I think that the solution many are proposing fails to address the central issue at hand.

Socially, alcohol has become an integral part of our lives and I have no agrument with that fact. However, what I do have problems with is the way in which we have elevated alcohol to such a place of prominence in our society, often to the point that our sense of judgment becomes distorted when discussing the topic. People on all sides of the issue become defensive and begin to point the finger at the easiest available target. After such a tragic event, while our emotions are enraged, it becomes easy to shift the blame and not engage in some meaninful self-examination. We seem to lose our sense of perspective on this issue.

Suppose through some miraculous wave of a hand the University's alcohol policy were suddenly liberalized, and on-campus parties became very popular and successful, then what? O.C.R.s and commuters would start to attend such events and drive home afterwards. Also; it is naive to think that all off-campus parties would cease. This solution, a more liberal policy, fails to address the real problem. It strikes me that the real issue is not so much where the drinking is done, but rather, whether we accept responsibility for ourselves and for others. We must learn to take our responsibility for others seriously enough to intervene in their lives in a responsible manner.

A more liberal alcohol policy is not the panacea for what ails us. The proposed solutions only deal with the symptoms of a much larger malady: the use of alcohol and what role we permit it to play in our daily lives. Ultimately, no policy can dictate to people how much they will drink and where. This is an individual decision that each of us must make and take responsibility for. But as long as we foster an environment that accepts, and in some instances encourages irresponsible drinking, tragedies will continue to occur.

No party regardless of its location, whatever the amount of alcohol available or how much fun, is ever worth the loss of a single life. Particularly when that life is so young and still has so much to give to each of us.

Who, then, is to blame? I think in the final analysis all of us must share the guilt equally: administrators, students and faculty alike. We must share the responsibility because we have collectively failed to develop a real sense of community on this campus.

Who Knows, Who Cares

To the Editor:

I find the "Who Knows, Who Cares" column of the Villanovan a vicious attack on many of the people and organizations that make Villanova the university that it is.

For instance, this past week WKWC attacked President Driscoll for building two much-needed paths through the grotto in front of the library, using expletives to state his "exact words"; bluntly told WKVU radio to "go off in a corner somewhere and die," cut up a musician, Nina Kahle, who came to Villanova to perform her music; insulted the Rev. John Deegan, O.S.A., former vice-president for student life, for a comment made in a private letter to Driscoll; and if that wasn't enough, referred to the ROTCs as "Inconsiderate," "... sort of like garbagemen," "... protecting us from the 'World-Wide Communist Conspiracy.'" Sarcasm like this is totally uncalled for. Thought-provoking? Enlightening? Humorous? Not really.

The column, by maligning Villanova institutions, harms school pride in general. This is not good. Although I do believe in the freedom of the press exercised through healthy criticism, WKWC shows cynicism and lack of understanding towards the actions of the people and organizations which run and support the Villanova community.

'Jerks'

To the Editor:

What's with those three guys who complained last week about not getting their names printed for writing the winning "Who Knows, Who Cares" column? The jerks didn't even sign their names! I think anyone who writes letters to the editors without signing his name is a sniveling coward.

Innacurate

To the Editor:

There is an inaccurate statement in your lead article on the recent automobile accident that ought to be corrected. I am not sure if I made the incorrect statement or if an incorrect inference was made from my comments.

Specifically, near the end of the article, I am quoted as saying: "The University has minimal liability for a fraternity party held at a fraternity house off-campus." I think that this staement may mislead your readers into thinking that the house at which the Sept. 25 party was held is a "fraternity house." It is not. It is a house that is rented to several men, on a private basis — some of whom happen to be members of Delta Kappa Epsilon fraternity. It is neither rented to nor owned by the fraternity.

This is a relatively minor point, but considering the potential impact of this accident, all facts should be stated precisely.

Thank You

To the Editor:

On Thursday, Sept. 16, our son Dan Purschke was involved in a jogging/automobile accident on Lancaster Avenue. Through the quick actions of many, Dan was aided, comforted and cared for.

To the teams (soccer and rugby), coaches, trainers, students, neighbors, old and new friends, doctors, nurses and staff at Villanova University, we want to say "thank you." Your actions, professionalism, warmth and compassion have helped us make it through the past two weeks.

Soccer

To the Editor:

The time comes when talk of any one subject, no matter what it may be, becomes meaningless and stagnant. Remnants of protest denouncing the loss of football still hang in the air over campus. This should not be! The decision to drop football has been made, and if any actions to the contrary were to come about, they would have come about by now.

Although most V.U. students are ignorant to it, their soccer team has been battling opponents in the stadium for the past few weeks in front of mostly vacant stands. Of the fans that do attend the games, almost half are from the visiting school. There is no reason why Villanova's soccer team should not enjoy the advantage of playing in front of an enthusiastic crowd, like the football team did.

Almost all of what has been lost with the disappearance of football can still be found at soccer games. The student body should be more willing to see it. It's time for the students to turn their eyes from the past and support the teams that are still here. The stadium isn't empty, only the stands are.

Reality Denials

To the Editor:

The opinions expressed in the Villanovan last week (See "Drinking Policy Needs Revision" and "Letters to the Editor," Oct. 1, 1982) compelled me to respond. Students who blame the University for the recent tragic event in West Philadelphia ought to consider who really constitutes the University. The reader might wish to see John Cardinal Neuman's "Idea of a University." The thoughts contained in the letters especially expose basic psychological denials of reality.

The University is the sum total of all its parts. The responsibilities are shared and interdependent. For one element of the University to exclusively blame another can easily be an admission of failure. I would like to think that these views are isolated, but my fear is that this kind of thinking is more pervasive than I would like it to be.

Frats Liable

To the Editor:

Even though I am a Drexel University student, and only affiliated with Villanova through employment here, I felt compelled to respond to the various letters on the commentary page of the Oct. 1 Villanovan.

These different letters pointed at Villanova University as responsible for the tragic death and injuries. Although I realize that there are many out-of-state students at V.U., I'm sure most are aware that the legal drinking age in Pennsylvania is 21. I would also hope that as college students most of you are aware that V.U. is not a separate state, and gets no special privileges as to drinking age. Looking at these facts and knowing that those involved in the Sept. 26 accident were all under the legal age, responsibility can't be logically pointed at the V.U. administration by anyone with the slightest amount of intelligence.

First of all, the students must take responsibility in their actions. When you know you are going to drive, try to drink accordingly. This does not mean you have to abstain, but to drink only small amounts of alcohol. Second, the other students should look out for friends; if one is under the influence, take their keys if you have to, but don't allow the person to risk his life and the lives of others.

It also surprised me that many blamed the administration, but nobody pointed a finger at the frats. In my opinion, that frat members running the party should be somehow legally charged. They should be, and maybe are, under the same liabilities as a public bar.

If they can't handle the responsibility, they should not be allowed to have alcohol parties.

A few months ago, a case was made public that occurred in this area. A mother let her under-aged son have a party. One boy became drunk; he was subsequently killed as a result of his drunkeness. The mother of the boy who had the party faced criminal charges and was convicted. The frat members over 21 should be tried on the same basis.

One final point: bringing parties on campus would not have helped these kids because they would not have been allowed to go since they were under-age. So, in the final analysis, this kind of thing can be avoided only by people acting in a responsible way, looking out for one's neighbor and using common sense.

Appalled

To the Editor:

I am appalled at the reactions of so many students to the tragic accident of last weekend. The published opinions that the lack of campus social life and the strict alcohol policy at Villanova are largely responsible for students driving home drunk from parties is an irresponsible attitude. It astonishes me that people can accept behavior such as drunk driving as inevitable student behavior out of one's control, and then childishly blame the University for actions which each individual is solely responsible for.

As young adults we are continually striving for adult privileges and the right to decide for ourselves, and yet many turn to the University for external controls over where students should get drunk. One student analogized the desire for alcohol to a child's desire for a cookie jar out of reach.

I feel that we must take responsibility for that which is within our control and not blame the University. Peter Egler projected this blame best: "I just ask that the administration learns a positive lesson from this tragedy and seriously reevaluate the alcohol policy on-campus." No matter what happens with the alcohol policy, we must each take the responsibility for our own actions and those of our friends when they do not. The reactions to the death of Monica Buckley makes me fear nothing much will change because the students, who are the object of concern, have not learned a "positive lesson from this tragedy."

Many possible revisions were suggested that would allow for on-campus parties so that the students would only have to go a short distance in order to arrive home safely. "This way people would not be driving anywhere and this would decrease the risk of more serious accidents happening" (Suzanne Schwind). Let us not forget that the majority of Villanova students live off-campus and that there would still be people driving home drunk from bars and parties.

As John Horan said, "Ultimately it's up to the student to act in a responsible manner." I only hope that Villanova students will be mature enough to accept this responsibility as their own.

Alcohol 'Facts'

To the Editor:

Due to the recent automobile accident in which a Villanova coed died, the Villanovan has written and received much response on the topic of the alcohol policy. The students who contributed to the barrage of letters asked for a change in the current policy, but offered no alternatives themselves. Most of them, although not admittedly doing so, blamed the administration for all the problems; I do not believe the administration is at fault.

Fact: Students are going to drink, whether to be sociable, for a release from school and its tensions or to get drunk. For whatever reason, students will drink.

Fact: It is against the law for anyone under 21 to consume alcohol in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. Since Villanova is located in Pennsylvania, it must abide by the laws of the Commonwealth. Although this University is a private corporation and can determine how it is to be run, Villanova must still abide by the Commonwealth's rules.

Fact: Whether the parties are on-campus or off, there will always be students behind the wheel of a car, since approximately 57 percent of the student body lives at home or off-campus, according to the Admissions Office.

Fact: The only way to curb the problem is through responsible drinking. And where should this be taught — the home? the school? Ultimately, the answer is resolved in ourselves. Quoting Rev. John Stack, O.S.A., from last week's Villanovan, "The events of last weekend were nothing short of tragic, but they provide us all with the opportunity to look at some serious questions. If we choose not to do so then we have not learned from the experience of others, and if we fail to learn, we fail to become responsible persons."

Weekend Alcoholics

To the Editor:

Last week's letters on the tragic accident of Sept. 26 seemed to follow this argument for fixing the blame: "The administration of Villanova's restrictive alcohol policy forces students to go off-campus to find social activity on weekends, creating the dangerous combination of drinking and driving."

Before the student body assaults the V.U. administration for change, however, it should consider how responsibly most students deal with alcohol. Rather than being intelligent social drinkers, most student are "weekend alcoholics," drinking to intoxication on two days to relieve the pressure of the other five.

Certainly V.U. should meet the social needs of its student body, but what good will it do if V.U. caters to student alcoholism on-campus? What will happen when students stagger across Lancaster Avenue or Route 320 and are hit by a car after returning from an on-campus party? Who will be blamed? Facing the truth, whenever irresponsible drinking is involved, blame rests on the drinker. When one is an alcoholic, only he or she can overcome the problem before the problem overcomes the drinker.

From Here to the Slopes..... ..... And Down

By MARIA PREVELIGE

Have you ever pictured yourself at the top of a snow covered mountain, preparing to glide down? Perhaps you are an old pro at this game, or maybe this picture has been painted only in your imagination. In any case, Dr. James Klinger, a marketing professor at Villanova, Joe Nentwit Jr., and Judy Sujansky held this picture, and formed a new club to share this with the Villanova Community.

Last spring Klinger, the club's sponsor, Nentwit and Sujansky started the club, and this fall managed to move into full swing. The goals of the club are to make ski trips more accessible to a large group of interested students, and to have fun. The club hopes to lower costs of the joys of skiing by obtaining group rates at ski resorts and lodges, and also by providing transportation at reduced rates.

The club has grown considerably since it's start, and presently has approximately 35-40 members. The club includes the avid skier, as well as the novice. The club's president is Joe Nentwit, a junior marketing major, and Judy Sujansky, a senior nursing student is the club's vice president. Other positions held are treasurer, Dave Sudjian, a senior commerce and finance major, and secretary, Valerie Bankert, a freshman. The club also has a trip committee, and a special functions committee.

The club hopes to take trips to the nearby, beautiful Poconos, skiing Doe Mountain, Camel Back and Elk Mountain. The plans include exciting day trips, as well as alluring weekend vacations. These weekend excursions may include journeys to the mountains of New York, or New England. If your dream has been to ski out West, or in Canada, the ski club may bring this to reality. The plans hope to include a Christmas vacation to Canada, and a spring break ski party in the West.

The club hopes that many students will join this year. According to Sujansky, the club has gotten a tremendous response. There are a lot of students that want to get together and save money, make new friends, and mostly just have a good time. She feels that there are a good number of students who like to ski, and many that might, if they had the opportunity. The club aims to make this easier, and a reality.

The club sponsored trips will be open to all Villanova students, however, priority on limited accomodations will be given to club members.

The interested skiers await the first heavy snow fall. They long to bundle up in their wool sweater, down jackets, gloves, scarves and hit the slopes. For the novices, the hitting of the slopes may be more literal and the thought of the toasty lodge, roaring fires, and hot chocolate may prevail. Whichever may appeal to you, the ski club now makes this possible.

The club's next meeting will be Wednesday, October 13, in room 110 Bartley. The membership fee is $3 plus additional fees for transportation rentals, lift tickets, and accomodations.

By popular demand the movie that "will leave you feeling 10 feet tall" is now playing at theatres everywhere.

Campus Ministry PERSPECTIVES

Parents

By JOHN LOZANA

"I tell you that anyone who leaves father or mother for my sake and the sake of the gospel . . ." (MK 10:29)

Leaving father and mother is an experience all people undergo at sometime in their life. Some leave for the call of the gospel, some hear and respond to other calls, and some simply because it is that time in life to move on.

Leaving is inevitable, and eventually achieved by all. How we leave and what we leave behind is as different as one face is from another.

I have recently had cause in my life to do some reflecting on the people called "Parents."

Not long ago I myself became a parent for a second time. During those first few days of holding my new son I was filled with questions that perhaps all parents ask themselves at one time or another. Can I really be the parent this child will need? Will all my hopes for this child come to pass?

Shortly after this I was thrust into spending long hours in a hospital holding my mother's hand as she lay near death. Again I was filled with awe. This time at the mystery of death with all its definitive power. Questions again filled my mind. Did I spend enough time with her these past few years? Could I have done more for her?

What made me thankful at this difficult time was the questions I did not have to ask myself. Does she know I forgive her for all her failings? Does she forgive mine? Does she realize I know she did the best job she could and I deeply appreciate it all? Does she know how I really feel about her?

Leaving parents is inevitable. How we leave and what we leave behind makes all the difference.

Perhaps this coming parents weekend will be more than a nice walk through campus and a pleasant dinner together. Perhaps it will be a time for resolving some questions we all took with us when our time for leaving came along.

Dress for Success

(CPS)—David Zimmer successfully worked his way through business grad school by dressing his fellow students for success.

Zimmer has sold about 40 "B-School Suits" to fellow students at Pittsburgh's Carnegie-Mellon University's graduate business school, which primes Zimmer's customers by holding a dress-for-success forum each fall.

Zimmer declines to say how much he's grossed from the venture, except to say, "We've done very nicely."

He does it by buying the clothes from his uncle, a 30-year veteran of the clothes manufacturing industry.

Zimmer discounts them to draw customers. "We are offering $250-$300 suits at one-half to one-third off. When students finish graduate school, they have umpteen thousands of loans. It's almost necessary that they save some bucks."

Business school placement Director Ed Mosier declines to say how Zimmer-outfitted students did in the job market this year, demurring, "From a recruiter's standpoint, I don't think they would ask who the tailor was."

Some wouldn't even ask about how the applicant dresses. There are those who dismiss the dress-for-success urgings as a mere placement office fad.

"The prescriptions given in some of the dress-for-success guides are just a little too simple," claims Hilda Buckley, a clothing and textiles professor at the University of Illinois.

Some employers might be impressed by snappy clothing, she concedes, but others give little notice. A few might be intimidated if an interviewee looks better than them, she warns.

"At a job interview, the first thing your interviewer will probably notice is your resume," she says.

"And once you're into the interview, whether you're wearing an expensive navy-blue shirt and carrying Cross pens or dressed in Harris tweeds and writing with a Bic, your etiquette and personality will make the real difference."

Buckley agrees the dress-for-success guides can help, "but it doesn't mean you have to go out and buy $500 suits. Most likely, you can get by with something for $50."

Zimmer's customers are undaunted. Zimmer, who graduated into a job selling wines to foreign countries, has kept B-School Suits alive as a sideline, and plans to hire a sales rep this month to outfit the Class of '83.

V.U. Compares Favorably with Nat'l Network Poll

By ROBIN LUCARINI

Recently, the Villanovan was sent the results of a survey conducted by the ABC television network about daytime serials (soap operas). The survey was conducted throughout 11 major universities across the country and the results of a recent survey conducted on Villanova's campus are quite similar.

"They give me one of the most hysterical hours of laughter I get all week," was one of the comments made when students were asked their opinion of daytime serials. Another student liked to "space out on them when there's nothing better to do" while most students appreciated a good storyline, quality acting and interesting drama.

In agreement with ABC's survey, pertaining to males and females, Villanova men choose "General Hospital" as their favorite for it s action and "unrealistic" drama, however the girls of Villanova cited "All My Children" also an ABC program, as their number one daytime serial due to its "believability" and relation to their own lives. Still "General Hospital" was chosen as their second favorite soap, with "One Life To Live" and "Ryan's Hope" both ABC shows, running a close third and fourth.

For male and female students alike, soap operas were generally watched with at least one other person, or in groups of three or more. Doing a bit more than watching television, one male student even makes a party out of "General Hospital" with up to 40 people gathering on Friday afternoon at the start of the show to "drink and plan the weekend."

To ABC's credit and, certainly, delight, an overwhelming 95 percent of the students polled chose ABC as having the best daytime serial lineup, mostly because of the programs' interesting storylines and on-location shoots.

The Joint Was Really Jumping

By GREG ANTON and JAYNE STUART

"Jesus Christ Superstar" initially was an album. The extremely popular title song generated much interest in the Andrew Lloyd-Tim Rice collaboration. Numerous productions of the rock opera were staged throughout the theatrical world in the early 1970's, including a highly-acclaimed run on Broadway. Soon, "Jesus Christ Superstar" was made into a motion picture and once again received critical acclaim. Now, "Jesus Christ Superstar" has returned to the stage in a new gospel version by the Peddy Players Theatre Company.

Aside from technical difficulties which plagued the performance, the Peddy Players' production is a joyous celebration of music and dance. Although the rock opera undergoes some cosmetic changes in the production, it still retains all of the vitality and exhilaration of the original.

The Peddy Players, founded in 1969 in Detroit, Mich., is dedicated to the production of black music theatre. Under the direction of co-founder James Peddy, the company began its national tour of "Jesus Christ Superstar" at the Shubert Theatre in Philadelphia on Sept. 28. Peddy has staged a clever, uninhibited production, where the rock score has been jazzed up and given a crisper sound with an upbeat tempo. The songs become spiritual anthems, loaded with raw emotion.

Peddy's direction is functional as well as creative. He utilizes every inch of the stage, often relying upon the barren set, comprised solely of a set of iron steps and landings, to convey several images. It is a credit to the cast and the choreographer that the same set can be convincingly employed as either the deserts of Israel, the temple of the high priests or the Garden of Gethsemane.

The cast meets the challenge of the demanding roles and gives a solid performance. Freddie Rice's characterization of Jesus radiates a powerful and mysterious aura throughout the theatre. He has an amazingly strong stage presence and from the first time one sees him, then hears him sing, one can instinctively sense that he is perfect for the part. Rice, throughout the performance, confirms these intuitions.

Tramaine Hawkins exhibits her beautiful soprano voice in her portrayal of Mary Magdalene. Her rendition of "I Don't Know How to Love Him" is as passionate as a torch song may ever get. If for no other reason, Tramaine Hawkins' performance alone necessitates the production's label as a new gospel version. Her bluesy soul sound packs such charisma, she often raises the audience to a frenzied state.

The chorus is equally effective in evoking audience reaction. They abound with limitless energy and agitility, yet always remain so controlled and, more importantly, synchronized. The lavish production numbers, especially the temple cleansing scene, are an incredible display of precision, gymnastic ability and endurance. They really get the joint jumping.

Suprisingly, the one major disappointment of the evening came from Edward Hawkins as Judas. He has received star billing for the production and is the main thrust of the promotional campaign. Hawkins (brother-in-law of Tramaine), known as the father of contemporary gospel music, has achieved great success in the recording industry. However, his dramatic abilities are put to the test in the extremely difficult role. Edward Hawkins overacts, reducing the intensely enigmatic character of Judas to no more than a smitten child who has gone off to pout. Also, he has a tough time annunciating the very fast lyrics and mumbles through them. When it is not the lyrics that are causing him trouble, it is his microphone. He seems to shy away from it deliberately and hence has trouble projecting his voice, making it inaudible at times. Claude Thompson, as Caisphas, has the same trouble.

The production was also marred by technical difficulties. Throughout the evening, the speaker system gave off a horrible, snap, crackle, pop sound, probably the result of a poor wiring job on some microphones. One tried to ignore it, but it was impossible to do so. It was a great distraction and should not have occured at such a professional show.

"Jesus Christ Superstar" is one of many exceptional works by the gifted team of Lloyd Webber and Rice. One should never pass up an opportunity to see a production of one of their projects, especially when it is of such high caliber as the Peddy Players'. It is such an inspiration that it had the audience standing, dancing and clapping for five minutes as the cast took its final curtain call.

Springsteen Shifts Gears

By DEAN C. BALSAMINI

"Nebraska," Bruce Springsteen's sixth LP, is a very unique and interesting album. Recorded in Springsteen's New Jersey home on a Teac 4-track cassette recorder, "Nebraska" may be the Boss' most passionate album yet. It is also the first record that doesn't include the E-Street Band.

Originally, Springsteen had wanted to record this album with the band, but then felt it did not fit the mood. So this ten-track LP is all acoustic, featuring just Springsteen playing both harmonica and guitar.

The best way one can describe "Nebraska" is stark. Each song tells a story of some of life's losers, people who either have no luck or have just gone wrong. Each track paints a bleak picture of life and the struggle to survive.

The album is slow paced and often seems to plod along. Only three songs have any real beat or movement to them. But "Nebraska" is not an album that you listen to once or twice. It takes several listenings before one appreciates how good this album really is. Some of Springsteen's best lyrics are continued on this LP.

"Nebraska" the title track and opening song, tells the story of a young man and his girlfriend who go on a murder spree. Narrated by the killer, he has no regrets because, "At least for awhile sir/me and her had us some fun." When asked what motivated his behavior, the killer replies: "Well sir I guess there's just a meanness in this world." This song most likely depicts the Nebraskan slayings by Charles Starkweather in 1958.

"Atlantic City" makes reference to Philadelphia mobster Phillip Testa, who was murdered last year. But actually, this song tells the story of a man trying to change his luck through playing at "the tables." The names and places change, but Springsteen continues the story of his previous characters. In "Meeting Across the River," from the "Born to Run" album, Eddie and his friend are trying to make a buck. They have a "Meeting with the man on the other side/Tonight's the real thing Eddie."

In "Atlantic City" the character tells his girl that he is "goin-out where the sands turn to gold." Springsteen once said that no matter what the situation his characters are in, without the girl it doesn't mean a thing.

The people and surroundings depicted on "Nebraska" are the antithesis of what Springsteen sings about in "Thunder Road," or for that matter on the "Born to Run" album. Where "Thunder Road" leaves one feeling exulted: "So Mary climb in/it's a town full of losers/and I'm pulling out of here to win!" "Nebraska" is filled with fond memories but pessimistic viewpoints. Dreams are shattered and people are either unfulfilled or disappointed.

The two best songs on "Nebraska" are "Highway Patrolman" and "State Trooper." The former is about a patrolman whose brother Franky is a punk and criminal. But the patrolman looks the other way when Franky gets into trouble — for the two are "flesh and blood." But one day Franky goes too far and the patrolman chases him across the border. Springsteen has penned a beautiful song that illustrates the ambivalent feelings one's conscience feels — and when one must draw the line. "I catch him when he's straying'/like any brother would-/man turns his back on his family-/well he just ain't no good."

"State Trooper" recounts a modern day "lone ranger" who has nothing but his car. He drives as fast as he wants hoping that no state trooper will stop him. His conscience is clear and he's not worried about dying. "Hey somebody out there/listen to my last

Romeo Void Fills Musical Gap

By STEVEN HELMETAG

Some of the most common words heard on the dance floor this summer were "I might like you better if we slept together." Believe it or not these were not propositions but lyrics to Romeo Void's hit single, "Never Say Never."

"Benefactor," the the third release from one of California'a hottest bands, is in effect Romeo Void's debut album. The group has a musical stance that is witty and independent of other new music acts. With crossover capability reaching into the rock, dance-oriented, and noncommercial formats, the band has the strength to gain popularity among many audiences.

Romeo Void (the name refers to an absence of romance in today's society) first became popular on the college level in the spring of 1981 with "White Sweater," a single released on San Francisco's 415 Records. The first album, released a year ago, became prominent in many dance clubs with "Myself to Myself" and the initial release.

"N'v'r Say N'v'r," an extended play record, produced by Cars' leader Ric Ocasek, was originally planned as a single. Then came "Never Say Never" which, although gaining virtually no airplay on commercial radio (like the first record), became a tremendous hit on progressive stations and clubs.

Over the summer, 415 Records was taken under the wing of industry giant CBS. This enabled CBS to expand their new music talent and greatly aided the distribution of all of 415's product. This deal should substancially help promote "Benefactor."

The album contains an edited version of "Never Say Never." Besides shortening the song by almost three minutes, a certain obscenity was covered up by a heavy thrash from guitarist Peter Woods. This compromise was undoubtedly a part of the major record label's influence. Unfortunately, creativity is sometimes forsaken for commerciality.

Nonetheless, "Benefactor" is indeed a good record. Saxophonist Benjamin Bossi is indeed a musician and not just a sax player. His sound contributes greatly to the overall image of the band, hard but not without feeling. Woods gives new interpretation to the guitarist as a rhythm player.

In what has become a large field of female vocalists, Debora Iyall is a rarity. Combined with the masculinity of Romeo Void's music, Iyall's feminine sexuality forces the band to stand out in the crowd. While Joan Jett and Chrissie Hynde come off as being cold and masculine, the sensitivity of Iyall's lyrics and vocal inflextion enhance the group's overall sound.

Besides "Never Say Never," "Benefactor" has potential to have at least two other dance hits. "Flashflood," a likely pick to be released as a single, follows the first hit on the new record. "Chinatown" produces the same feel as The Vapors' "Turning Japanese" and deals with life in San Francisco, the home of Romeo Void.

Springsteen

prayer/hi-ho silver — o/deliver me from nowhere." Springsteen ends the song with a resounding yelp as he "rides off into the sunset."

"Nebraska" at times brings to mind both Woody Guthrie and Bob Dylan in its solemnity. Springsteen's enunciation and almost politeness in his lyrics conjure up visions of Elvis Presley. Springsteen may have meant this album to be a tribute to all of these men.

The man one hears on "Nebraska" is the Springsteen former manager Mike Appel originally hyped as the next Dylan. But ultimately Springsteen is not folk. His roots are in rock 'n' roll. "Nebraska" just reveals another facet to this multi-talented artist.

"Nebraska" is quite different than the Springsteen we have come to know through his first five albums. He is broadening and expanding his horizons as an artist. The Boss is definitely taking risks here because this album may alienate many of his fans. But as the man himself once wrote; "The door is open but the ride ain't free."

Interview With Richard Benjamin

By DEAN C. BALSAMINI and JOHN F. LYNCH

"My Favorite Year," starring Peter O'Toole and Mark Linn-Baker, is a film that recalls the "Cavalcade of Stars" era of live television in the middle 1950s. A thoroughly enjoyable movie, "My Favorite Year" also marks the directorial debut of Richard Benjamin. A native New Yorker, Benjamin's acting credits include "Goodbye Columbus" and "Love At First Bite." The Villanovan had a chance to chat with Benjamin during his recent stop in Philadelphia to promote his movie.

Villanovan: "How did you get the opportunity to direct?"

Benjamin: "There were people who knew I was interested in doing this and I had directed before in the theatre also."

Villanovan: "Did you direct any of the shows from the television series 'Quark'?"

Benjamin: "No. I worked with the writers but didn't actually write. I really liked 'Quark'. I have the feeling that no one understood 'Quark' until the very end. By then it was too late. Wait a minute — I get it!' And then it was gone. I have gotten calls where people tell me, 'It's not a kids' show, is it? It's not for Saturday mornings?' I think there is a saying that satire goes on Saturday nights."

Villanovan: " 'My Favorite Year' never really gets too heavy does it?"

Benjamin: "No. I purposely wanted it to be a comedy and I wanted it to be about real people and have full range of feelings."

Villanovan: "Considering the economy, did that have any effect on whether to make a comedy or not?"

Benjamin: "I thought about it in a very Capra-like way. There was not going to be a mean spirit running through this picture."

Villanovan: "Your use of New York City was excellent. How difficult was it to capture exactly what you wanted?"

Benjamin: "The problem was period. There were some lighting difficulties, but period was the main problem. Making sure all the cars in a scene were not 1982 models. I wanted a movie with size. I wanted people to know they were in 1954. But I didn't overdo it because it was just setting and didn't actually have much to do with the story."

John Lynch Photo

Richard Benjamin during recent visit in Philadelphia.

Villanovan: "How was it working with Peter O'Toole?"

Benjamin: "Oh, he was wonderful, quite extraordinary. Very contributive, very smart, would take out jokes — even though some of them were funny, because he felt that they were jokes not right for the character. He wanted to do all his stunts — which he did. He brought a certain level to it. Why did people want to see Errol Flynn or Douglas Fairbanks? Because they did their own stunts and everyone knew it. Very complex and interesting men."

Villanovan: "When did filming for 'My Favorite Year' begin?"

Benjamin: "I started in September 1981 and finished in December. The film cost $7.9 million to make, which is under the average cost of today's movies, which is 11 million."

Villanovan: "In 'Goodbye Columbus' did you feel uncomfortable playing the role you did? (The quiet boyfriend of a Jewish American Princess, played by Ali MacGraw)"

Benjamin: "No. I could relate to the role — with the rich girl's house and everything else."

Villanovan: "What is your favorite movie?"

Benjamin: " 'The Treasure of Sierra Madre.' "

Villanovan: "How about one that you starred in?"

Benjamin: " 'The Steagle.' It's a remote film from a book by Irving Faust. It's on cable every once in a while."

Villanovan: "Do you have any ambition to direct your wife (Paula Prentiss)?"

Benjamin: "Yes. Yes, in fact I think that is a goal."

Villanovan: "Are there any other aspects of the motion picture industry you would like to try?"

Benjamin: "No. I don't think so. Producing is awfully hard — and too business-like."

Villanovan: "I understand there is going to be a sequel to 'Love At First Bite.' "

Benjamin: "Yes. Every couple of months I get calls from Bob Kaufman saying 'We're doing it.' They want to call it 'Love At Second Bite.' (Benjamin rolls his eyes) Orginally it was going to be called 'Dracula Sucks Again.' For a minute I thought it was a porno film. Well I thought, as long as my career is going to go down the drain. . ."

Villanovan: "After starring in 'Love At First Bite' do you now know how to kill a vampire?"

Benjamin: "Yes. Yes. I know now it's not with a cross. I got that wrong."

Parker's 'Wall' Stands On Its Own

By PETER BERKERY

"The Wall" expands the rock and roll movie genre, creating a new realm in sight and sound. The film contains no concert footage of Pink Floyd nor any in-dept interviews with members of the band. "The Wall" is simply the lyrics of Pink Floyd's album of the same name brought to life by director Alan Parker. The film contains almost no spoken dialogue, since most of the dialogue is contained within Roger Waters' lyrics. The scenes move along at a quick pace and are extremely vivid, using innovative and imaginative cinematography and animation. The music is perfectly synchronized with the action of the film, causing an overwhelming effect on the audience.

By its very nature, "The Wall" will not appeal to all. However, the movie is not just for rock and roll fans, since Waters provides an insight into rock music that cannot be obtained by listening to Ozzy Osbourne or AC/DC. Waters' lyrics suggest that not all rock musicians are drugged-out, over-sexed and on a highway to hell. Rather, they are artists who express their innermost feelings through the lyrics they write and the music that makes their words come alive. "The Wall" may change many critics' opinions of rock and roll music and the people behind it.

"The Wall may change many critics' opinions of rock and roll and the people behind it."

"The Wall" is a look inside the mind of a middle-aged rock star, Pink, played by the Boomtown Rats lead singer, Bob Geldorf. Geldorf's performance is compelling and often frighteninly realistic. His portrayal of Pink will undoubtedly change some people's ideas about stardom.

Pink experiences many flashbacks to his childhood, which apparently was not a very happy one. One scene that takes place during World War II shows the young Pink at the train station searching for his father who, unknown to Pink, has been killed in battle. While the returning soldiers greet their families, "Bring the Boys Back Home" plays in the background. Pink's fears and hatred of was remain with him as an adult and is one of the main reasons why Pink feels so alienated from society. As an artist, Pink cannot come to grips with the many horrifying realities of life and he builds a wall within his mind to protect himself from society. Of course, this is an unhealthy situation and Pink suffers greatly from many of his own mistakes. Rather than come to grips with his fears and conquer them, Pink isolates himself and must resort to violence to release his pentup emotions to keep him from going insane.

Waters and Parker are careful to show the importance of individuality that is not taken to an extreme, as in the case of Pink. Military organizations that discriminate against blacks or Jews are criticized as are inept public school systems. Towards the middle of the movie, school children are pictured marching into a building and coming out on a conveyer belt all wearing blank masks and are singing "Another Brick in the Wall, Part 2." Unfortunately, they are headed for a meat grinder.

To take "The Wall" at face value as a series of violent, often unrelated scenes that make little sense, accompanied by loud music, would be a mistake. One must look deeply into the film and the songs to understand the powerful symbolism and social messages hidden within the character of Pink, a rock star who can control an entire audience, have groupies bow to his every whim, have all the money in the world and yet have nothing.

Football Launches Intramurals

By MICHAEL BETZ

Villanova, though without an intercollegiate football team, is far from being without football. In fact, Villanova has approximately 90 football teams, and it is these teams that comprise the intramural football leagues. The 58 men's and 32 women's flag football teams have just begun another season here on campus. And though the intramural office is directed by former football coach Lou Ferry, football is just one of the many intramural activities planned for the fall semester.

The intramural football program involves about 1,100 men and 600 women; nearly one-third of the students at Villanova. Each team includes about 15 to 20 members. The teams play a six or seven game schedule, which is followed by playoffs, and, ultimately, the championship games.

In order to advance to a championship match, a team must first win its division (there are six in each league) or slip into the playoffs as a sort of "wild-card" team. The next step is to win the conference title. Finally, the two conference winners meet to decide a champion in each league. Ferry tenatively foresees the women's championship game as being played November 11, and the men's November 15.

Football, however, is not the sole activity Ferry and the intramural office have planned for the autumn months. "We're going to run a golf tournament in November, and a softball tournament later this month", Ferry said. Add this to the cross-country run already held, and the wide range of intramural sports is clear.

As a matter of fact, football is not even the most popular intramural sport at Villanova. The intramural basketball program, which Ferry hopes to get underway "about a week before the semester break," includes by far the greatest number of teams. Last year there were 118 basketball teams in the men's league alone.

One point which Ferry emphasizes is the need for student suggestions as to which sports they would like to see included on the intramural list. Two sports which students have already proposed are soccer and wrestling. Ferry recognizes the students' suggestions, but explains that at the present time, the intramural office is not capable of carrying them out. The insufficient number of soccer fields and lack of equipment for wrestling prevent Ferry from taking any immediate action, but he does have hope.

"We're stymied by a lack of facilities," Ferry admitted, "but we're going to try our best to get those activities in. We'd like to run them."

Another idea which Ferry mentioned is a mixed coed two-on-two basketball tournament, but the concept has yet to go past the drawing-board stages.

Women Turn Back Immaculata

By BOB HELLER

The Wildcat field hockey squad returned to their home turf Saturday after losing four straight away games. They were slated to play Lafayette and then travel down the Main Line on Tuesday to play Immaculata. On Saturday the Cats hoped to produce a victory for the home crowd.

They came out charging right away in the first half, getting many opportunities to score, but unable to capitalize on any of them. Their play began to take a nose dive with Lafayette scoring first early in the second half. About a minute later the Cats evened the score with a goal by Sue Lora, assisted by Amy Hutchinson. Helped by poor Nova defense, Lafayette scored twice more and won the game 3-1. The loss dropped the Cats' record to 1-5.

The Cats also suffered the loss of Kelly Harabin. She tore ligaments in her ankle and will most likely miss three to six weeks of action.

The Cats had another excellent game from Robin Garcznyski. Forward Sue Lora and sweeper Beth Moyer also played well for the Cats, despite the 3-1 loss.

The first half of the Immaculata game was almost a repeat of the first half of the Lafayette game. However this time the Cats scored first. Sue Lora took a Robin Garcznyski pass and put it past the Macs' goaltender with 9:18 left in the first half. The Macs came back and tied in the second half. The score remained 1-1 after regulation play was completed. An extra 15 minutes of overtime was next.

One minute into the overtime, Gina Roman with another assist from Garcznyski put the Cats on top 2-1. Immaculata was not to be denied, however, they scored again before the overtime ended, knotting the score at 2-2. After overtime each team would shoot a series of five penalty strokes, alternating one at a time. After each team has taken five shots, the team with the most conversions would win the game.

Amy Hutchison converted the first shot for the Cats. Immaculata failed to convert on their first two shots, but tied the score on their third. Garcznyski gave the Cats the advantage again, converting the fourth shot. With the Cats failing to convert their last shot, the Macs capitalized on the Cats' miss and converted their final shot. A second set of five shots had to be taken.

Hutchison, Roman and Garcznyski converted their shots for the Cats. The Mighty Macs converted only two shots, making the Wildcats 7-6 victors and upping their record to 2-5.

Garcznyski was the Cats sparkplug, scoring twice and assisting on two other goals. She was constantly attacking the Macs defense, succeeding in penetrating into Immaculata territory many times.

Senior tri-captain Beth Moyer had a great defensive game for the Cats, as well as goalie Lisa Buschmann. Lora and Hutchison played their positions well.

Freshman Linda Norton, starting in place of the injured Kelly Harabin played a fine game as well as junior Sherry Boyle, who saved a few goals for the Cats.

Jan Yerkes: A Different Kind of Runner

By BEVERLY REILLY

What began as a means of getting in shape has developed into the chance of a lifetime for marathoner Jan Yerkes.

Four years ago, Yerkes began running for the exercise. Now at 5-feet 3-inches and 95 lbs., Yerkes has set her sights on the 1984 Olympic Marathon.

A transfer from Lock Haven State College, Yerkes is continuing her education at Villanova. In her first year of collegiate competition, the distance runner is a member of the women's varsity cross country team and will compete on the track team in the winter and spring.

With her home in Buckingham, Pa., Yerkes began running for the Lower Bucks Road Runner's Club in 1979. Her specialty is the grueling, ever-painful marathon, with a distance spanning 26 miles, 385 yards.

Cross country star Jan Yerkes.

Yerkes ran her first 26-mile race in November, 1979. She completed the Harrisburg Marathon in 3 hours, 21 minutes. Remarkably, seven months and three marathons later, the novice road runner won the God's County Marathon in Potter County, Pa. In addition, Yerkes bettered her time to 3:08.

"Distance runners are different than any other athlete. They're in a class by themselves. They're crazy."

Her second victory came in the Marine Corps Marathon in the fall of 1980. Her time dropped to an astonishing 2:39. At this point, her talent had simply manifested itself. Jan Yerkes, the runner, developed into Jan Yerkes, the marathoner.

In the New York City Marathon of 1981, Yerkes placed fifth for the women with a personal best time of 2:35. Yerkes, however, ran only ten minutes behind Allison Roe's world record-setting pace of 2:25.

In 1981, Yerkes was ranked sixth in the United States and approximately 15th in the world among women marathoners.

The last marathon Yerkes ran was the 1981 Philadelphia Marathon, where she captured first with a time of 2:39. However, a week later Yerkes ran a thirty-mile course with some running club bucksters and unfortunately, the miles took their toll. Yerkes was burdened with knee and heel injuries that forced her to ease up on her training.

After training for and competing in nine marathons, Yerkes was asked if she ever experienced the supposed "loneliness of the long-distance runner."

Yerkes comments, "No, not really. Most distance runners enjoy going out to run by themselves. Distance runners are different than any other athlete. They're in a class by themselves. They're crazy."

Having overcome her injuries, Yerkes is looking forward to her next marathon. The reigning champion of 1981 will attempt to renew her title in the Philadelphia Marathon on Nov. 28. Presently, Yerkes is a strong asset to the women's cross country team. As for "long run" goals, Yerkes would like to represent the United States in the Olympic Marathon of 1984.

With her vast amount of determination, Yerkes has set some very realistic goals for herself. Besides training herself physically, Yerkes develops her mental capabilities as well.

"I think of my competition, I look for a challenge, and then I get angry at myself. I say 'If they can do it, I can do it'," confesses Yerkes.

And do it she does.

Booters Triumph on Turf

By LAUREN SEAVER

Last week, the Villanova men's soccer team boosted its record to 2-2-2 with its first two victories of the season.

On Sept. 29, the booters faced Eastern on Wildcat turf. Mike Layfield and Steve Maillard scored all the goals with assistance from Craig Brown, Jeff Camillieri, Tom Lozowski and Joe Deluca. While Layfield chalked up three goals for the Wildcats, Maillard booted two goals past the opponent. Allowing only one goal to slip by, goal defender John Grendi assisted the Wildcat effort by making eight saves. Pleased with the Cats 5-1 triumph, Coach Howard Graff said "the team did very well."

Again on home ground, Villanova took on Spring Garden College. In this match, senior Co-captain Brian Barr played for the first time since his ankle injury. Again the scorers for the team were Layfield and Maillard, booting one goal each. Ramon Garcia aided with an assist, as did Layfield. With John Grendi defending the Wildcat goal, Spring Garden had little chance to score. Allowing no goals to slip by, Grendi made 17 saves to help the Wildcats win a 2-0 shutout. Though Spring Garden is a tough physical team, Graff commented that his team "really dominated most of the time."

With a 2-0-2 record, the men's soccer team faces still more than a dozen matches this season. As a Division I team, the Wildcat booters naturally have a very tough schedule. Yet Coach Graff has confidence in his team. "I'm looking forward to 10 to 12 more wins," he commented. "From what I've seen, at this point, I think it's the best team we've had at Villanova."

Women Split Soccer Weekend

By JOE MARUSAK

They had just finished racking up seven goals, but nobody seemed especially pleased.

"We've played better," said Kathy Ford.

"We played much better on Tuesday (against Swarthmore)," added Head Coach Lee Stevens.

Strange. All the Villanova women's club soccer team had done last Friday afternoon at Villanova Stadium was stop a much more experienced Manhattanville squad, which just happens to have a player by the name of Sylvie Madsen.

Madsen, you see, is her side's most valuable everything. She's their most skilled defender, their best corner and penalty kicker, and their deadliest scorer.

All that, you say?

Sure. Take the last item, for instance. During last week's match against the Wildcats, Manhattanville's Number 8 scored four goals, the last of which came on a penalty kick with just under a minute left in regulation play; it sent things into overtime.

Villanova had stars of its own, and they, in the end, were able to overcome the exploits of Madsen & Co. by a 7-5 score.

Kathy Ford was one of those stars. After a relatively quiet first half, the V.U. freshmen exploded in the second half for a hat trick. Of the three, the most important came late in overtime to seal the Cats' victory.

Her first goal came with the score knotted at 3-3 in the second period of play. Main Liner Mary Lou Curley took a shot which was blocked in the penalty area. The opportunist Ford was there to pick up the rebound. Adeptly, she moved past one defender and placed the ball in the right corner of the net.

Less than 60 seconds later, Ford was at it again. This time she took control of a loose ball in the penalty zone and fired it past the unsuspecting Manhattanville goalie. Two goals in one minute. By the same person. Not bad at all.

Ford's second goal made the score 5-3, and things were looking very good for the Wildcats.

But Manhattanville still had Madsen. Thanks to their star's fine dribbling and passing, the red and white were eventually able to force the overtime. Their advance though, was stopped.

"She's something else, isn't she!" exclaimed one Manhattanville player as the teams headed into overtime action. Sylvie Madsen certainly was something extraordinary, and she proved it right from the beginning. She scored the match's first goal off a direct kick that sailed over the Villanova wall and into the net's top left corner.

The Wildcats quickly regrouped. Pat Woods tied it up off a loose ball, and Lisa Morgan gave them the lead, 2-1, with a lofty shot that Manhattanville's goalie fumbled.

The two teams kept switching goals, with Madsen's fourth creating the extra play. After regulation, Denise Finn gave the Wildcats the lead that Ford's goal would solidify into a win.

Still, Stevens was not satisfied. "We could have played much better. We just weren't as aggressive as we should have been."

Late Break: Two days after the Manhattanville victory, V.U. was up against even stiffer competition. This time they traveled to George Washington University, where the Cats were defeated by 2-0. Villanova's goalie, Sue Onembo, was outstanding in stopping 18 shots against a team that has been one of the Mid-Atlantic Conference's best for the past several years.

Villanova Spikers Flounder in Towson Tourney

By MARIE WOZNIAK

The Villanova volleyball team experienced a disappointing weekend with a tenth-place finish in the Towson State (Maryland) Tournament.

The Wildcats, hoping to repeat last year's second-place performance, did not get off to a good start as they lost both of Friday's matches. They were defeated by George Mason University and Virginia Commonwealth, each time by a score of 2-1.

Saturday began with a loss to Lehigh, 2-0, a team the Cats had already beaten this season. The spikers then pulled it together and soundly defeated Courtland State (New York) 2-0, and edged Bucknell, 2-1. Nova's final game of the 16-team tournament was a 2-0 loss to Virginia.

According to Coach Bob Covell, one difference between last year's tournament finish and this year's, is the loss of junior Nan Patrick, who is suffering from a shoulder injury. Covell comments, "Because of this key injury, we had to scramble the lineup and it has caused some confusion." The team's weak spot in the tournament, Covell added, was that "we didn't pass well."

Overall, the team's record stands at 8-10, but they will have a chance to better it this weekend at the Navy tournament. West Chester, Towson, and Lehigh are among the schools in the ten-team tournament.

On the outlook for the rest of the season, junior Mary Fischer comments, "We've had a rough start, but I think now after we've straightened out our lineup we'll go on to beat the teams that we know we can beat."

Team captain Stephanie Moore states, "Although we got off to a better start last season, I feel that we're rapidly improving and our final record will be equal to, if not better than, last year's."

Michael Layfield, the second leading scorer on the soccer team last year, scored three goals in Villanova's 5-1 pelting of Eastern College, earning him the award of Budweiser Athlete of the Week.

The senior forward scored what proved to be the winning goal and, later, the third goal of the game, both within eight minutes. He scored his third goal mid-way through the second half.

Layfield, a transfer student from Delaware County Community College, downplayed the scoring feat. "Really, I should score three goals against a team like Eastern," he stated. "They're not a powerhouse, not a strong team at all."

The Eastern College match was the first time in Layfield's collegiate career that he scored three goals in a game, though he has done it as a Radnor High standout.

"Delaware County Community College was a two-year program, so when I had to transfer, Villanova was an easy choice. I saw some of the games the year before I transferred. The facilities and the turf were good. The education was good. It allowed me to stay close to home. It also allowed me to play with Brian Barr, who I went to high school with."

It was a wise decision to reunite. Together, last year, Barr and Layfield accounted for 23 of the Wildcats' 34 goals and eight of 19 assists. Both were named to Philadelphia Soccer Seven's all-star squad. And it is Barr who co-owns the Villanova record for most goals in a game, four.

Can Layfield muscle his way into the "score four" elite?

"I'm looking for the chance, but we have no easy teams ahead to play. This year, we have the toughest schedule in the Big East."

But don't doubt Layfield's ability to outdo himself. Last year, against Eastern College, Michael Layfield only scored two goals.

Watercats 2-5; Tough Road Ahead

By JUDY ROGERS

The Villanova varsity water polo team is diligently splashing its way through what could turn out to be a very good season. The Wildcats' record so far this season is 2-5, with the bulk of the schedule still ahead.

Senior co-captain George Anderson is very optimistic in anticipation of this season. "We've come together as a group. We have a strong bond which really helps our chances and we do a lot of things together. There are only two seniors on the team this year; myself and my co-captain, Bill Ennis. Over the past two and three years we've introduced a lot of sophomores to the team so we all know each other."

The team is shooting for the championships. "We have a good chance to come out on the top of our league and win the conference, if we play consistently well," Anderson said. The Cats are in the Mid-Atlantic League, and to qualify for the championships in November, they have to win the league.

If they win that they would go on to the Easterns. The next step up the ladder would be the Nationals. The teams immediate goal is "to win the conference and go to the Easterns."

On Sept. 16-19, the Wildcats were in Boston to play some of the best teams on the East Coast. In the first matchup against Brown, considered to be the best team in the East and rated seventh nationally, an overmatched Villanova squad was beaten 21-5. The Cats then came back and blitzed N.Y.U. 14-0 and Renssalaer Polytechnic Institute 8-5 to round out tourney play.

Lax Takes Third

By JOSEPH BREEN

The Villanova lacrosse team opened the fall season last weekend at the annual Penn State Invitational Tournament, capturing third place by defeating Montclair State in an exciting sudden-death overtime. The team's first year coach, Randy Marks, felt that the team played well and demonstrated aggressiveness," especially on much needed ground balls."

The scoring honors belonged to John Haggerty, who racked up seven goals, while Ken Delgato chipped in with seven assists. Other players who contributed to the scoring with two goals each were Mic Cortese, Tom Gravina, Paul Campenelli, Ken Crowley and Dan O'Connell. The Nova defense was anchored by senior captain Bill Gold and returning goalie Drew Cunningham.

Minority Enrollment Stays 2%

By JAMES DeLORENZO, HENRY DiBENEDETTO, and MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

"Those students who are really good go elsewhere," Rev. Harry Erdlen, O.S.A., dean of admissions, claimed. "Why should an academically qualified minority student come here when other schools have greater prestige and more money at their disposal?"

Villanova's minority enrollment has remained at 2 percent over the past three years. According to Erdlen, "There are no simple solutions. It has stayed at 2 percent, but our whole enrollment has stayed the same."

Freddie Hill, associate dean and head of minority affairs at Haverford said, "active recruitment and a strong science program helped." Also, added Hill, "We have strong tutoring support programs.

"Villanova admissions does not send recruiters to Philadelphia public schools," claims Dr. Theresa Nance, a communications professor and moderator of Villanova's Black Cultural Society. "There is only one active recruiter, but she does it on a volunteer basis.

"We can't get black students out of Central and Overbrook High Schools for we don't visit them," said Nance. "An improvement in admissions policy would be to get at least a part-time minority recruiter."

Erdlen said, "We do recruit in the area of the city schools. It's cheaper and easier for city students to go to schools like Temple, Drexel or Penn.

"It's not that easy," commented Erdlen. "We do not have a concerted effort against minorities, but I don't set policy."

"A change in the philosophy of the admissions office is needed," claimed Edward Collymore, director of the Office for Social Action Programs. "They need to say 'we will make a concerted effort to attract minorities.' They need to find areas where the students are," continued Collymore, "and they need to look for the minority groups. They need a goal to strive for."

"We would need massive amounts of money put into this to attract students."

The University Senate passed a Social Action Committee motion in 1979 asking the University to make an increased effort to recruit and retain minority students. Minority enrollment was as high as 3 percent in 1973, but dropped to 2.5 percent in 1978.

The Social Action Committee recommended the administration set a definite goal to double the minority student population in a five-year period.

It also recommended that a black or other minority member serve as an admissions officer to concentrate on recruiting in Philadelphia and other areas with a large minority population, as well as finding funds for supporting minority students.

"We would need massive amounts of money put into this to attract students," Erdlen stated. Two presidential scholarships were initiated by University president, the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A. last year. "If some minority student applies and is qualified, they are usually accepted," according to Collymore. "Other than that, there is nothing Villanova does to attract minorities."

One grant that the state of Pennsylvania offers is the Academic Advancement Program (AAP), "but the AAP has nothing to do with minority recruitment," claimed Collymore. I'd say that only 25 percent in the AAP are minority students."

The AAP grant is only available to Pennsylvania residents. "In concentrating on the Philadelphia and Pittsburgh areas, they can attract so many more minority students," added Collymore.

Mission Statement Viewed

By JIM DENNY and SCOTT MEYER

In September, 1981, the Villanova Social Action Committee issued an "advisory" report citing discrepancies between Villanova's Mission Statement and the environment on campus. From interviews with several "sensitive" people connected with the University, the committee encountered problems with on-campus social life, food waste, communication, housing, dormitory maintenance and the affirmative action programs.

The Mission Statement reads: "Villanova commits itself to develop an environment in which students, faculty and staff may experience a Christian intellectual and moral perspective. . ."

The report cites that there is poor weekend social life on campus and a "possible connection with drinking." The Social Action Committee proposed an "overall evaluation of programs by experienced persons from other campuses and the coordination of the Villanova Union into a comprehensive plan."

Several offices have addressed the problem of weekend social life on campus. They stressed that the problem is not with a lack of activities, but rather a dearth of alcohol.

"It's a state law," said Dean of Students Rev. John Stack, O.S.A. "There is a bind in the law being 21. Why should an educational institution put itself in a situation where it's going against the law?"

Lucyna Gorski, director of student activities said, "There is a big difference between 'there is nothing going on here' and 'there is nothing going on here without a beer blast'."

The committee's report also emphasized the consistent food waste on campus. It "generates a moral, if not immoral, behavior in face of world hunger." A possible solution would be "regular reporting of amount wasted with the increase and decrease noted," the report suggested.

Campus Ministry is involved in the problem of food waste. Hunger Awareness Week is an annual event aimed at enforcing student appreciation of daily meal rations. In one academic year, there was 500 pounds of waste.

"For the University to waste food would be financial folly," said Dr. Richard Neville, vice president of student life. "Food waste comes from students throwing out what they have put on their trays."

C.O. Registration Advice Offered

By JACK McHUGH

Philosophy professor Dan Regan is offering counseling to students on military registration and their legal rights.

According to Regan, the issue is, the student's "rights, obligations, and duties." Regan said that the student who is registering is not in any way approving of the draft but merely registering with the selective service in the event of a draft.

Regan views his function as "purely informational." He wants to make sure every student reflects on exactly what registration is and why they may or may not want to register. "Many students who oppose registration do not know what it really means to register and what the penalties are," said Regan. A person can be sentenced for up to five years and/or get a $10,000 fine for failing to register.

When a student comes for counseling, Regan said that he will talk to the student and find out why the student refuses to register or if he intends to refuse. If a student intends not to register, Regan feels that student should be able to articulate it.

According to Regan many students decide to register under protest, meaning that they lay out their positions on their registration forms. They say why they are against registration and/or war (i.e. they may be willing to fight, but not in a nuclear war or a civil war, etc.)

Regan said that men reflect more on registration today than any other time before. "This is good because if democracy is to work, you must have reflective citizens," he said. Regan believes that a Vietnam-like situation is less likely to develop if the draftees are able to show their unwillingness to fight now before the country becomes involved later. Many non-registers are establishing their reservations now to make it easier to escape the draft later.

Students seeking more in-depth counseling are advised to go to the Central Committee for Conscientious Objectors (CCCO), headquartered in San Francisco, but with an office in Philadelphia at 2200 South St.

According to a CCCO representative, students who do not register need not fear prosecution for it. CCCO attorney Jim Feldman, said that the government estimates the number of non-registers at about 500,000. "The federal courts handle about 30,000 cases a year and so far only eight have involved non-registers," Feldman said. "There is no way the courts can handle hundreds of thousands of new cases."

Carol McNeil, of the CCCO's Philadelphia office, said that another step has been taken against college students who do not register and currently receive financial aid from the federal government.

Prof. Daniel Regan

In an amendment to the Defense Authorization Act for fiscal 1983, which was implemented this past summer, funds for college education can be denied to a college students who is not on the Selective Service rolls or can prove he has registered, however, this legislation has not yet been approved by Secretary of Education, T.H. Bell.

McNeil also stated that the CCCO will help all types of non-registrants, whatever their reasons.

They also offer legal help to non-registers in finding them a lawyer, or if they can not pay, one who will do the case free of charge. (They have a list of lawyers around the country who are interested in doing cases on military registration and the draft). CCCO also aids the lawyers working on these cases by making their staff available to the lawyers.

McNeil also stressed that any man who has not registered should get in contact with the CCCO to get on their mailing list to receive bulletins on events in Washington on registration and those who fail to register.

University Must Address Problems

The Social Action Committee of the University Senate is a standing committee charged with the responsibility of recommending to the Senate "changes in University policy in areas of social concern and sensitivity." According to the Senate charter, the committee is to alert the Villanova community to opportunities and problems in social action and community relations.

In 1981, the committee, after a year's work of compiling facts and figures, released a comprehensive study that brought to light problems in the "overall environment" of the University. The study cited conflicts between the University's Mission Statement and the present student life on campus. The committee examined problems including campus social life, food waste, communication, maintenance and sanitation and the lack of active recruitment of minority students.

One year later, little has changed. Most of the problems addressed by the committee in the study have either been ignored or given cursory attention by the administration. The Mission Statement reads: "Villanova commits itself to . . . develop an environment in which students, faculty and staff may experience a Christian intellectual and moral perspective . . ." Current policies or lack thereof on campus do not appear to adhere to the Mission Statement, and little progress is seen for the future.

The study highlights two nagging problems at the University: an absence of an understanding of the alcohol policy on-campus by both students and administration and the lack of minority enrollment.

The Social Action Committee recommended that an overall evaluation of programs by experienced persons from other campuses be introduced and that the Villanova Union be co-ordinated into a comprehensive plan. The study also recommended counseling for alcohol and drug abuse be considered because the present situation ignores it.

Minority enrollment at Villanova has remained at a level of 2 percent for the past three years, a drop from the meager 3.5 percent from 1973. Other colleges in the area have reported double-digit increases in minority enrollment while Villanova remains at a level deemed "safe." The committee was unable to obtain accurate figures regarding minority scholarships and recognized the lack of effort to attract minority students, "even in the face of Senate resolution."

The study suggested that if the Mission Statement is to be considered credible, the setting of goals and evaluations of achievements is needed.

As one administrator said, "It's not easy." Any changes that come about require work and concentrated and dedicated efforts on the part of the individuals who run the University. The Social Action Committee did its job. It's up to the administrators to follow through on the study and do their job if the University Mission Statement is to be taken seriously.

Working Together

The student body at Villanova seems so separated at times. There are commuters and off-campus residents as well as the on-campus residents and it is rare when a large group gets together for a common cause other than a party, concert or sports event. Not that going to these events is wrong, that certainly is not the case. But these activities bring people together for mere enjoyment or team support, rather than for a charitable cause.

Every fall, however, a group of students co-ordinate and organize the Special Olympics program held on Villanova's campus. Hundreds of student volunteers donate their time and efforts to encourage and support the athletes that compete in the day's various events. Out there on the fields, the students are not drinking or socializing; they are all working towards the goal of making each athlete feel successful at what they do.

It is encouraging to see this event take place every year. It shows the unity that Villanova students possess when working towards a "common good."

Letters to the Editor

Accident

To the Editor:

I am writing this letter in reference to the articles, editorials and letters of the past few weeks that refer to the accident of September 26 in which my sister was killed. I would like to bring to light an unreported and obviously little-known fact about the accident. Neither Nicholas D'Alessandro nor Cory Evans, the two drivers involved in the accident, were intoxicated. Forgetting that good journalistic principle of adhering to the facts that they are so proud of, the Villanovan staff overlooked the fact that the final police report was not filed.

So now we have a furor over the issue of drunk driving with each letter and editorial referring to the accident. I appeal to the Villanova community for the sake of the truth and for the sake of Cory Evans, the maligned driver, to cease all references to the accident when writing about drunk driving.

John L. Buckley
Class of '83

Editors' Note: The Oct. 1 article concerning Monica Buckley's death stated, "Police are conducting an investigation into the accident but no charges have been filed . . . A report will be filed with the Philadelphia District Attorney's office." Not once in the article was any connection made between alcohol and the accident.

According to a police spokesman for the West Philadelphia Accident Investigation Division, the official police report has not been filed because the case is still open.

School Waste

To the Editor:

On Saturday, Oct. 2, 3,500 letters, on University stationery, arrived at the student mailroom in Kennedy Hall. University bulk mailing of this size generally is not unusual; however, in this particular instance, each letter was personally addressed and each had a 20-cent stamp. Thus, not including the price of the labor involved in addressing and stuffing the letters, this totalled $700. Not to mention the price of the stationery and envelopes, which we estimate at a cost of over $350. Furthermore, approximately three-quarters of them were improperly addressed and ended up being sent back, at the University's cost.

What, we ask, could be so important as to cost the University well over $1,000? Each envelope contained a form letter from the continuing education department offering a speed-reading course and each letter ended up on the floor or in the trashcan moments after being opened. (By the way, this is usually where most University mail ends up).

We thought that we would point out to the students and alumni just one instance of the administration wasting our money. It is amazing that a university, so concerned in saving money as to drop a football program, can throw away over $1,000 so easily. Give this some thought next time you sign a tuition check or send a donation.

C-Center 'Touched'

To the Editor:

In response to our faculty person who labeled the Connelly Center a " 'Please Do Not Touch' Museum," on the Op-ed Page of last week's Villanovan, it might be interesting to him (or her) to be apprised of some of the facts. For the fiscal year 1981-82, there were 1,105 events scheduled and 82,721 persons attended scheduled events at the Connelly Center. These figures do not include the daily crowds that have breakfast, lunch and dinner at the Center. Nor does it include the many who visit the Art Gallery, the Music Listening Lounge, the Information Desk and the Games Room daily. In addition, there are those numbers who simply come in to lounge, study or meet friends. An estimate of these numbers come to 5,000 persons daily.

The Connelly Center is a very "much touched" facility and those of us who have been at the Center since it first opened its doors are indeed proud, not only of the many ways it serves Villanova but of the way the building has been maintained during these two-and-a-half years of usage.

Freind Attack

To the Editor:

I would like to briefly respond to the vicious attack on State Representative Steve Freind by his opponent which recently appeared in the Villanovan.

During his six years in the legislature, Steve has displayed a degree of courage rarely matched in today's society. He believes that the annual slaughter of 1,500,000 unborn children in America is an outrage against humanity. Because he realizes that a society which destroys its most precious commodity, its children and its future, cannot long survive, he has acted boldly and without regard to his political future.

The description by Steve's opponent of the bill which he supports concerning high schools providing information to "draft recruiters" (a mutually exclusive term) is, to put it kindly, grossly misstated. Steve believes that a school district which routinely provides lists of its graduating seniors to other prospective employers has an equal obligation to the military. The bill specifically provides that any senior may, at his request, have his name deleted from that list.

Deegan

Editors' Note: The following is a copy of a letter recently sent to the Rev. John Deegan, O.S.A., current president of Merrimack College and former vice-president for student life at Villanova.

Dear Father Deegan:

After reading your letter of May 21, 1981, I have decided to inform you as to the current status of certain alleged "thieves" and "intimidators." The following list is not inclusive and is only a sample of some of the football players that you referred to in your letter. I'm proud to say that I became close friends with those mentioned below while playing football at Villanova from 1968 to 1972. Any university in the world, with the apparent exception of Villanova, would be proud of such alumni.

From the class of 1972:

Quarterbacks: Drew Gordon — Manager of Truck Leasing Operation; Dayrl Woodring — Account Executive.

Ends: Bill Malast — New York State Trooper; Don Swartz — Football Coach, Pratt Jr. College; Mike Siani — Account Executive; Rick Reiprish — Head Scout, Kansas City Chiefs; Handsome Waring — Lawyer.

JTackles: Jack Kasper — M.B.A.; James Johnson — Head of Plumbing Company.

Guards: Paul Zangrelli — M.A., Coach and Teacher; Bill Turchetta — Regional Manager at Mercedes Benz for 16 State N. East-Middle Atlantic Region; Tom Bennett — Salesman.

Centers: Don Callaham — Certified Public Accountant; John Elash — Lawyer; Kevin Byron — Executive.

Defensive Backs: Bob Milenese — Lawyer; Frank Polito — Sales Manager for Warner Cablevision, Pittsburgh Area.

Linebackers: John Babinecz — Pediatrician; Pat Hurly — Lawyer, Delaware State Prosecutor; Kevin Reilly — Businessman; Mike Barrang — Owner of Barrang Cadillac, Maryland; Pat Barrang — Owner of Barrang Cadillac, Maryland.

Defensive Line: Ted Freeman — Director of Jersey City Urban League; Ernie Messmer — Businessman.

And from other years: Rick Wells (captain) — Orthopedic Surgeon; Mark Kirkland — Philadelphia Eagles Team Physician; Dino Folino — Football Coach, University of Pittsburgh; Joe Cervini — Special Agent, Federal Bureau of Investigators; Mickey Kearns — Inspector, Philadelphia Police Department; Pat O'Laughlin — Inspector, Philadelphia Police Department; Marty Edwood — Lawyer; Bill McManns — Lt., Washington D.C. Police Department; Frank Boal — Newscaster and Sports Announcer for Kansas City, MO. N.B.C. T.V. Affiliate; Tom Bilko — Physician; Mike Lamb — Physician; Mike Zizzo — Special Agent, Federal Bureau of Investigation.

These were hardly the types of individuals that would add to university disciplinary problems, let alone control a theft ring and physically intimidate fellow students. Your allegations were not only groundless and absurd; but, more importantly, they demonstrated a prejudice towards others that my training at Villanova taught me to eschew. In short, your letter was not only unworthy of a Christian clergyman, especially one associated with a university (save Bob Jones of Bob Jones University), it was asinine. Former Villanove football players contribute heavily to the university's outside prestige. While students they were proud participants in the 'mission of Villanova," far from the incorrigible thugs that you depict. Yet of those listed above would ever have attended Villanova were it not for the football program.

Finally, I leave you with the following interrogatories to ponder:

(1) Did football players coerce 94 percent of the student body into voting to restore the sport?

(2) Are football players responsible for the thefts in this calendar year at St. Mary's Hall?

(3) In your manic moments, do you see football players as saboteurs of Extra-Strength Tylenol?

(4) Have you lately considered submitting yourself to spiritual renewal and/or clinical evalution?

May God bless you always,
John Elash

Op-Ed

America 'Culture Shock'

Editors' Note: No syntactical changes were made in the following op-ed so as to preserve the unique style and tone.

"It's they who are expected to get a culture shock, not us." This is what Dr. P.V. McLaughlin told Dr. B.J. Sullivan when the latter was baffled by the ability of the students in his class to shake their heads left to right saying yes at the same time. All the students are Indians and I am one of them. Well, I have had my shocks and this is what all the fuss is about.

You must have noticed us, a bunch of alien-looking (personally I'd prefer being called a foreign looking, as "alien" reminds me of the horrors of the movie "Alien") guys and an occasional girl around the campus, totally different and speaking a language you can't understand, which is fortunate for us because you'd be shocked to know what we talk about. We are Indians, not to be confused by American Red Indians, whom Columbus originally set out to look for and discovered America instead.

The first shock on coming out of the Philadelphia International Airport was to discover that traffic runs on the right side of the road. I happen to be one for whom the rules of road crossing say, "Look right, then left and again right to make sure no vehicle is coming before crossing." Now I have to remember using walkways. Imagine sending report back home, "Got hit by a car and fined $50 for jaywalking."

The second shock was the absolute nonavailability of a fast food which doesn't have meat in it. For a vegetarian like me and a lover of eating (everybody will agree when they look at me), this is a real shock. I search the supermarkets and read the ingredients before buying anything to cook for myself. Anybody who wants a change of taste and is ready to down some stuff hotter than a neat shot of alcohol down his throat is welcome to try my cookings. All that I take from the fast food centres is cheese pizza, salads, pretzels and ice creams. I am consuming large quantities of Coke. It was banned in India after Coca-Cola Co. refused to tell their secret to the Indian Government. I missed it a lot and am shocked to see Americans drinking Dr. Pepper and Tab.

Third shock was football. I wonder why is it called football and soccer is called soccer. The only time I saw a foot being used was when a gent was telling a damsel about the game and she kicked a ball, just for the fun of it. Curiously enough, the word "ball" creates an image of a spherical object which is in a total disagreement to the ball I saw being played. I'd like to try playing it, but the belief that the insurance company doesn't take guys favourably who get busted quite often stops me. I'd also like to try my hand at baseball or softball (I'd never know the difference), which is very similar to cricket, but I just can't go to a bunch of boys and girls playing and say, "How about letting me try my hand at it." I'm pretty good at field hockey but to my horror only women play it. Only exercise I get is a swim.

Another shock was when my friends told me not to go around wearing anything that I like. I was advised not to wear my favorite Indian dress, whose trousers resemble pajama bottoms, in public. "These Americans can object to anything and you may be arrested for 'indecent exposure,' " I was told. Come to think of what a decent exposure would be with guys and gals wearing gym shorts with or without tops.

The biggest shock came on the day of registration when all the freshmen were around. On a sunny summer day all the girls were wearing shorts. I had never seen such ocean of legs, and what legs; I was dazed. Back in India if you have seen the knees of a girl, you have seen a lot. I am not surprised by the kissings, pettings and smokings (American movies have taken care of it), but this was different. I do not want to appear rude, but I saw more of legs than what I had seen in India so far. Apart from legs, I like the hairdos, the earlobes and upturned noses of the girls; I believe there is something called "nosejob" for those noses. A side comment is, "Imagine winter when I'll see only the faces of the girls whose legs I used to see."

There are many things I feel strongly about, like wastage of materials. I can't understand the non-involvement of graduate students in the affairs of the University. I also can't understand why we are overlooked by this paper; the only time I saw a picture of one of us was when a photo of the banking machine was printed and he was in the queue.

All is not shocks. There are many aspects of American life that I love. I end this statement with an apology to anybody who is offended or feels hurt. I have simply tried to convey our feelings towards you and would welcome your views about us.

V.U. Mission Statement

Citing the Mission Statement that "Villanova encourages communication among all elements of the academic community," the committee's report charged that communication is a major problem, "specificially with off-campus freshmen and their adjustment to college."

The report recommended a daily bulletin of activities and a commitment to follow recommendations from a study of communication needs. In addition, the need for a "special assistant and/or time for needs to be met," was recommended.

Director of Campus Ministry Rev. Shawn Tracy, O.S.A., a member of this year's Social Action Committee, believes that communication is increasing overall. "There has been a decrease in the isolationist trends among campus organizations," Tracy said. "There is a growing awareness in communal understanding."

Tracy added, "If we don't work for justices, we'll have injustices."

The student life office is considering publishing its own newsletter to facilitate communication. Also, Rev. Frank Farsaci, O.S.A., has been appointed as an adviser for off-campus residents.

In the area of minority enrollment, the report charged that there is a conflict between the Mission Statement's claim for responsibility "to commit resources to education of disadvantaged" and the actual enrollment of minority students.

"The committee has been unable to get accurate figures regarding minority scholarships," and there has bee a "lack of drive for minority students, even in the face of Senate resolution."

The report stressed that continued complaints about sanitation and maintenance in dorms,

Dr. Richard Neville, vice-president for student life.

the conduct of security personnel and the lack of presence of information and counseling for alcoholism and drug abuse detracts from the Mission Statement and that it fails "in terms of its professed ideals and thus, in justice toward its students who come for the sake of ideals."

Sleep: Escape the Reality of Life

By EMILY DIFLO

The only good thing about coming back to school is bed.

Now you may think this strange, especially if you've experienced university mattresses (sans pillow this year) at any point in your life. But think a minute. Bed is the only place where one can escape the hectic realities of school life — parties, visiting, parietal-doging and maybe a little bit of academia thrown in on the side. Or if one dodges the hectic realities of school life with a beer or dozen, I can think of no better place for waiting out the spins or recuperating from a nasty hangover.

the solace of slumber provided by even the lumpiest of bunks can far outweigh any of the other advantages in life, like maid service or apple pie. Just try to imagine where humanity would be if no one ever got any sleep. I do believe statistics report that the average college student cannot properly function on anything less than 12 hours of sleep in any given 24 hour period unless, of course, that period falls on midterm, finals week, or senior week. And, despite what the commercials for the Bache broker indicate, most of the business world are in their pj's by the time M*A*S*H is over. What would happen to all those mildly attractive women who slink around on Sealey Posturpedic mattress commercials — they'd sure be out of a job, wouldn't they? Well, publicly at least.

In addition to all this, there are personal reasons why sleep is so nice and why I love my bed. First and perhaps even foremost,the University has magnanimously installed new loft beds in the dorm in which I reside. (Give you two guesses). And secondly, I feel like a little kid again whie I snuggle under my covers, all safe and secure, eyebrows barely peeping over my Kliban Cat comforter. My cats and I are at our happiest as we romp in dream-veiled meadows or soar through misty blue-white skies. None of us has a care in the world and, as they purr with kitty-contentment, I smile to them and to my darkened room until an "HAAURUUGHYA" rents my happy slumber to shreds and causes my cats to arch, hiss and scamper back into their comforter. What vile and demonic beastie has invaded my room, weilding great claws and toting a megaphone with which to shout "HEF, REI, HEF, REI?" What desperate crew-cutter monster is seeking out innocent victims to awaken at ungodly and cryptic hours?

"Yes, little kittens, it is the ghoul of your deepest nightmares, the terror of all the meek and mild — the dreaded Rotssimonster!"

Each year hundreds of wide-eyed women and vengeful men are terrorized and subject to cruel and unusual awakening by this massive monster with dozens of arms, legs and hairless heads. It can never be killed (unless the U.S. Government runs out of money), but it does shed its old limbs and heads, only to grow new ones each fall after lying dormant for the summer. Be strong, little ones, for soon this menace will have proved to itself and the rest of the universe just how invigorated and motivated it is — it will soon become disbanded and confused, bumping into its own parts and weapons and bemoaning its lost hair.

But the fight is not over! A weaker and more sickly-sounding successor to the Rotssimonster appears just when least expected — the Rotssibandmonster. Prepare -- ------'s residents to drop anchor and abandon loft; Anchor's Aweigh the wailing monster groans at, like its cousin, an ungodly hour.

I'm not sure why these creatures have such a fascination with early morning, but, in any event, we shall persevere in fighting these menaces. Their shouts and wails will become mere whispers, indistinguishable over the meows of our dreams.

Center's Goal is Service

By SUSAN WILMARTH

Are you suffering from shyness? Do you need an extra push to assert yourself? Want to bone up on your studying skills? Or, just need someone to talk to? The University counseling center in Corr Hall may be just the place you're looking for. Directed by three full-time and three part-time psychologists who are equipped to deal with personal problems as well as problems with studying skills.

According to Dr. Greenhouse, most of the students who come to the counseling center need help dealing with the "normal developmental problems or turning points of the college years." The counseling center staff is also prepared to help students with serious personal problems, Greenhouse pointed out that the counseling center "provides short term counseling", generally between two and three sessions, and also "serves as a source of referrls to outside professional, upon request."

The counseling center assists students who are seeking to increase the efficiency of their studying skills. Through an interview with the student, the study skills counselor is able to pin-point where a students inefficiencies lie and determine what steps can be taken to correct them.

The couseling center also runs group sessions called "Theme Groups" throughout the year, for groups of people (e.g. roommates, couples) who are having problems, to approach them for help.

Greenhouse has noticed an increase in the use of the counseling center services. About half of the people who use the counseling center are self-referred while the other half generally come at the suggestion of a friend or faculty member. Greenhouse finds that more people are using the center as a preventive measure, "before there is a crisis in their life." Most of the people who come to the center have already talked to a freind or someone in their family, but are looking for someone to be objective about their problem. The counseling center staff tries to convey "a sense of someone being involved" to the people who approach them for help.

SUNSHINE: More Than A Day

By STEPHANIE M. SCHWARTZBERG

To the Devereux Foundation and several other institutions which care for emotionally disturbed, mentally retarded or blind children and adults, Villanova students mean help and friendship.

The help and friendship comes in the form of volunteers coordinated by the Office for Social Actions under its umbrella program, Project SUNSHINE.

Each year the University receives requests from area hospitals, schools, local agencies and centers for volunters to provide tutoring, general recreation, big brother/sister relationships and many other activities. Because many of these institutions are non-profit, private facilities, they must rely on volunteers for assistance.

Sr. Joy Kronenberger, coordinator of Project: SUNSHINE, encouraged more students at Villanova to get involved in the program. "Students at Villanova who are here without their families can be a family to someone else," she said.

On Sunshine Day many retarded or disturbed children come to Villanova for a day of games and fun. However, Project: SUNSHINE is a year long program of service that involves much time and commitment on the part of the volunteers.

Pam Rogers, a senior at Villanova who last year won the Mentzer award for community involvement, has been involved with Project: SUNSHINE for four years now. Rogers is now the student project co-ordinator. Her job includes helping Kronenberger with scheduling the volunteers and organizing Sunshine Day. Rogers said of her experience, "You never realize how much you have 'til you see how little these kids have."

The volunteers in the project help the people in various institutions by slowly building a lasting relationship with them. Kronenberger said that those in the program wanted to do more than just throw a party for the children at Christmas and then disappear until the next year.

The object of the program is a two-way exchange. The children at these institutions receive help and maybe a friend. The volunteers give their time, one-to-three hours each week, and gain, from their activities, the personal satisfaction of having helped. Kronenberger said that some of the volunteers from Villanova decide to seek a career in community service after experiencing the program.

Once a person volunteers he must participate in an interview and an orientation and training session before they are assigned to a volunteer duty.

The students receive no credits or pay for their services at these institutions, just experience and the friendship of someone who truly needs a friend.

PERSPECTIVES

Being Handicapped

By REV. GEORGE MAGEE, O.S.A.

Recently I came off a four-day retreat called HEC (Handicapped Encounter Christ). The experience is always enriching, for I meet others who do their life's odyessey with definite physical disabilities; the blind, the married couple who are both severely disabled from MS, the disfigured, etc. All of us come together because we seek the Christ in our midst and we ask, "What does it mean to be handicapped?" The responses vary in their detail but one general consensus emerges: we are all handicapped!

All of us suffer from the wounds inflicted by fear, ignorange, arrogance and misplaced priorities. We are all fragmented and broken by sin and human frailty.

We, who do not suffer physical disability, often equate being handicapped with a wheel-chair or a white cane. If we could just go beyond these symbols, which cause distance and fear between people, to the inner beauty of persons, then we could truly begin to call ourselves Christian men and women.

I am often amazed by the admiration and public esteen rightly accorded to Mother Theresa. However, would each one of us be open and generous enough to follow in her footsteps?

Does following Christ only mean serving the physically complete? We lift 600 lbs.; how about the person with MS who stuggles to lift a glass of water weighing ounces or the stroke victim who takes 20 steps a day?

It is in one's perspective or world view that we see the many faces of Christ the Nazarene. Simon of Cyrene (Mark 15:21) was forced to help a total stranger, Christ, to carry His instrument of execution. Little did he know that the stranger was the Messiah.

We are called to serve, to minister to all persons. We can not exclude the persons who do not possess physical beauty or mobility. We minister and serve best when we minister to the bleeding body of Christ Himself. The reward is a holiness with God Himself and a tremendous sense of fultillment. We learn of our own fragile vulnerability.

The following is a reflection by a participant in last year's Special Olympics:

"Blessed are you that take the time to listen to difficult speech, for you help me to know that if I perserve I could be understood.

Blessed are you who never bid to hurry up and take my task from me and do them for me, for often I need time rather than help.

Blessed are you who stand beside me as I enter new and untried ventures, for my failures will be outweighed by the time I surprise myself and you.

Blessed are you who ask for my help for my greatest need is to be needed.

Blessed are you who understand that it is difficult for me to put my thoughts into words.

Blessed are you who smile and encourage me to try once more.

Blessed are you who never remind me that today I asked the same question two times.

Blessed are you who respect and love me as I am, just as I am, and not like you wish I were."

ROTC Celebrates Navy's 207th Birthday

By DAVID POMA

This week, Villanova's Naval Reserve Officer's Training Corp (NROTC) is celebrating the 207th birthday of the United States Navy.

Cmdr. James R. Johnson, executive officer of the Villanova University NROTC, commented, "As part of the birthday celebration, all the ROTCs will wear their uniforms on the day of their drills this week. Also, the commanding officer of the unit will read a birthday message from the Chief of Naval Operations to all the ROTCs at a reception Tuesday afternoon."

The V.U. Navy ROTC's headquarters is in John Barry Hall, named after man who was a founding father of the U.S. Navy.

Barry was born in Ireland in 1745 and settled in Philadelphia in 1760. Because of his successful career as a merchant, Barry was given the command of several navy ships during the revolution. He commanded ships in many important battles and won a reputation comparable to his colleague, John Paul Jones. When Commodore Barry died in 1803 in Philadelphia, he was the senior officer of the U.S. Navy.

Transcending the Simple Things

By GREG ANTON

"The response we make when we believe a work of the imagination is that of saying: 'This is the way things are, I have always known it without being fully aware that I knew it. Now in the presence of this play or novel (or picture or piece of music) I know that I know it'." — Thornton Wilder

"Our Town" awakens a recollection within oneself; an awareness that Grover's Corners, N.H., the Gibbses and the Webbs represent the complete pattern of human existence. Yet it is a simple play about simple things and could take place anywhere during any period of time. David Warner, director of Villanova Theatre's production of "Our Town," recognized this universal quality of the Pulitzer Prize winning play and has staged a commanding and assertive production by employing unconventional tactics.

Warner cast the Stage Manager, the key role, as a female. His use of a female Stage Manager is at the outset quite shocking. The Stage Manager, who is a unique, almost improvised, character, is the omniscient observer who relates the story and comments, as a modern Greek chorus, on the action. Such a strong, powerful and almost divinized character typically should be a male if the play is to capture the true essence of everyday life in the early 1900s.

However, Warner cleverly uses the Stage Manager as a symbol of change. The continuum of time necessaitates change; hence, the stage manager in a contemporary setting can be a female. Since the story represents the sum of human passions and cannot be affected by a change in time, "Our Town" also depicts the future. The names and faces may be different, but the message will never be altered.

George Gibbs (Michael Grozier) and Emily Webb (Carolyn Noone) confess their love for one another while drinking ice cream sodas at Mr. Morgan's store.

Ann Wilcox gives a fine performance as the Stage Manager. She captures one's interest and attention because she conveys the sincerity and earnestness of the Stage Manager to the audience. Wilcox establishes a warm and intimate relationship.

Good characterization enhances the performances of all the main characters. Perhaps the universality of the characters allowed the actors to better understand their character. Or, perhaps Warner led his actors and guided then so closely that he attained his desired results. Either way, the cast gives a solid performance. The only flaw is that their gestures often go unfinished or are done haphazardly due to a lack of concentration.

Michael Grozier, as George Gibbs, and Carolyn Noone, as Emily Webb look like the all-American couple to begin with. This only makes their performances more believable. Both do a fine job and are convincing as love-struck adolescents and as grieved adults. Neither overacts, keeping the dramatic intensity at an appropriate level. However, Noone momentarily oversteps the limits at the very end in the play's most difficult scene. Here her performance seems contrived and too rigid.

The production is at its best when it focuses directly on the two families. The other, extraneous action is not coherent at times and is distracting. It appears it has been neglected by director Warner so he could concentrate on the main action. Doug Wild (Dr. Gibbs), Theresa Donahue (Mrs. Gibbs), Al Wright (Mr. Webb) and Marion Gaul (Mrs. Webb) all give good performances. Comic relief is effectively provided throughout, especially from the character of Mrs. Soames, portrayed by Patricia Gerberding.

The redesigned Vasey Theater provides a perfect setting for "Our Town." The theatre is now a ¾ round theatre, which provides for a casual exchange between the audience and the actors. The sceneryless set only added to the intimacy. There is no circumscribed stage. Nor are any props or illusionistic devices used. The setting in "Our Town" is meant to be an abstraction, so that it can take on any setting.

Villanova Theatre's production of "Our Town" powerfully reinforces Wilder's theme. It reveals the close relationship between the minute and the universal and the temporal and the permanent in a unique way. Emily asks the Stage Manager towards the end of the play, "Do any human beings ever realize life while they live it? — every, every minute?" If nothing else, one comes away from the performance responding to her implicit warning. The true tragedy is that man's unhappiness lies not in his failure to achieve greatness, but his failure to take joy in the beauty of everyday life.

'Napoleon'
Film Speaks for Itself

By PETER BERKERY

Abel Gance's epic film, "Napoleon," is a classic masterpiece. One leaves the theatre with a feeling of awe and amazement, as if having viewed the "Pieta" or the "Mona Lisa." This is indeed surprising considering the fact that the movie first premiered in Paris in 1927, is four hours long and contains no sound apart from the beautiful score by Carmine Coppola.

The story behind this silent film is almost as fascinating as the film itself. Gance, who died last year, lavished, as director, both time and money on the project. The sets and costumes were correct to the finest detail and most filming was done on location. Gance wanted the audience to become part of the film, to participate, rather than just sit and watch. For his time, this was a revolutionary concept. And to achieve this end he had to rely on some innovative camera work, some of which anticipated Cinerama by 30 years. The camera was removed from the tripod and was strapped to backs or suspended from overhead wires. This allowed the camera and the audience to be hurled into the middle of the action.

The most astonishing innovations is Gance's "triptychs" or Polyvision in which one massive image is projected across three screens. Gance also used Polyvision to interact three separate images on the screen as a way of simultaneously portraying three elements: the physical, the mental and the emotional. Unfortunately, most of the triptych sections have been lost and now only appear in the last segment of the film.

Despite Gance's many heroic efforts, only six months after the film's stunning premiere, "The Jazz Singer" opened. With the advent of talking pictures, "Napoleon" was soon forgotten. Many years of hard work by Robert A. Harris of the Images Film Archive and Kevin Brownlow of the British Film Institute restored "Napoleon" for release to the viewing public with only a few reels missing and with the same vitality the film had in 1927.

"Napoleon" is certainly not for the average moviegoer. Yet, "Napoleon" displays the true beauty and power of film more effectively than most modern films. The silence of the film allows the real artistry of the acting to come through. In one scene, the elder Napoleon, played by Albert Dieudonne, emerges from the door of his house to face an enraged crowd with a foreboding intensity that seems to say, "Just try to run me out of town." As he watches the crowd retreat and slowly start to disperse, the slightest trace of a smile appears on his face, accenting his shrewd judgment of humanity.

Captions are used sparingly in the film, but when used they are highly effective. During the battle of Toulon, Napoleon spots a young man trying to remove a cannon. The caption reads, "Replace that cannon." The soldier replies, "But sir, that is impossible." "Impossible is not French," responds Napoleon while hurriedly storming off into the heat of the battle.

During the first two hours, a few slow moments occur, but this gives the audience time to catch its breath and study the film in greater detail. After a brief intermission, the remaining two hours fly by and one truly feels a part of the action. Gance himself appears in the latter part of the movie, proving that his talents go beyond directing.

"Napoleon" should not be taken as a historically accurate account of Napoleon's life and character. Rather, Gance attempts to portray Napoleon as he would have appeared to those of his time. Only a brief glimpse of Napoleon's life is provided, since the final scene occurs at the beginning of the Italian campaign. Yet it is within this time that Napoleon's character is formed. The character that, like him or not, made the term "La Glorie" synonymous with the French Army until his downfall.

Gance's dream was to portray all of Napoleon's greatness and capture the spirit of the time on film. The movie is not a criticism of Napoleon, but an attempt to explain the Napoleonic legend. Much of Gance's own patriotic fervor is readily apparent, which perhaps explains the film's intensity.

By better understanding Gance s motivations, one can more easily understand the film. Gance stated it best himself in the original program from the Theatre de l'Opera of Paris in 1927: "Napoleon was a climax in his generation, which in turn was a climax in time. And the cinema, for me, is the climax of life."

Changing Like 'Night and Day'

By JOHN F. LYNCH

Joe Jackson's latest album, "Night and Day," has taken him even further from the pop, new wave music which established him as a popular artist. He has chosen to pursue his personal interests rather than comply to the standards set by his extremely popular debut LP, "Look Sharp." Jackson has clearly established his priorities and virtually nothing, not even the increasing split between him and his fans, can sway him from carrying out his creative ambitions.

Jackson alienated himself from many with his album, "Joe Jackson and the Jumping Jive Band." He abandoned the electronic, synthesized sound and returned to the fuller, richer, brassier sound of the Big Band era. Now Jackson has dropped the be-bop, swing sound for a more jazzier, classical one. "Night and Day" is a fine album which showcases Jackson's versatility and commitment to producing quality music.

A fine example of this quality is found in the love song "Breaking Us in Two." This track lacks the Latin tempo found on several of the songs on the album, but contains some excellent piano playing on the part of Jackson. This song is a complete turnaround from the rock and roll music once recognized as a part of Jackson's style.

As a contrast to "Breaking Us in Two," the song "Chinatown" fills one's ears with an upbeat melody. The percussion on this song (played by Sue Hodjopoulos) makes one want to get up and dance. Hodjopoulos plays background drums and other Latin beat instruments throughout the album but his talents are clearly seen as one listens to the sounds of "Chinatown."

The song "TV Age" is an almost bizzare tune in which Jackson tries to warn us about the ill effects we can be exposed to by watching too much television. The harshness of this tune makes it sound more like a song the band Devo would produce instead of Jackson. However, the melody is enjoyable and is still yet another example of the versatility of this fine musician.

Jackson, an accomplished pianist, never allows one to question the absence of the electric guitar for one's attention is attracted to his keyboard wizardry. The heavy thumping of the bass, played by Graham Maby (who's been with Jackson from the start), also makes one forget the harsh guitar sound.

Throughout his career, Jackson has made several changes in the production of his music. In his first LP, "Look Sharp," he came across as the angry young man who played rock and roll with all his heart and soul. Many compared his style to that of Elvis Costello. With the arrival of "Night and Day," we hear a more mature Jackson who still plays with his heart and soul, but now with much more class.

After the completion of side two, one can only wonder what the future will hold for Joe Jackson. After listening to albums which were rock and roll, Big Band Era, and now Latin jazz, one can rest assured that future endeavors will be done with dedication and professionalism.

The Go-Go's Get Back On Track

By MIKE NOONE

Mindless girly-pop is the only way to describe the Go-Go's music, right? Wrong. After Monday night's Spectrum performance, the Go-Go's proved themselves worthy of the critical acclaim they have received in the past.

A Flock of Seagulls opened the show, and an appropriate supporting band they were. They had the audience swaying with their distinctive dance numbers. The band's textured synthesizers, echoing vocals and catchy instrumentals added to the excitement. They highlighted their set with such crowd pleasers as "I Ran," "Space Age Love," "Messages" and the band's club hit, "Telecommunication." A Flock of Seagulls returned for an encore, and performed "It's Not Me," which had the crowd cheering appreciatively. The band set the mood and got the crowd in the right frame of mind for the Go-Go's.

Belinda Carlisle of the Go-Go's.

As the Go-Go's took the stage, lead vocalist Belinda Carlisle remarked she remembered Philadelphia audiences as being a dancing audience. Carlisle's memory proved right for the audience was on its feet for most of the two-hour show. It is hard for one not to dance to the band's infectious music.

Drummer Gina Schlock and bassist Kathy Valentine deftly provided the band's bottom, never missing a beat throughout their set. The Go-Go's performed numerous songs from their debut album, "The Beauty and the Beat." "Skidmarks on My Heart" and "Lust for Love" were sped up with thundering bass runs. The band's versatility was displayed during "World's Away" in which Carlisle played keyboards and calmed things down momentarily with a slower paced, refreshing tempo. "Vacation" and "Automatic," two songs off of the newest LP, "Vacation," were enhanced by the use of bright lights and a backdrop which created the effect of cascading water. These effects were well received by the crowd.

Carlisle's voice was fierce, yet daringly punk on "We Don't Get Along." "Beatnik Beach" and the hit song, "Our Lips Are Sealed," turned into sing-alongs and epitomized the Go-Go's danceable style. The Go-Go's ended the evening with several encores including "Get Up and Go," "We Got the Beat" and "Surfin' and Spyin'."

Overall, the concert was an enjoyable evening which showcased two bands' talents, which may silence remaining skeptics. The hell with art, let's just dance.

Barr shines in 1981 Replay

By JOE MARUSAK

Call it "deja vu" or anything you like, but whatever it was, it sure paid off for the Villanova men's varsity soccer team.

This past Saturday, the Wildcats took to the turf against Rutgers-Camden's varsity squad. It was a sunny and relatively warm day, the second day of Parents' Weekend at VU.

All of this sounds familiar. Last year, the same two teams met on the same field (Villanova Stadium), on the same weekend, and under the very same weather conditions.

Probably just coincidence. But then we continue. At the match played six days ago, there were also many fans; in fact, there were as many attendees as will most likely crowd the bleachers at a Villanova soccer match this year.

A quick check of the records shows last season's Parents' Weekend contest to be no different. The fans that day were also out in significant numbers.

And both years the same team, led by the same individual, came out on top: Villanova was the team and Brian Barr the star.

One year ago (give or take a week), when Barr was a junior, the Wildcats beat Rutgers-Camden by 4-1; the Garrett Hill, Pa., native scored three goals.

This year, he netted only one against the Red and Black, but it was good enough to give VU a victory of 1-0.

From the looks of the score, the match would appear to have been a defensive encounter. That really wasn't the case. The Main Liners, with Mike Layfield, Steve Maillard and Barr up front, controlled most of the play.

The main problem the team ran into during the first half and part of the second was a stubborn Rutgers-Camden defense. Dan Allen, R-C's goalie, was the busiest man on that unit. He also turned out to be their best, making several nice stops.

Allen could not have done it without the assistance of three defenders in particular. This R-C trio was rather inexperienced — one a freshman, John Kurcher; one a sophomore, Jim Gleason; and the other, Evo Santarelli, a junior — but they helped protect their keeper from all sides.

Several times though, Villanova forwards broke through. They simply could not convert . . . that is, until the middle of the second half. Then, finally, the Wildcats scored.

But it wouldn't have been possible without a key change on the part of Head Coach Howard Graff. In the second half, he moved the sweeper Rob Porter to the left-wing position. Graff's explanation: "I wasn't getting any movement on the left side."

Porter immediately created the movement needed. He also started the play which gave the Cats their goal. After neatly moving the ball down the left side, Porter crossed it to John Valickus in R-C's goal area. Valickus then flipped the ball off to Barr, who kicked it into the right portion of the net.

"It paid off," Graff later remarked in reference to the left wing change.

CORNER KICKS: "We've been a little disappointing," Graff said after the match. He's referring to his team's mediocre 3-3-2 start this year. There are some legitimate excuses though. As the coach explained, "Of course, Brian (Barr) was hurt . . . that didn't help. Team spirit wasn't high. But this match has helped." . . . Mike Layfield is currently the second best scorer in the Soccer Seven. The senior co-captain has 14 points . . . The Cats next host Georgetown this Saturday. It'll be their first and last match against a Big East team during the regular season.

RAM TOUGH: The West Chester State defense fell prey to a persistent Villanova attack on Saturday. The Cats pounded out a 4-1 victory over the Rams to up their season record to 4-1. On Wednesday the women dropped a 5-1 contest to Princeton, the East's number-one ranked squad.

Villanova Harriers Take Third

By PAUL MACCHIA

The Villanova men's cross country team competed in the 9th Annual Paul Short Memorial Championship 10,000-Meter Run last Saturday at Lehigh University in Bethlehem, Pa. It was a beautiful day for racing as the sky was clear over the rolling grass hills of the Saucon Valley fields.

The Wildcats came into this meet hampered, as two of its regular varsity runners were out with injuries. John Keyworth is still troubled with chest problems, and Pete Carroll is having achilles trouble. Ken Lucks is also having achilles trouble. Brian O'Keefe and Marcus O'Sullivan are suffering stomach and leg cramps, respectively.

Despite all these handicaps, the Wildcats finished third with 140 points. Navy (59 points) was first, and Penn State (117 points) was second.

Freshman Anthony O'Reilly was the first Wildcat across the line placing sixth overall with a time of 31:26. Coach Jack Pyrah commented, "O'Reilly ran his best race. All the runners that placed ahead of him are all experienced upperclassmen."

Brian O'Keefe was the second Wildcat, finishing 23rd overall with a time of 32:14. Dermot Anderson was 30th in 32:28. Marcus O'Sullivan placed 36th in 32:33. Freshman J.J. Clark was 45th in 32:51.

Pyrah stated, "This was just another meet. We trained through it to prepare ourselves for the NCAA Districts and the IC4A's." Pyrah was amazed at the strength of Navy, whose team placed its top five runners among the first 18 finishers.

The Wildcats next meet will be tomorrow (October 16) at the Belmont Plateau in Fairmount Park. The Big Five Championship starts tomorrow at 11 a.m. with the junior varsity race followed by the varsity women's race at 11:45 a.m. The gun for the varsity men's race goes off at 11:55 a.m.

Field Hockey Tops Hofstra

By BOB HELLER

Villanova's field hockey squad, coming off of an impressive 7-6 victory over Immaculata last Tuesday, travelled to Philadelphia last Thursday to take on Drexel University.

A disastrous start by the Wildcats almost proved to be very costly, but good defensive play by the Cats kept Drexel in check. After a shaky first five minutes, the Cats came to life. Amy Hutchison and Sue Lora scored goals for the Wildcats. However, Drexel also scored twice, and the score was deadlocked at 2-2 after regulation time had expired. Neither team broke the tie in overtime and strokes had to be taken. Drexel put the pressure on the Cats by converting their first four shots. Strokers Gina Roman, Hutchison, and Lora converted their shots. The Cats then had a chance to force Drexel to take their final shot, but the Cats' stroke failed to convert. Drexel was a 6-5 winner and the Cats' record dropped to 2-6.

Despite the loss to Drexel, the Cats did play a good game, controlling the ball 90 percent of the time. Beth Moyer had another good game on defense, and Lora and Hutchison were excellent offensively. The Cats' next game was against the Flying Dutchwomen of Hofstra on Oct. 12.

Nova dominated play during the first half, taking a 2-0 lead with them at halftime. Both Wildcat goals were scored by Lora. The second half was a lackluster one for the Cats, with Hofstra having many more shots on goal and corner hits than the Wildcats. The Cats did not get a single shot on goal in the second half, Hofstra finished the game wit 18 shots and 17 corners, compared to Nova's seven and six, respectively. Hofstra scored twice and the score was tied at 2-2 after regulation time. Neither team was able to score during the first overtime, but in the second overtime, Lora scored her third goal of the day and her fifth in two games. The Cats' defense held on to preserve a 3-2 victory for the Cats, raising their record to 3-6.

Moyer again played well for the Cats against Hofstra, stopping their attacks on several occasions.

Lora also had another excellent game at forward, scoring a hat trick.

Introducing Nova bowling

By DAN CARROLL

The Villanova bowling club is a sport club recongized by the Villanova Athletic Department. The team competes in the Eastern Pennsylvania and Maryland Intercollegiate Bowling Conference (EPMIBC) and in at least six major collegiate tournaments from Oct. 1 through March. The EPMIBC includes Temple, Drexel, Penn State, Bloomsburg State, Maryland, George Washington (D.C.) and seven other colleges. Over the past two years Villanova has achieved a 27-11 conference record, two second place conference finishes and two bids into post-season tournament play.

Villanova also boasts of high finishes in several tournaments, a conference record three-game team series (3236), a conference record individual average (198) two bowlers with perfect games (300) and sent one bowler to the ACUI National Individual Championships, which is open to only 32 bowlers nationwide.

The current Villanova bowling club consists of four veteran bowlers and five team rookies, and may be the strongest team ever assembled. Coached by Bob Murray and Jim Longwich, the duo work and travel with the team without financial compensation. Mary Ann Steenrod, director of women's athletics and the bowling team financial moderator, handles the distribution of team funds.

This past weekend the bowling club upped its record to 3-0 with come-from-behind victories over Drexel University and Penn State-Capital Campus. They increased their team average to 196 with four bowlers over 200. Ron Costa leads the team with a 212 average. Dan Carroll shot a team record 279 game and Mike Bucci assumed the league lead in a three-game series with a [illegible]

Driscoll Views Aired

Football Stand Reaffirmed

By MICHAEL HEALEY and LARRY GOANOS

Although there is no football at Villanova, the overall athletic program does receive strong, financial support from the Board of Trustees, according to the University President, Rev. John Driscoll, O.S.A.

"The funds that were being used to support the football program were substantial," said Driscoll. "Those funds are now being better used to enhance the total athletic program. And for the time being," he added, "that is a sound, responsible move on the part of the University.

"The University has made a very substantial commitment to developing an athletic program which will service the needs of all the students," continued Driscoll. "It has done so by the renovation of the stadium, by its present commitment to renovate the Field House and to construct an additional, indoor athletic facility.

DESERTED: The emptiness of Villanova Stadium stands in sharp contrast to the festive football Saturdays of the past.

"All of this is costly," he said, "and it does indicate the University's recognition that athletics, or an athletic program, is a very important part of a university experience."

Ted Aceto, Villanova's athletic director, believes that the administration has indeed been supportive of Villanova's athletic programs. "They (the Board of Trustees) haven't made any less of a total commitment to the other programs since the dropping of football," he said. "The building of an athletic facility would be a giant-step move," he added, "and would be proof of this commitment."

Back in April 1981, one of the reasons cited by Driscoll for the dropping of the football program was a "reintensification of the academic mission." Now in October 1982, his stance has not wavered.

"There is no incompatability between a sound and solid athletic program," he said, "and the academic mission of Villanova University, or any university.

"However," he continued, "when any program, be it academic, athletic or other, consumes an inordinate amount of limited resources, then a balance must be struck. So, Villanova's academic mission has been reinforced by the events that have taken place within the last year."

Some of the events which have taken place are the formation and introduction of new academic programs such as the MBA program, the graduate nursing program and the undergraduate program in computer sciences.

Major renovations and capital improvements have occurred on campus as well over the past year. Included in these are the renovations and the construction of a new library in Bartley Hall, energy conservation measures in Tolentine Hall and some dormitories and a substantial commitment to enhancing the University's computer capability.

Despite the significant outlays of financial resources for the aforementioned improvements, Driscoll believes that Villanova could once again have a football team.

"I have no reason to believe that football is gone forever from the campus," he said. "I do not foresee its immediate return. So much depends upon the developments of the next few years."

Clearly however, the University's commitment to the academic and capital improvements will impose a substantial burden on Villanova's operational overhead.

Said Driscoll, "It (improvement) requires that the University now engage in a major capital fund drive to pay off the debt of $25,000,000 that it has incurred."

Netters Capture Tourney

By LAURA FORTUNATO

The women's tennis team captured three of their last four matches. On Oct. 2, the team hosted the Division 2A Pennsylvania Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women (P.A.I.A.W.) Tournament. Competition included St. Joe's, Kutztown, and Haverford. Luba Matkiwsky, Carol Harrison and Abigail Burke won first, second and third singles positions respectively. Trish Stairiker and Sue Golden captured first doubles with second doubles winners Dawn Fisher and Cynthia Burke. This is the second consecutive year that Villanova has won this tournament.

Although a few of the women were missing, due to various injuries and illnesses, the team secured wins against Towson 8-1, and Scranton 7-2.

Villanova's only loss came against undefeated Fordham 3-2. Lenia Matkiwsky returned after 12 days of nursing torn ankle ligaments to win the first singles match. Stairiker and Golden captured the first doubles position. "Although we lost, the team offered very impressive performances," commented Coach Langran

The women's tennis team has a record of 10 wins and three losses.

The Villanova women's tennis team continued its winning ways by taking first place honors in the P.A.I.A.W. Tournament held at Villanova on Oct. 2.

Place Third in Navy Tourney

Spikers On The Rise

By STEPHEN FALLON

The rollercoaster ride which has represented this year's volleyball schedule continued last weekend as the Wildcats scratched their way to a third-place finish in the Navy Tournament in Annapolis, Md.

The Cats defeated Seton Hall, the University of Maryland-Baltimore County and host Navy, while falling to West Chester and Virginia Tech in the two-day event.

The weekend performance could be viewed as a microcosm of the season in which inexperience on the court has led to a struggle with mediocrity. The 3-2 weekend record left the Cats' season slate at 12-13.

Junior captain Stephanie Moore admits, "Those teams (in the Navy Tournament field) weren't any better than us. We could have beaten all of them but we made too many mistakes. It has been a lack of experience that has hurt us all year."

Despite the struggles thus far in the season, things are looking up. Nancy Allen, a pivitol member of team, returned to action this weekend and performed well, despite seeing limited playing time. Another positive factor, in the words of Moore, is that, "we have improved rather rapidly — last week (Oct. 1 at the Towson Tournament) we finished 10th, this week we moved up to third. After all, improvement is all you can really ask for."

As with most errors of youth, experience is the only remedy and there is still a month remaining in the season for the Cats to prepare for the final showdown — the Big East Tournament in Providence, R.I., on Nov. 12-14. Moore adds, "That is our goal, to have a good showing in the Big East Tournament. It is the end that we are working toward."

The team's next match is Oct. 19 at the Field House against St. Joe's.

GENUINE GENUINE GENUINE GENUINE

By MICHAEL BETZ

She's a freshman transfer student. She's the winner of the Athletics Congress' Long Distance Running Award. She's the winner of last year's Philadelphia Distance Run and Marathon Championships. She's Jan Yerkes, track star and this week's Budweiser Athlete of the Week.

Jan Yerkes arrived at Villanova as a marathoner, but she's currently earning her laurels in cross country. At the Rutgers Invitational Meet held on Oct. 3, Jan ran the 5,000-meter course in a time of 18:23, good enough for a tenth-place finish. Last Saturday, at the Paul Short Memorial Run, she pared 28 seconds off her time, finishing in 17:55, and capturing third place. In each meet she had the best time of any Cat runner while pacing the squad to sixth and third place finishes respectively.

The Central Bucks East graduate is, according to her coach Bob Shoudt, "one of the most outstanding prospects Villanova has ever had." Though she seems to be a natural in cross country, Shoudt sees a different future for Jan.

"She's a definite Olympic prospect in the marathon in 1984," Shoudt stated flatly.

Shoudt cited a foot injury as holding Jan back earlier in the season, but does not expect the injury to prove serious. "She lost a couple of weeks at the beginning there," Shoudt related, "but she's fine now."

"Fine" is an understatement. The Short Memorial Run marked only the third time in her track career that Jan had run cross-country competitively. Her third-place finish, out of a field of 61, is nothing short of remarkable. It is for this reason, among others, that Shoudt has such high hopes for Jan.

"She's a great girl," Shoudt declared, "and she has fit in beautifully with the people we have here."

Being great is what made Jan Yerkes the Budweiser Athlete of the Week. And, in the words of her coach Bob Shoudt, "Jan is more than deserving."

Connelly Center Losses Mount

Analysis

By LEONARD J. La BARTH

Is it possible that an award-winning building costing $8.4 million, funded mostly by an enthusiastic local entrepeneur, is a detriment to a university's health?

The Connelly Center, Villanova's answer to the social, educational and entertainment needs of students, faculty and administrators, lost $82,837 during the 1981-82 academic year. The expected losses for 1982-83 have been estimated by a University Senate Committee at $143,832.

Why is this facility, lobbied for by the students and faculty for close to 15 years, constructed in 18 months and dedicated by Cardinal John Krol, losing money?

Some cite the escalating salary increases, others the tremendous winter fuel bills; still others blame the high food costs the center is forced to charge due to the economic slump. While each of these factors contribute to the mounting deficits accrued by the center, none are the sole cause.

The need for a university center at Villanova was first discussed in 1968. The idea soon became a priority of the University Senate Building Committee and in 1975, the Covenant I Campaign was started. The first phase of the campaign was concerned with the construction of a university center.

In December of 1976, the architectural firm of Vincent Kling Associates was chosen to design the center to be located in the vicinity of Kennedy and Dougherty Halls. The selection of the site brought with it the necessity to reroute pedestrian and vehicular traffic on campus. This also created a problem in on-campus parking.

Three special variances had to be approved by the Radnor Zoning Board in September 1977 before construction could begin. The variances allowed the length of the building to exceed 160 feet the distance between buildings to be less than 35 feet and the number of parking spaces at the center to be less than the number of auditorium seats.

The Planning Commission of Radnor next approved the overall proposal for the university center on Oct. 3, 1977. This approval in-

Student Government

Football Committee is Formed

By JEFFREY PAGE

The formation of a Student Government Committee to Reinstate Football was confirmed this week by Student Body President Paul Tufano. "Within the next two weeks, we plan to find out if the students are willing to support a football program," said Tufano, chairman of the committee.

In a letter to members of Villanova's Board of Trustees informing them of the committee, Tufano said, "The goal of the committee is to find a program the students will support . . . It is not our intention to question the decision to drop football two years ago. We hope that perhaps we can serve as a means for improving the relationship between the administration and the Alumni Association." The letter went on to note that the Committee to Reinstate is composed of students, and is a separate entity from the alumni group, the Committee to Restore. "The University will not be . . . pressured. In fact, it is our hope to create some goodwill . . ."

The Rev. Edward McCarthy, O.S.A., chairman of the Board of Trustees, said that he was in favor of the committee "as long as they realize the problems involved." He continued, "The board doesn't think it made the wrong decision (to drop football). It will take real evidence to change that notion. Football became financially unbearable; if some solution comes up that would take care of that, the board would be willing to listen."

Villanova President Rev. John Driscoll, O.S.A., called the formation of the committee "a good idea." However, Driscoll noted that the students would have to come up with some new information to have an impact on the board. "But, it is not likely that the students are going to come up with another recommendation that is valid. Given the facts, the committee will come up with the same decision (as the trustees)."

Tufano disagreed. "We have been looking at all the figures concerning football, and we believe we have come up with a solution." The committee is going to ask the student body, by way of a survey, if they are willing to directly support football financially. According to the proposal, the University would add a fee onto all students' semester bills. Students would be entitled to tickets to all home games, as long as they picked them up a week prior to the game. After that, the tickets would go on sale to the general public. "If the students want football, and everything that goes along with it, this is the only way," Tufano added.

"Basically, what is needed to restore football is money," said McCarthy. "The board would be looking to see that it (football) is beneficial to the University — and not financially a burden, as it was."

Bond Issue Explained

By LEONARD J. La BARTH

Vice president for Financial Affairs Gary Fenner explained Villanova's recently issued $25 million bond issue at the Oct. 15 meeting of the University Senate.

Also covered at the meeting were a report on the new parking system, status of committee reports, the election of a faculty member to fill a position on the Senate Executive Committee and a motion to increase the hours of Falvey Memorial Library.

Following announcements and correspondense, nominations were opened for a faculty member to serve on the Senate Executive Committee Dr. Robert Nally was nominated by Dr Joyce Longman, seconded by Dr. Bernard Stern and elected unanimously.

Senate Chairman Eleanor Strack next reported that she met with Chairman of the Board of Trustees Rev. Edward McCarthy, O.S.A., to submit resumes for faculty candidates to the seats available on standing committees of the Board of Trustees. The executive committees of the Board of Trustees and the University Senate will meet Nov. 9.

It was also reported that Dr. Joseph DesJardins, chairman of a subcommittee of the Athletic Advisory Committee, which was charged with developing a rationale and study behind the Senate resolution US 8182-3-19 "that the Board of Trustees reconsider the decision to discontinue the football program," is tentatively scheduled to have the report ready for the November Senate meeting.

The Senate Budget Committee report was presented next by Nally in the absence of the committee's chairman, Alvin Clay.

Charged with the work of reviewing the efforts of the Administrative Budget Committee in line with the objectives approved by the Senate, the committee reported that the first draft of the administrative budget is available. The draft includes a five percent increase in tuition, as recommended by the students and a 10 percent overall increase in faculty salaries, as recommended by the faculty. There is a $5 million deficit, similar to the developmental stage of the budget last year.

In the question and answer period recently adopted by the Senate, two administrators were called upon to field questions submitted in advance.

Fenner explained the various aspects of the bond issue that went on sale in August.

Bond Issue Explained

According to Fenner, the bond issue is divided into two parts: one half that is short term (for $12.5 million), and the other half long term. The short term portion requires that the principal of the issue must be repaid by August, 1987. The long term portion is for 20 years.

"The first portion of the bond issue was really to provide funds for four major projects," Fenner explained. "The first project is the new athletic indoor facility and fieldhouse renovation. That is the main segment of the entire project. The second major sub-project is the reconstruction of the new dormitories on the South Campus, which would house a total of approximately 320 additional students."

"The third major segement is for major renovations for existing academic facilities as well as existing dormitories. The bond issue provided a re-imbursement to the University which had extended the funds to get the renovation of Bartley Hall and some work that has already been done in Mendel Hall," stated Fenner.

According to Fenner, the bond issue "dramatically affects" the operating budget. Beginning with the 1983-84 budget, there will be a line item that was never in the budget before. The line item will be approximately $1.5 million for debt sevice on the long term portion of the bond issue; in 1984-85, the line item will be increased to the "worst-case situation" to approximately $2.7 million to provide debt service for the entire $25 million bond issue. Major monies received from the Covenant II Campaign will be used to reduce the short term portion of the bond issue.

Tuchman Explains Center's Costs

cluded the settling of a construction site and details concerning sewage and drainage. A building permit was then issued.

In May 1978, construction of the center began and the Covenant I Campaign fundraising was intensified. In October, the Connelly Foundation of Philadelphia donated a gift of $4.8 million to be used to underwrite the cost of the university center. The principal donors to the Connelly Foundation were John F. Connelly and his wife, Josephine Connelly, a trustee at Villanova, is the president and board chairman of Crown Cork and Seal Co. of Philadelphia, which is involved with the canning and packaging of major manufactured goods.

Reportedly worth over $80 million, Connelly has a long history of donating to Catholic organizations and charities.

In July 1978, Marc Tuchman was appointed director of the center. He had previously been involved with the planning and construction of a similar building at California State University at Northridge.

According to Tuchman, the Connelly Center, while completed on time, was not without inherent problems.

"The very beginning of construction was started before I came here," said Tuchman. "I started off with 'givens'. We wanted to complete the center as soon as possible to allow the graduating seniors to enjoy some time there."

The major renovation Tuchman incorporated was the redesign of the kitchen area. "Space modification was the main purpose of the redesign," Tuchman explained. "We hired a consultant to work with myself and the committee but he died and we had to pick up the pieces."

The Connelly Center opened its doors to the public on March 18, 1980. It was revealed a week later that the 1980-81 budget allowed for the Connelly Center to operate under a $200,000 deficit. The University had hoped for an endowment to offset the deficit, but it never materialized.

The Rev. George Burnell, O.S.A., then vice-president of financial affairs, said a deficit would have to be expected. "Because income from sales and food is not enough," said Burnell, "the deficit has to be expected. The difference will be made up somewhere — in part by student tuition."

"As long as I've been involved with the Connelly Center, there has been the expectation that the building would generate a profit," explained Tuchman. "The University has always stressed 'service' to the university community."

It had been speculated that a purchase of a liquor license would affect the center's financing by boosting the number of students who frequented the center. At the time, Tuchman denied that a license purchase was imminent and said that a liquor license would not affect the Connelly Center a great deal. "At best we could break even and maybe make a little profit," he said.

Villanova purchased a retail liquor license in October 1980. When the down payment was put on the license, then Vice-President for Student Life Rev. John Deegan, O.S.A., said "We might be able to resurrect the Cat's Eye or Monday night football kind of thing."

The purchase of the $40,000 retail license almost immediately created problems. First and foremost, the University had originally wanted to purchase a "club liquor license," not a retail one. According to Tuchman, Villanova would have had to wait "forever" to get a club license.

The problems included regulations concerning the amount of people served, supervision and control of the people, possible violations observed by the LCB and questions raised by Radnor Township over maintenance and orderliness of students.

"After the Connelly Center opened, there was more of a concern as to whether or not we should have a bar," said Dr. Richard Neville, vice-president for student life. "It didn't make much sense. It doesn't seem to be in the best interest of the students.

"We weren't well enough informed. We made assumptions that weren't true," he said.

The license is currently being sold through Morgan, Lewis and Bockius, the Philadelphia law firm representing the University.

Connelly Center expenses in 1981-82 totaled $979,466. Full, part-time and student salaries commanded about 50 percent of the expenditures at $475,952. Purchases for resale, which included food purchases, were $375,268, approximately 38 percent. Operational expenses totaled $98,491, almost 11 percent.

"Our budget is unique because it better reflects the whole of the center," Tuchman explained.

"If you were to compare the Connelly Center budget to that of other facilities on campus, you would find line items that other budgets do not include.

"We pay the housekeeping and maintenance for the Connelly Center out of the expense budget. Other facilities do not include that in expenses. The $124,800 we pay is the difference between being in the red and being in the black."

Tuchman once joked after a leak was discovered in the ceiling of the Connelly Center that, "I've never been involved in a project that didn't leak." What Tuchman did not realize when he made that joke in 1980 that just two years later, the leak would turn into a flood openly debated in several University budget meetings.

For the first time in several years, the University Senate Budget Committee, at its Feb. 16, 1982 meeting, voted against recommending that the full Senate approve the University's proposed budget for the 1982-83 academic year.

According to Student Body President Paul Tufano, who served as secretary for the budget committee, the administration offered "all increases but no answers. Those upset by the budget were most concerned with the percentage increase allotted to the Connelly Center."

In a budget report prepared by Tufano, total Connelly Center revenue for 1982-83 is expected to be $929,400 and expenses, $1,073,232, resulting in a loss of $143,832. At the present rate, the Connelly Center losses could mount up to a total of $500,000.

At the March 19 Senate meeting, the budget was approved by a 16-12-3 vote. Two student senators were not present at the meeting.

Dr. Robert Nally, a member of the Senate Budget Committee, supported an argument against the Senate's recommendation to approve the budget. Nally had originally voted in favor of the proposed budget but changed his mind, "due to considerable reflection."

"I just don't feel well about it," Nally said. "It's a matter of qualitativeness. Yes, the priorities are met but there are areas that need discussion. It seems we are just approving matters built in for one more year."

Nally centered his reasoning for voting against the proposal upon the Connelly Center losses.

"We're not talking cost increase but losses," explained Nally. "We need to talk it out. The Connelly Center is supposed to be self-sustaining.

"It must be realized that a proportion of tuition is used to subsidize the facility. It may be there for the students, but I hear most can't afford to eat there and those who bring brown bags aren't allowed to eat there."

According to Tuchman, each Villanova student spent an average of $5.22 last year in the Connelly Center.

"The Connelly Center is a service," Tuchman said. "We wouldn't be doing the volume we are if we didn't generate good prices."

Chairman Resigns

By BETH BONINA and KIM RUSHTON

Dr. Joseph George, chairman of the history department, tendered his resignation last week, effective the end of the 1982-83 academic year.

Dr. Joseph George John Walsh Photo

George, who has been chairman for the past 17 years, commented, "I think that that is a very long time to serve as a department head. I don't want to break F.D.R.'s record by having a fourth term. However, I will continue to teach here." No replacement for George has been named as yet.

Vice President for Academic Affairs, Rev. Lawrence Gallen, O.S.A., stated, "George has been a very effective and a very good chairman for the history department. It is an important and difficult job, and he has met the challenges of it well."

In his tenure at Villanova, George has noted some changes. "The nature of the University has changed from a backwater, provincial school to becoming a major university," said George. "It isn't as isolated an institution as it once was."

He also noted that the history department has grown over the years. "There are now broader, more extensive studies in Latin American and Asian history," George noted. "Also, a large number of students are doing independent studies. I would hope that this emphasis on scholarship will continue."

The duties of a department chairman are to ensure that schedules are correct for the faculty, and that there are instructors for the courses at the times offered.

Before a new chairman is named, the faculty in the department will nominate two or three professors to fill the vacancy. Then, these names will be sent to the Dean of Arts and Sciences, Rev. John O'Malley, O.S.A., who will write comments on each of the nominees, and then send them to Gallen for final approval.

"The procedure for choosing a new department head is a very democratic one," said Gallen. "Although I do not know who will be George's successor at this time, I can be sure that it will be a well thought-out choice."

submitted to the Senate, via letter, a response to the Senate's questions concerning the new parking system.

"The chief governing principle is to develop a traffic and parking plan that will promote pedestrian and vehicular safety and that will provide necessary access for persons and emergency agents," the submitted report read.

According to Laferty, there will be an increased enforcement of regulations, including strict, daily tagging of all violators and an increased use of towing. Also, the letter stated that improved public relations from the Security Office will include giving all students a clear statement of the parking-/traffic policy. Next on the agenda was a motion presented by Paul Tufano that the University should increase the hours Falvey Memorial Library is open. Following a discussion questioning the possibility of expanding the hours after comparing the operating hours to those of other colleges, Tufano remanded the motion to the Library Committee, a subcommittee of the Academic Policy Committee, for study.

Football Committee

The survey, which is scheduled to start a week from today, "has to be properly constructed to provide a valid student opinion," said Driscoll. "If someone asked me if I would like to see football back, I would say, 'Yes, of course.' But asking the students if they want to directly pay for football (through a fee), well, why would a student say yes to that?"

Driscoll continued, "What would have made a difference is if the students had gone down to watch the games; but they didn't. Students didn't care about football." He added, "Some thoroughly enjoyed it, but most of the alumni and students had other interests."

Tufano hopes to have the survey tabulated and a final report ready in time for the trustees Executive Committee meeting in November. "If the trustees are open to the proposal in November, there is a very good possibility that we can join the new I-AA conference, along with such schools as William and Mary, Lehigh, University of Delaware, and V.M.I.," Tufano said.

"The survey will be useful if it is a valid expression of informed student opinion," Driscoll said. "But, the likelihood is that the students won't know enough to have an informed opinion. They haven't had the opportunity to examine this from all angles."

Drunken Driving Penalty Debated

By LINDA BOND

The Villanova Political Union sponsored its second debate of the semester Oct. 12 in the Wayne-St. Davids Room of the Connelly Center. Speaker of the Pennsylvania House of Representatives Matthew R. Ryan was the guest speaker.

The resolution read: This house favors mandatory jail sentences for first time offenders of drunk driving laws.

Ryan voted in favor of a 48 hour detainment or alternative punishment of 60-70 hours of community service for drivers having a .10 alcohol blood level. When the bill came before Pennsylvania's House of Representatives three weeks ago, it passed with only one dissenting vote.

Ryan mentioned that there was extensive lobbying from groups such as Mothers Against Drunk Driving, National Safety Councils and the law enforcement agencies. He also said that the upcoming elections in November caused some representatives to accomodate these special interest groups.

Ryan went on to state he was concerned that the jails were filled to capacity. He expressed doubt that there would be room for drunk drivers in an already overcrowded prison system.

Speaker for the political union's conservative party, Phillip Caparso, urged club members to support a mandatory jail sentence for first time offenders. He saw the penalty as a deterent and emphasized the extent to which drinking and driving was as a serious social problem.

The moderate party's speaker, Michelle Testin, stated, Better is mandatory public service, suspension of one's license and similar constructive actions. Let us be reasonable adults and not construct a legal system based on revenge."

Mary Duff, speaker for the liberal party, felt drunk drivers should be handled on a case-by-case basis. She was against a uniform punishment and called for an understanding of individual circumstances.

The resolution failed by a vote of 13-16-0.

Grad School Programs Assessed

By CAROL ALKONS

This is the time of year when those who are considering graduate school begin evaluating the curriculum, faculty and prestige associated with a particular school's graduate program. Villanova, which offers 40 graduate programs, will be among the colleges and universities considered.

Villanova's graduate program offers 38 master's programs spanning the arts, sciences, engineering, commerce and finance, and nursing. Additionally, there is a full-time Ph.D. program in chemistry and a J.D. program in law. The programs in nursing, law, and business are administered by those particular schools rather than the Graduate School.

Unlike undergraduate programs, which are accredited by a regional agency (Villanova's undergraduate program is accredited by the Middle States Association), graduate programs, except those of a professional or semi-professional nature (education, library science), are not accredited because no external accreditation agency for graduate schools exists.

Dr. Bernard J. Downey, dean of the graduate school and director of research, explained that "in some areas, accreditation is primarily related to the undergraduate program. The accreditation of the College of Commerce and Finance covers both the undergraduate and the graduate programs. The same is true for the College of Nursing. The education programs and library science program are approved by the Pennsylvania Department of Education. Certain areas need accreditation; but there aren't accreditation agencies for most programs."

Three years ago Downey initiated a system of program review and evaluation. Each year about three or four evaluations are held. Downey described the process: "First we ask the department to complete a questionnaire to gather statistics and data about the program and faculty. Then we select two external observers to spend a few days here and write an evaluation of the program."

Dr. Bernard Downey, dean of graduate school.

Next there is a process of internal review. A group of faculty members, graduate students and Downey repeat the evaluation process from Villanova's point of view.

"We consider, 'Is this in Villanova's best interest?' and try to relate the program to Villanova," Downey said.

So far, ten evaluations have been completed. In many cases, several graduate programs, such as French, German and Spanish, are reviewed in one evaluation. Downey expects four evaluations to be finished this year, and "the rest probably next year."

Presently the total enrollment in all graduate programs is 2,200 students. Approximately 50 percent of the graduate populations are women, according to Downey, that has been the case throughout the years because the Graduate School has maintained an "open-system" of enrollment since it was established in 1931. (The Graduate School was known as the Graduate Studies Program from its origin until 1976.)

Enrollment decreased from 1975 until 1979 but has been increasing since then. Downey speculated that the increase in enrollment is due to "certain new programs that are very attractive." Downey listed computer science (which currently boasts 400 graduate students), nursing, master of business administration (MBA), taxation, and human organization science as the most popular programs.

Approximately 500 students attend classes full-time. Downey explained that the Graduate School is oriented toward serving the local community.

"Most courses — nearly all — are offered at night for the people who live in the area, work in the area and come to school at night," he said.

The Graduate School Bulletin echoes this statement of purpose: "Courses are offered in the late afternoon and evening to provide an opportunity for working men and women to obtain a master's degree on a part-time basis."

Regarding the admissions policy, Downey said that only six programs require applicants' Graduate Record Examination (GRE) scores, but, "in general" a 3.0 grade point average or better is required.

The percentage of applicants accepted in the Graduate Program differs from department to department.

"In the more technical areas, the percentage accepted is between 60 and 70. In the humanities and other areas, over 90 percent of applicants are accepted," Downey stated. There usually is not as large a number of applicants for graduate work in the humanities as in technical areas, and of those who apply, most are qualified, he explained.

Each year the Graduate School awards 150 graduate assistantships purely on the basis of academic scholarship; the graduate assistants receive a stipend and have all tuition paid by the school.

Approximately 400 to 500 Villanova graduate students receive federally guaranteed loans. Federal grant programs do not apply to graduate students. Downey added that in the fields of engineering, computer science, and other sciences, many times a company will pay for an employee to enroll in a graduate program. Some school districts also reimburse teachers for the cost of graduate courses.

The graduate program in liberal studies is the newest program in the school, and is in its first semester. There are 11 students enrolled, and Downey explained that the program will eventually grow to a steady enrollment of 20-25 students. The program contains three team-taught seminar courses, each oriented around a certain theme. One seminar is given each semester. The students will be able to select from the entire gamut of graduate courses. The fourth semester combines all the readings in the form of a paper. Courses must "center around a specific theme."

Polish Politics to be Discussed

By MICHAEL O'BRIEN

The political science department of Villanova is sponsoring a symposium of "The Politics of Contemporary Poland" to be held Oct. 27 at the Connelly Center Cinema Room from 7 to 8 p.m.

The symposium, which will bring together three Polish scholars and three American specialists on Poland, is part of a week long Polish Festival from Oct. 24-31, being held at Villanova University.

Those speaking at the symposium will be Jane Curry on "The Political Power Struggle: Who Governs?"; Bronislaw Misztal on "Sociopolitical Stability in Poland"; Marcin Sar on "International Consequences of the Polish Crisis"; Maurice Simon on "Political Alienation and The Political Impasse"; Miron Wolnicki on "Polish Dependence on Trade with the USSR"; and Jeffrey Hahn, chairman of the symposium.

Football Group Has Right Idea

"We've been looking at all the figures concerning football, and we believe we have come up with a solution."
— Paul Tufano
Student Body President

So said Paul Tufano as he announced the formation of the Student Government Committee to Reinstate Football, the first formal student lobbying group for the return of football to Villanova since the sport was ignomiously dropped two years ago.

According to the University's president, the Rev. John Driscoll, O.S.A., the discontinuation of football was for purely financial reasons; the University was losing too much money on the program to continue to justify its existence. So it was claimed.

Now the Student Government Committee to Reinstate Football has come along with an idea so startling in its simplicity and common sense that we wonder why it was never proposed before: have the University add a fee on to all students' bills which would be used expressedly to support the Villanova varsity football program.

We think this is an excellent idea.

First of all, the fee would be relatively modest when spread among the more than 10,000 students who attend Villanova. The increase would probably amount to only a .5 percent addition to what students currently pay. Second, under the committee's proposal, each student would be entitled to receive a ticket to all home games without any extra charge. And third, if the proposal was to be adopted soon by the Board of Trustees and football was restored in a timely fashion, Villanova could possibly join the new I-AA football conference being formed by such notable schools as Lehigh, the University of Delaware and William and Mary.

We agree with the committee's contention that, if students really want football back at Villanova, then they should be willing to pay for it. Furthermore, benefits would not necessarily be shared only by those who would regularly attend the games; everyone connected with the school would gain from the prestige, publicity and other incalculable benefits that come with having a competitive collegiate football program.

Next Friday, the Student Government Committee to Reinstate Football will begin surveying students as to whether they would be willing to directly pay for the return of football. The results will then be forwarded to the Board of Trustees. We urge all students to support the committee's proposal, and we urge the trustees to weigh the committee's findings seriously.

EnjoyHomecoming for What it Offers

Homecoming weekend is upon us, and it's time to step back and look at it with a little bit of objectivity.

Sure, this year, like last year, there is no football at Villanova. Many people are working extremely hard to remedy this situation, but that takes time. Maybe football will be back next year. Or maybe it will take five years to get it reinstated. No one can really be certain.

What is certain, though, is that there still is a Homecoming weekend. The purpose of Homecoming isn't only to attend a football game; rather, its main function is to bring alumni, students, faculty and administrators — all the people who make Villanova what it is — together. Anger at a decision made by certain administrators two years ago should not prevent anyone from taking part in what is offered this weekend.

Granted, a carnival might seem a bit unusual on a college campus, and it might be a poor substitute to many, but it's not the only thing happening. There are still sports events, like men's and women's soccer matches, which all deserve support. There are the usual alumni dinners, cocktail parties and dances, just like every year. And of course, there are also the ubiquitous tail-gates in the parking lot, where most people spent the bulk of every other Homecoming, whether there was football or not.

No, Homecoming isn't the same without football. But it's here nonetheless, and we might as well enjoy it.

Erdlen's Attitude 'Distressing'

To the Editor:

I read your banner article of Oct. 15, "Minority Enrollment Stays 2%," with deep regret because I happen to be a minority student here at Villanova. I found the ignorance and negative attitude displayed by the Rev. Harry Erdlen, O.S.A., dean of admissions, to be distressing. The same effect would have been achieved had he slapped every minority he encountered across the face!

I found it hard to swallow that a Villanova administrator would have the audacity to imply that minority students in attendance here are less than academically qualified. It is true that a minority student more academically qualified may choose to attend a better learning institution, but that holds true for any student. Erdlen's statement was not only derogatory to minorities but to the entire Villanova University population as well.

When I received my letter of acceptance from Villanova, I was pleased. I was under the impression that I'd made a wise decision in choosing to attend Villanova. Apparently, by Erdlen's statement, I was sadly mistaken. Since he himself observed that there are other schools with greater prestige than Villanova, why does he not become affiliated with one of them?

I'd like to point out that it would not be cheaper and easier for me to attend either Temple, Drexel or Penn. I live on campus, which saves on meals and transportation, and it would cost me $2,000-$3,000 more per year to attend any of them.

I'd also like to state that I was admitted to Villanova under the Academic Advancement Program, but that fact has no bearing whatever on my academic performance. I am allotted no special favors because of it. Though some of the minority students here were admitted through this program, there are more non-minority students in the program than minorities.

In conclusion I'd like to say that I'm pleased that Erdlen doesn't make all policies for admissions, for if it were left up to his incompetence, as demonstrated by his irresponsible statements, the only minorities here would be those who bring notoriety to Villanova on the sports fields.

Simpson Complaints

To the Editor:

OhmyGod! Gag me with a spoon! It's so grody living in Simpson Hall, for sure. My mother used to make me scrape the plates, but even she would gross out if she knew my new roommate was a rat. Seriously, folks, no one knows the trouble we've seen. The situation has reached epidemic proportions — we've even filed to have this place declared a disaster area!

Do you think Mummy and Daddy would be pleased if they knew we were living with rats in the basement, mice in the attic, a flood in the basement, bugs in the bed, one operating telephone (if we're lucky), toilets leaking through the ceiling, exposed hot water pipes, faulty wiring, broken windows, continuously running faucets, and last but not least, being forced to shower, brush our teeth and go to the bathroom in 145-degree water? Our toothbrushes melt when we try to use them and our hot tub is in the toilet, complete with steam.

Please, someone help us. We don't know where else to turn. The Office of Resident Life and Maintenance don't seem to know or even care where Simpson Hall is.

Listen up. This isn't just one Valley Girl blowing off steam. These problems have accumulated since day one. I'd rather be one of the "Infirmary Seven" than one of us.

Minorities

To the Editor:

In the Oct. 15 edition of the Villanovan, the Rev. Harry Erdlen, O.S.A., dean of admissions at Villanova University, is quoted as saying, "Those (minority) students who are really good go elsewhere. Why should an academically qualified minority student come here when other schools have greater prestige and more money at their disposal?" If Erdlen's comment was accurately and correctly quoted, then it seems to me the remark was unfortunate.

In six years as a teacher at Villanova University, I have met, spoken to and taught students from many racial minorities. Without exception these students have impressed me as being polite, intelligent, hard-working and charitable — in brief, as having the essential qualities we hope for in all our students.

It would be unfortunate if these minority students, who have already, perhaps, experienced racial prejudice during their lives, were made to feel uncomfortable or unwelcome at Villanova University.

Who Knows, Who Cares

To the Editor:

In the past when one would open theVillanovan to the WKWC section, one would expect to find some humorous comments on various aspects of Villanova.

For the past weeks, you have written something extremely negative about WKVU, the student radio station. I have been hesitant about writing a reply because I thought that your tasteless and stupid abuse might stop, but obviously it will continue.

In last week's WKWC section you said, "WKWC wants to know what WKVU is up to with this year's radio marathon . . . they used to do it for Muscular Dystrophy . . . but this year they're doing it for an even more desperate cause . . . themselves . . . supposedly, the money raised is to be used to buy new equipment . . . WKWC thinks they should use it to buy new members . . . they're even more pathetic than the equipment, if that's possible . . . but seriously . . . why not just take it all and buy "marathon chairman" Bob Hellah some new ties . . ."

To respond to your comments, I really do not think that it is any of your business how the money in our budget is spent. If you feel that budgeting is such an interesting matter, then why don't you share with us how much your organization spent for its new furniture and, even more interesting, how much your organization spent for that important drafting table in your office?

Because WKVU had a large capital expenditure over the summer to purchase new transmitters for the five largest dormitories on campus, we felt it would be extremely advantageous for our organization at this time to try to raise money to buy more equipment so that the students of Villanova University could finally hear the radio station.

For the record, WKVU has over 100 active members right now, which is more than your organization can say for itself. At least we don't run weekly ads pleading for d.j.s, news or sports people. So far this year, I recall seeing ads for news and sports writers and business people.

Finally, to attack Radiothon Chairman Bob Heller is extremely immature. General, subtle attacks in a column like WKWC are okay, but when the criticism becomes personal, then it has gone too far. Bob Heller has worked harder than anyone at WKVU to make sure our radiothon fundraiser will be successful.

Often when people begin to critize others, they look past their own shortcomings and faults. This is what the Villanovan has done. At one time, WKVU and the Villanovan were extremely close, but because of the callousness of the editorial board of your organization this is no longer true. WKVU was one of the only remaining organizations with whom the Villanovan had a good relationship. Now the editorial board has alienated another organization. How many organizations would you say that the Villanovan has a good working relationship with? It is interesting to note that Bob Heller and many others at WKVU are active writers for the Villanovan. Why would you criticize your own writers?

Maybe it is time for to stop criticizing others and evaluate yourselves. Answer the following questions and see if you are really doing your jobs as journalists.

1. Are you really reporting the facts at Villanova University?
2. Are your readers well-informed about the happenings and events which affect their lives?

Sincerely,
Robert S. Herman
General Manager, WKVU

Work for Peace and Justice

In last week's Villanovan, the Villanova Social Action Committee raised an interesting issue: the discrepencies between the goals of the Villanova Mission Statement and actual campus life. The Mission Statement reads in part: "Villanova commits itself to develop an environment in which students, faculty, and staff may experience a Christian intellectual and moral perspective."

If we are interested in the "how" of this mission statement, maybe we can turn to the opening statement of the*Blue Book*, as put forth by the office of vice-president for student life. It reads: "In choosing Villanova you will be joining an academic community dedicated to the pursuit of truth through peace and justice . . . In order for peace and justice to prevail and truth to be pursued, every member of the University Community must know what is expected of them so they may be responsible and accountable. . ."

So what's the problem? It could very well be that we in the Villanova community (including myself, the student body and student leaders, administration, faculty and staff) are not as conscious of our responsibilities to each other and others as we should be.

What is meant by this? What is meant is that every action we do or word we say has an effect, either good or bad, on others. Thus, we are not only responsible but accountable for what happened in the village of San Francisco in Guatemala on July 17, 1962. That day, over 300 men, women and children were killed. According to published reports, the men were taken to a wooden building and in groups of eight, were taken out and shot by Guatemalan soldiers.

"We saw one little boy of about seven crying as a soldier pulled him along by the wrist and then ripped open his stomach with a knife," said Mateo Ramos, one of only two survivors of the massacre in the tiny Indian village. Ramos was saved when he was trapped under the corpses of ten men who had been killed by grenades.

How are we as a Villanova community reponsible and accountable? Maybe because some of your money and my money went to pay for the grenades, guns and bullets used on these people. Maybe because some of our money also went to pay for the U.S.-built helicopter which transported the soldiers to San Francisco in the first place.

And so this is how we work for peace and justice? By default we have let others, in our name, do what ever they please. We have thus far been either too isolated and removed to care or we have been morally irresponsible to the point of being burnt out and isolated from what is good, loving and peaceful. I have experienced both, but just the same, we must persevere, and as people desiring what is good, demand an accounting from those institutions which act in our name and with our money. This includes multinational corporations.

In Latin America, for instance, between 1950 and 1965, U.S. investments totaled $3.8 billion. Benefits transferred back to the United States in that period totaled $11.3 billion. We as a nation took out more than three times what we put in.

Maybe in the future we as a community should not only look "inside" ourselves, but also look beyond ourselves; "outside" our safe environment, and feel for and therefore be with (in at least a spiritual way) our brothers and sisters in Africa, Latin America, the Caribbean, our city slums or even our Villanova campus. Believe it or not, there are some on this campus (maybe even most of us) who are "poorer" than the people of Latin America. I was in a poor Spanish neighborhood last fall, and in the hills of Appalachia last spring, and I know from being with these people that they're better off than most of us are. You see, in many ways they don't have to work for peace — for they were born instruments of it.

And so let us, as a community, work for peace and justice in our homes, our dorms, our organizations, our nation, our world and in our own individual lives. We'll have to dig deep within ourselves, going beyond the divisions we find within us and between us and finding the areas in which we can strengthen our convictions, but it will all be worth it.

Special Olympics

To the Editor:

It never fails. Just when you're sure that the Villanova undergraduates are a bunch of hopeless, preppy boozers; when past administrators reveal their true identity as crude, immoral, beastial jocks and when we can all wring our collective hands at their pubescent peccadilloes, those sneaky nerds go out and prove their real value. Mr. Editor, we must put a stop to these Special Olympics weekends. An incredible number of marvelous young women and men gave unselfishly of their time and energy to bring joy to handicapped children. We could easily deny that Villanovans are warm and loving young men and women except for the nagging fact that they are. Over 400 participants, my dear editor, and they got nothing out of it except the joy of giving joy to those less fortunate than themselves.

It's enough to ruin the weekend of those old grumbling negativists whose only joy is to indulge in mental self-flagellation over our students. If our students are as gracious and loving Christians as I suspect they are, we might have a special weekend for those who continue to look through their glass darkly. I wonder how many would sign up to hug a nerd?

Congratulations Villanovans, you've done it again!

'Hypocrisy'

To the Editor:

I appreciate the recent publication of Father Deegan's letter in support of Father Driscoll's decision to discontinue the football program. The letter served only as a reminder that hypocrisy and narrow-mindedness exist at Villanova.

I could go on and recall the day the program was dropped, the ensuing rally in the Field House, or even the "drafting" of Villanova's finest players by some of the bigger colleges in the country. The bottom line, however, is money. On numerous occasions, I have ignored the alumni fund's request for my donations, because I remember that day in April 1981 very well. Instead, I have been contributing to the Committee to Restore Football at Villanova.

Since I graduated in May 1981 the question has been to support the football fund or the alumni fund. Thanks to opinions such as Father Deegan's, I've had very little trouble arriving at a decision.

Gerardo D. Ventresca Jr.

Chagrined

Dear Father Deegan:

This is both a difficult and an easy letter to write.

We are sons of Villanova with a deep, abiding loyalty to the Augustinian Fathers and Villanova University. For some of us, Villanova and the Augustinians gave us an opportunity for an education or career development. More important, they instilled in us a philosophy of life that has taken us on varied paths, but always with loyalty to God, country and Villanova.

But when we read your letter to Father John Driscoll, O.S.A., published in the Villanovan (Oct. 1), we were both shocked and chagrined.

Your comments about the "football mentality" and the so-called "theft ring" cast a cloud on the thousands of men who have played or coached football at Villanova. It especially touches the young men who were members of the varsity football squad during your tenure.

We would like a full explanation of the "theft ring," because to some of us who were closely associated with the football program, this is our first knowledge of it. It is ironic that a recent Villanovan carried a front page banner on a theft ring in St. Mary's Hall. Villanova dropped varsity football two years ago and most of the players transferred.

Father, Villanova's long history of intercollegiate football is replete with the names of men who distinguished themselves in such varied fields as the priesthood (including Augustinians), medicine, law, business, education, military and government service. Many had outstanding military careers in several wars and in peacetime service. Some lost their lives in combat.

Father, your knowledge of Villanova football and what it did for a once small suburban Philadelphia college with several hundred male students needs refreshing. Some sagacious Augustinians — taking a cue from the Holy Cross Fathers at Notre Dame — realized the importance of spreading Villanova's name. They hired Harry Stuhldreher.

When he moved on to Wisconsin, Clipper Smith was hired and Villanova's intersectional schedule expanded. There were games in Los Angeles, Alabama (Auburn), South Carolina, Texas, New England, Detroit, Pittsburgh. Villanova became a household word long before other Wildcat teams achieved national and international reputations in other sports.

In the years after World War II, Villanova teams continued to play intersectional schedules. This gradually changed as the intercollegiate football scene changed. Yet throughout all this time, Villanova teams earned high praise for their deportment from hotel, airline, travel and rail officials. The record of varsity players on campus over the years was equally impressive.

We fully realize that the Villanova of today is not the Villanova of our undergraduate days. Times and the economy have changed. We fully agree that the "meat market" that happened when Villanova dropped football was a shocking indictment of what some schools will do to achieve athletic success.

It should be noted that many members of squad when the sport was dropped have transferred to excellent schools and are doing well both academically and athletically. Several of them have transferred to Lafayette College; another has better than a 3.5 average in biology, plans a dental career and is a starter for Penn State; still another tranferred to Boston College, came back to graduation to receive his Villanova degree, and is pursuing an MBA while playing his last season of college eligibility.

Father, we think football can be a valuable part of any intercollegiate athletic program, if handled properly. Dr. George D. Langdon, Jr., president of Colgate University told the New York Times (Oct. 9) that the university's successful football and hockey teams benefit Colgate "because it gives us increased visibility."

The 1981 Yale University football team had 96 National Honor Society members and Yale's recent university alumni drive was its most successful in history, raising over $16 million. Academics and athletics can blend easily if directed wisely.

Father, people who play college football are not Neanderthal men who roam campuses inflicting harm and scaring people. They are men who know the value of sacrifice, discipline and teamwork. The lessons learned on the football field can't be learned in any classroom.

Serious Concerns

To the Editor:

The Oct. 1 and Oct. 8 issues of the Villanovan printed letters which raise serious concerns for those who have a sincere interest in the future and reputation of our University.

Both letters addressed the decision to drop the Villanova football program. One, from Father Deegan, applauded the decision in terms so intemperate and so incompatible with the traditions of a Catholic institution that I find it difficult to believe it was authored by an Augustinian. The other, from Tom Lebrecque, a trustee with outstanding management credentials, correctly deplores the University's decision making process. Tom's letter also conclusively establishes that the initial decision to terminate 87 years of football was not the decision of the Board of Trustees.

Taken together, the correspondence suggests that the football decision was the result of the plans of a few individuals motivated by an intense dislike for athletes. It is obvious now that the purported justification for the decision has no basis in fact and that the process by which it was reached has no place at Villanova.

I feel a strong discomfort saying these things about an institution that has meant so much to me. Nevertheless, it needs saying that our University no longer can accept the kind of leadership offered by the present administration. It offends the entire Villanova community to assert that the football decision was reached on the basis of a reasoned analysis of the University's needs and resources. I am embarrassed, as I think Mr. Lebrecque must be, and it is my hope that disclosure of the facts will lead to a change in University management procedures. A more intelligent management philosophy must be applied to the governance of this institution. If this means new managers, than it is hoped the present administration will see this fact.

The Deegan letter stands alone as an example of intemperance. I cannot comprehend how an Augustinian, or anyone, could make such a blanket indictment of young men who chose Father Deegan's Villanova for their education.

The correctness of the decision to eliminate football is an issue about which reasonable men and women may differ. Many, probably most, of the Villanovans with whom I have had contact, feel the decision was wrong. One need only read the Villanovan to appreciate that the student body deeply misses the traditional Saturday afternoon activity. Indeed, the trustees' only exhaustive study of football concluded in 1979 that the program, so much a part of Villanova, should be retained. The conclusion of this study, discussed in Mr. Lebrecque's letter, stood uncontradicted when, without notice to those so knowledgeable about the subject, the administration executed its plan with unseemly haste. Certainly the fundamental issue is the way 87 years of tradition were eliminated by a small group that offers justifications that no one any longer believes.

The results of the procedure are disheartening. In addition to adverse publicity, the Villanova community is seriously divided. Earlier this year, following a special meeting of alumni representatives from across the country, Father Driscoll was asked to resign. This request was based on our understanding of the way the football decision was reached, an understanding confirmed by the publication of Mr. Lebrecque's letter.

The decision to ask Father Driscoll to resign was not an easy one. The alumni action was not motivated by any personal animosity. It was prompted by a sincere interest in helping Villanova. Alumni, busy with their personal lives, can always walk away from these problems. That they have not, is a guarantee of sincerity and, I am sure, perseverance. What the alumni seek is an administration and management philosophy which will restore our unity and thereby allow Villanova to realize its great potential.

It may be that the current controversy will bring some good as the University community takes a long and critical look at its management process. On the other hand, I feel certain that, unless we all wake up and begin to work together, Villanova may have lost more than 87 years of football.

Hello everybody, it's me, Roseanne Rosannadanna, here to give you all a few tips for your upcoming Homecoming Weekend. A Mr. Richard Fader from your university has written to me and asked, "What's all this I hear about Homecoming being a Carnival anyway? With ferris wheels and carousels? And what's there gonna be to eat? Well, let me tell you, Mr. Richard Fader, what I, Rosenne Rosannadanna, think about this whole thing. Well, I remember when I was just an itsy bitsy Roseanne and I would go to carnivals and eat all that carnival food, you know like peanuts, and on top of that, cotton candy, and on top of that, sno-cones... but not them blue raspberry kinds, you know, the ones that kinda make your moth look like post-mortem? Anyway, then I would spin around on those Tilt-a-Whirls and carousels and quite frankly, I, Rosenne Rosannadanna, would lose that carnival food all over the carnival! So, let me warn you that on your Homecoming, with all those people eating and drinking and spinning on your ferris wheels, well, Villanova's just liable to smell like New Jersey! So let me leave you with something my dear old daddy used to say to me, "Oh my little Roseanne Rosannadanna, Say your prayers before you sleep, be nice to all your little friends, and most of all, eat all your vegetables, but not before you spin on a Homecoming Weekend ferris wheel" Good night, my little Rosenne Rosannadanna's.

Rock 'n' Roll in RETROSPECT

By SUE FRENCH

"Just let me hear some of that rock'n'roll music,
Any old way you choose it,
It's got a backbeat you can't lose it,
Any old time you use it,
It's gotta be rock'n'roll music, if you want to dance with me." — Chuck Berry

"Rock'n'roll the way it's supposed to be" is the self-envisioned style of the four Villanova students who, by the weekend, become the band Retrospect.

Specializing in classic rock'n'roll, Retrospect shuns what lead singer Mark Gatti describes as the "emotionless 'corporate rock' of today." "We're trying to capture the theme on which the variations of today are made — this is where it started and we can't ever lose sight of it," stressed bass guitarist Bill Clark.

Gatti made his Villanova stage debut during orientation, when he volunteered to sing a few Elvis Presley and Chuck Berry tunes as his group's representative in the talent show. Later that year, while Gatti was playing his electric guitar in a hallway, Retrospect keyboardist Dave Guro, came by and asked him to play some blues. Soon Guro was playing piano to Gatti's guitar. "Another week," laughs Guro, "Frank (drummer Frank Calatozzo), heard us playing in St. Mary's auditorium and asked if he could slide his drums in."

"Mark went to high school with Bill Clark," said Guro, "so when we needed a bass guitarist, he said we'll just get Bill Clark." Clark was an accomplished acoustic guitarist at the time, but, as he puts it, "picked up bass when the group started playing and said 'Well, it only has four strings and I have four fingers, so there can't be that many combinations'."

At 68 songs and counting, Guro said Retrospect tries to add about five songs a week to their repertoire. Soon to be included are some Stray Cats songs, he added. "In the works," Gatti explained, are four or five Retrospect originals. Within weeks, the band is expecting copyright approval on their first original, "So Close." Clark reflected on the band's future, "the main thing we want is our own songs along classic lines."

Gatti, Guro and Clark praised Calatozzo's drumming, a very "clean" style as they described it. Calatozzo was taught to play on shoeboxes in a shoe store by Buddy Lewis, studio drummer for Dion and the Belmonts, a fifties group which made the single "Runaround Sue" famous.

"We each have somewhat different musical tastes," Calatozzo commented. "I also like a lot of contemporary music, even if it's not the best musical stuff, I listen to it if it's just catchy. I'm the one who will present a new contemporary song to the group to see if we can do it." Calatozzo mentioned that Retrospect is somewhat limited because they lack synthesizers and other studio equipment used in contemporary songs.

On stage, Retrospect dresses with early-Beatle-like uniformness, in black trousers with white shirts and neckties; Gati also wears a gray brimmed hat. "The reason we dress up is to get "back-to-basics," jeans and t-shirts aren't a class act. It's the performer's obligation to get dressed up," stated Gatti.

Over Christmas vacation Retrospect said it plans to record a demo tape of their originals and own versions of oldies. While on vacation in California over spring break, Gatti said he plans to visit Los Angeles to try to introduce Retrospect to record companies.

"We definitely enjoy what we play . . . we couldn't play a kind of music we didn't enjoy," emphasized Clark, "If people see us enjoying ourselves, they'll enjoy themselves." Clark especially remembers their goal of two years ago, the "Big Event." "There was a sound there we liked — and all of a sudden it was good and the crowd went berzerk . . . we only knew four songs and they were yelling for more."

Retrospect's goal for the next "Big Event" was to learn four more songs, and, said Gatti, was highlighted for him by his treks into the crowd with a cordless electric guitar.

In those days, Retrospect practiced from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. every Saturday. During orientation this year they practiced 35 hours in five days, every night from 10 p.m. on, with Gatti singing every song. "We even splept in the Field House one night so we didn't have to put the equipment away," Guro remarked.

Presently, Retrospect is practicing four to five hours a week. Tommorrow night they are booked to play at the St. Mary's, second floor and West Area Girl's Party, Oct. 29 at the Fedigan Halloween Party, Nov. 5 at the Stanford 4B party and Nov. 19 at an Alumni Hall party.

Alums Get Awards

By RICH FLINCHBAUGH

Villanova has many alumni of whom, for their achievements in society, it may be proud. It is for this reason that the College of Arts and Sciences has recently begun honoring these individuals with the Alumni Medallion, a special award given as a symbol of excellence based on academic achievements. This is the third year in which the medallion will be presented. The ceremony will take place at the Third Annual Alumni Medallion Dinner Dance tonight, the beginning of Homecoming weekend. This year five men will receive the award.

One of the men who have earned the award is the Rev. Robert J. Welsh, O.S.A. Welsh studied at Villanova and received his bachelor of arts degree in 1943. He was ordained to the priesthood in February 1947. After receiving his doctorate in sacred theology at Gregorian University in Rome, he returned to Villanova in 1956 to teach for nine years in the theology dept. During this time he became dean of the College of Arts & Sciences until 1967, when he became president of Villanova University for three years. Later he acted as a provincial director of education. Currently, Welsh works in the guidance office of Malvern Preparatory School, and is living here on campus.

Another recipient is Frank A. Gunther, Jr., president of Albert Gunther, Inc. in Baltimore. After earning his bachelor's degree in history from Villanova in 1955, Gunther took an active role in society by gaining responsible positions in over 20 beneficial clubs and associations, and serving on the boards of organizations, such as the Salvation Army and the United Way. Currently he is board chairman of the National Aquarium in Baltimore. Also, he is vice chairman for the board of trustees of the John F. Kennedy Institute for Handicapped Children. In addition to being given the Villanova Outstanding Alumnus Award in 1968 and 1980, he has been presented various religious and humanitarian awards, both independently and jointly with his wife, Mary Ellen, the most recent being the National Jewish Hospital Humanitarian Award.

Also to be awarded the medallion is Robert L. Moss, professor of physiology and neurology at the University of Texas. Dr. Moss graduated from Villanova with a bachelor's degree in social studies in 1962. Later he earned his masters in psychology and Ph.D. in neurophysiology, both with honors, from the Claremont Graduate School and University Center in California. In 1969, the American Psychological Association honored him with the Young Scientist Award while he was earning his NIH Postdoctoral Fellowship at the University of Bristol Medical School, England. In addition to being on the review board and working on over 60 articles for various medical journals, Moss has either authored or coauthored 25 books and many abstracts on specific topics of physiology and neurology. He has also given over 50 lectures in North America, Europe and Australia. For his outstanding teaching in the medical neuroscience and endocrinology, and human re-

'Chuck Helm' is On the Air

By BOB HERMAN

Secretly, many people have always had a desire to do something other than what they are doing, yet seldom have they gotten that opportunity.

Dr. Charles H. Helmetag, chairman of the modern languages department has the desire to be a radio station disc jockey for the past five or six years.

Last spring, Helmetag decided to join WKVU, the University campus radio station. He discovered WKVU through his son Steve, who is presently the program director at the station.

Helmtag began doing a one-hour disc jockey show each week. Last year, he played the same type of music that any regular disc jockey at WKVU played. When asked why he played that type of music he said, "I played the playlist last year because it was a good indoctrination to the station. I was able to see what the format was like."

Dr. Charles Helmetag

This semester Helmetag, who calls himself "Chuck Helm" on the air, has chosen to do a movie theme show featuring the music from movie musicals. Helmetag indicated that he hopes to feature music from such musicals as "An American in Paris.", "The Music Man," "Words and Music" and "Three Little Words." Helmetag said that his interest in movie musicals began the first year that the Academy Awards were on the radio.

Helmetag feels that he has been positively received at WKVU by the students. He said, "Although there are many students at the radio station that I don't know, those that I do know have treated me with a great deal of respect.

Liehm Introduces Wajda

By ALICE FISHER

Antonin Liehm, professor of film and literature at the University of Pennsylvania and co-author of "The Most Important Art — Eastern European Film After 1945," will introduce two films by the reknowned Polish director, Andrzej Wajda, "Man of Marble," Oct. 24, 7 p.m., and "Man of Iron," Oct. 31, 7 p.m., for the Villanova Cultural Film Series at the Connelly Center.

Liehm feels that there are some major differences between the American and Polish film industries. One is that the Poles consider film as an art as well as entertainment, while Americans care mostly about the entertainment film can provide. "Art, in general, is ambiguous. The best Eastern European films don't make clearly defined statements. They lead you into a maze of problems and eventually end with an ironic perspective. So they leave you without answers to the questions asked. Some American audiences don't like these films because they come out of the theatre and they don't know what they should think — which is the purpose."

Liehm also feels that because the film industry in Poland is state-owned, there is a constant conflict between treating film as a tool for propaganda and entertainment or treating film as an art form and as a free assessment of the destiny of the individual and society. Whenever the state is weak and undecided the art form is good and strong, but when the state is in control, propaganda prevails.

Liehm explains that Wajda's two "Man" films are each politically important in their own way. "Man of Marble," made in a relatively liberal period (1977) is a metaphoric, poetic and ironic statement about the last 25 years of Polish history and ideology. Wajda's attempt to avoid state censorship is responsible for "the things which are not said" and for the metaphoric, allusive language in the film. In contrast, "Man of Iron," made in a completely free period (1981), is a direct, political journalistic statement on the present. "Wajda, I believe, is preoccupied with Poland, what is Poland, and what it is to be Polish. But in his best films, while answering as honestly as he can this question for himself and for the people around him, he eventually is asking, 'What is it to be a man?' and 'What is it to be a human being in the 20th Century?' And then, of course, his films become messages that reach far beyond Poland," said Leihm.

Liehm is bothered by the fact that there is a very low distribution of artistic films in this country. He hopes that new home technology will provide Americans with a film library so that one can enjoy both entertainment and artistic films. "I wonder who will be the first to start the Film-of-the-Month Club. If you just have one million people in this country who will subscribe to five difficult films on a yearly basis in advance, then the subscriptions will further the production of these films. So I believe we are into something here that is new and there will be room for film as art," commented Leihm.

There will be a panel discussion following the films with guest speakers: Jeffrey Hahn, associate professor of political science at Villanova; Kostas Myrsiades, professor of comparative literature and film at West Chester State College; Mira Liehm, co-director of the International Film Festival in Mannheim, West Germany; and Miron Wolnicki, visiting professor in the Villanova political science department.

PERSPECTIVES

Fun House vs. Royalty

By P. BARBARA HAENN

When I was a little girl, I had an uncle Herb who would whisper a marvelous secret to me. A freckle on my little finger indicated to him (he was, in fact, certain) that I was descended from royal blood, and so it seemed that I was a princess. My name, known only by him, was Princess Beezer.

Somehow the awareness of many "hand-me-down" clothes from five older sisters, and the rough-and-tumble treatment of being one of eight children was only a masquerade covering the reality of my unique existence! My sisters and brothers were living with royalty, right under their very own roof. Couldn't they feel that? Herb was an important mirror in my life, sending back to me the reflection that I was more than "OK." He showed me that I was likable and valuable as a human being. Through him, I knew I was lovable.

Most of us have been to a circus or a fun house where we have seen ourselves miraculously transformed into fat or thin persons just by a trick of a mirror. We know that this is not really us because we have so many accurate mirrors with which to compare ouselves. But what if the only mirror to which you had access revealed that you were 100 lbs. heavier than you are? How long would it take for you to begin believing that you were in reality that person you saw in the mirror? Your self-image would be drastically affected and inaccurate.

People act as mirrors for each other, too. Sometimes an "Uncle Herb" comes along and shows you wonderful things about yourself. You would know from him that you were good, likable and valuable.

There, may also be significant people in our lives who turn out to be like the mirrors of the fun house. When we see our reflections in them, we get back distorted images of how lacking we appear to be, how disappointing we are to others, how "you really could be better if . . ." For the young child growing up, the messages can be overwhelming and devastating because he can come to the conclusion that he is more deficient than worthwhile. How ironic! It's not the reflection that is is deficient, but rather the mirror.

Perhaps as college students, we've picked up messages that to be a truly valuable person, we must have a 3.5 cum . . . or find a job with the Big Eight . . . or be accepted by a medical school. The messages from these images are very challenging and often disturbing. Where is the truth in all of this?

The four years of college can provide us with the time and space to look carefully at ourselves, and to determine what is really valuable for us. Look carefully, also, at your mirrors, not just your reflections, because they may be determining more about your own self-image than you realize . . . handicapping you unnecessarily. Are they accurate? Do they reflect the truth of you? Are they sending back, perhaps, out of their own needs, distorted reflections of who they think you should be? Ask yourself, "What kind of messages about myself am I getting from this person?," and "Are the messages true?"

I am convinced that we are all of "royal blood" — and it's only the accurate mirrors that can show to us that part of our existences. Let's not sell ourselves short by settling for a Fun House mirror.

Homecoming Broadcast

By BOB HERMAN

Synonymous with Homecoming day was Villanova football. But, for the second straight year the Villanova campus has no football to cheer for on Homecoming day, so the students at WKVU will broadcast their own rendition of Villanova football with "The Greatest Homecoming Game Never Played."

Senior sports member Joe Silvestri proposed the idea to present a mock football game on the radio.

Silvestri sought the help of Villanova's Sports Information Director Craig Miller, who helped get statistics on many of the University's finest all-time players. Once the statistics were gathered, they were compiled by the WKVU sports department. The game features the all-time greats at Villanova including quarterback Bill Hatty; running-back Vince Thompson; wide receivers Mike Siani and Willie Sydnor; and linebackers Anthony Grigga and John Babinecz. The Wildcats will be facing an all-time great Notre Dame squad.

When asked why WKVU is doing a game of this nature, Program Diector Steven Helmetag said, "There has obviously been a tremendous void on Saturday afternoons for most Villanova students due to a lack of football on campus. When Joe approached me with the idea of a mock football game I was highly in favor of it and production work started immediately. We hope this idea will be successful and the game will become an annual affair, at least until football is reinstated."

Villanova students on-campus can tune in the mock football game tomorrow beginning at noon on 640 WKVU. He said, "At least if the students can't have football every weekend during the fall, they can have it in some form one Saturday each year."

Picking Apart Particular Pizzas

By CHRISTOPHER JOHNSON

Being a college student, one cannot often afford to dine on fine cuisine such as caviar, filet mignon or veal cordon bleu. But one can afford the next best thing: pizza! Here is an extremely critical and biased look at some of the local pizza places.

Campus Corner
829 Lancaster Ave.

Campus Corner provides a Neopolitan-style pizza at a moderate cost ($4). They claim their pizza to be the "ultimate in gourmet junk food." It consistently fails to have enough sauce under all the cheese.

The delivery service is quite erratic. Sometimes the pizza comes on time and is piping hot, but other times the service is so slow they cannot even deliver it hot to Moriarity, only 50 yards up the street. The best thing to be said about Campus Corner is that it offers a student discount, which makes their pizza relatively inexpensive. Also, its location is convenient for those late-night munchies. **

Conestoga Style Pizza
905 Conestoga Road

Conestoga Style Pizza bills their variety as a "fresh, crisp, dough pizza." Hey, as opposed to what, a stale, soggy, melba toast pizza? Be serious. The pizza is very similar to the frozen, French bread pizza. But even these cheap facsimiles are not topped with cheese that tastes like Cheez Whiz, as is Conestoga's. Adding insult to injury, the cheese is often burnt beyond recognition. Perhaps this is done purposely to hide its identity.

The Pizza Palace in Sullivan Hall doesn't meet the grade. Charlie Guida Photo

For those stupid enough to have it delivered, one can rest assured that it will be on time. Maybe that is because you may be their first customer of the week, and it is Saturday. Additionally, they feel the need to give away their pizza, giving one free with every five ordered. This is fine for someone having a big party, but then again, who wants to eat all that bad pizza? At any rate, Conestoga pizza can be purchased for $3.95. *

Rosemont Take-Out Foods
852 Conestoga Road

No games, no gimmicks, no slogans. Rosemont Take-Out Foods just has wickedly good pizza. They make the best Neopolitan-style pizza in the area. The crust, the cheese and the sauce are all of high quality. And those luscious ladies who make these incredible pizzas sprinkle in a little tender loving care. Maybe that's the secret.

Rosemont's pizza is considerably larger than most of the others. And although it costs $4.95, it is well worth it. The delivery service is a little slow, but the pizza is always delivered hot by an incredibly pleasant man, Kaz. Undoubtedly, the service is slow simply due to volume. As one person said, "It's the best pizza I've had outside of New York City." *½

Garrett Hill Pizza
910 Conestoga Road

Garrett Hill offers a very good Sicilian-style pizza, but it is also very expensive. Who cares how good the pizza is, $7 is just too much for pizza. We are talking low budget. Besides, unless one is into bulemia, the pizza is way too filling for one, two or even three people to finish.

The delivery service is excellent, but for that price, the pizza should arrive on a silver platter. Nonetheless, Garrett Hill offers a different type of pizza which is very tasty. ***

Vid-Dits
Stanford Hall

First we thought we were going into a wholesale pet food store, with a name like Vid-Dits. All that is to be said about this place is that most people do not know it is there, and those who have eaten there wish they hadn't.

The pizza is served on a crust that resembles either a Saltine cracker or a piece of cardboard. The sauce is, at best, rumored. This pizza is not eating, it is for avoiding. ½ (just for existing)

Pizza Palace
Sullivan Hall

Pizza Palace's pizza is a combination of Neopolitan style and Philadelphia-create-its-own style. It is in dire need of help. The cheese is too thick and there is not enough sauce. The crust is bland, thin and tasteless. Although it is conveniently located on campus, who the hell wants to hang out in Sullivan's basement? Better times are to be had in the astronomy lab. *

Kaz Marek delivering the best pizza around (Rosemont Take-Out Foods). Charlie Guida Photo

It's hoped this review has provided great insight and assistance in one's pizza selection. Remember, the best consumer is an educated consumer. Regretfully, the review could not have exhausted all possibilities.

A Man For All Seasons

By JIM DENNY

This year, David Warner, a new faculty member of the Villanova theater department, is trying his hand for the first time at directing plays. He is directing "Our Town," which is playing at Vasey Theatre this weekend, and as far as he is concerned, it "looks like it's working well."

Warner has been interested in theater since his teen-age years. He grew up and went to high school in Cape Cod, Mass., where he was involved in several plays. From there he went on to Harvard University, appearing in several plays and graduating in 1974 with a degree in English.

After graduating, he started teaching, first in Connecticut and then at the Shipley School in Bryn Mawr, Pa. He spent five years teaching second grade at Shipley, but he then wanted a change.

Starting in the summer of 1977, Warner had been involved with the Summer Shakespeare Program at Villanova. In 1980 he became a graduate assistant at the University and this year became a full-time member of the staff. From his previous working experience with the theater department, he "knew he'd like the people." He asserts that Vasey is "establishing a pretty good reputation as a theater" and freely admits he's "proud to be a part of it."

His biggest problem so far has come from "wearing too many hats," a problem that is somewhat common among those making a living in theater. During August and September, he was performing with a local theater group while starting up his teaching, directing and public relations work at Villanova.

He says he especially enjoys teaching acting classes. He finds them to be a "much more cooperative effort" than some of the classes offered at Villanova. This co-operation between the students and the teacher causes a different, more gratifying kind of working relationship than one usually finds in academic situations.

In general, the theater department concentrates on serious pieces of "dramatic literature" that Warner believes are "good for the students to see and be involved in and for selling tickets." The final decision as to what plays will be produced rests with Department Chairman Dr. James Christy. He and the directors discuss what plays the directors would like to show and also what people are available to play the parts. They then try to achieve a suitable theatrical balance for the season.

Warner points out that the department has been lucky this year in "getting a number of dependable, hard-working freshmen," whom he adds are "all real good." There are also a number of older people from the community involved in Vasey Theater. In fact Warner states that "sometimes we're better known in the community than here at Villanova."

He finds his job to be a rewarding experience. Theater for him is "very exciting when it's working." He strives to get the audience involved in the play because "if you can get an audience into it," he says with a gleam in his eye, "that's the topper." He would like to see more student involvement in Vasey Theatre and stresses that the staff is "always happy to have people try out even if they're not taking a theater course."

'Tempest': a Wild Goose Chase

By RON GAHAGAN

"Tempest," starring John Cassavetes, has all the ingredients to be a unique and interesting movie. But unfortunately the potential of this film is never realized, and one is disappointed at the film's conclusion.

Producer-director Paul Mazursky took a relatively simple plot and twisted it into a strange and often confusing movie. Countless flashbacks and flashforwards are used often and ultimately leave one searching for the pieces to this puzzle. In fact, after awhile one is so frustrated that one feels detached from the film.

The plot centers around an affluent and successful architect who faces a mid-life crisis. He feels disenchanted, unable to live with both himself and those around him. He also believes that virtue is non-existent in a world inhabited by selfish people.

The architect (Cassavetes), is so disturbed by this crisis that it becomes a cancer that eats away at his family. As a result, the architect and his wife get divorced, with the wife winding up on the arm of her ex-husband's powerful and unscrupulous boss.

Ironically, the architect has destroyed what he had once successfully built — his marriage. Now he must build a new relationship and start again.

Seeking a new start, the architect quits his job and heads for Greece with his daughter, convincingly played by Molly Ringwald. Together they meet up with an interesting woman who shares the architect's feelings. Susan Sarandon gives a fine performance.

The three inhabit a beautiful deserted Greek island. This island is the world the architect had been seeking. His search has finally ended. His feelings are not shared by his daughter and girlfriend though. Yet they comply with his wishes to stay and live in this "utopia."

Director Mazursky uses the island as a symbol of what society can or should be like. But one never understands what message, if any, Mazursky is trying to convey. Does society overwhelm everyone of us? Will the architect ever truly be happy in this new found "utopia," or for that matter, any other? One is never told. The flashbacks could have been used in appropriate situations to clear up such questions. Instead what we get is a film that is often muddled and pretentious.

"Tempest" runs on for almost three hours. This is much too long for what becomes a visual wild goose chase. The acting overall is admirable, but it cannot sustain the film. It has been said that "good things come to those who wait." The same cannot be said for those viewing "Tempest."

"Beatlemania," the Broadway show that correlates the evolution of the Beatles music with the cultural and historical events of the '60s, will be performed at the Villanova Field House at 8 p.m. on Oct. 30. The cast of "Beatlemania," four accomplished musicians from New Jersey, perform 30 of the Beatles most popular songs. The show, a multi-media program, utilizes nine slide machines and a 16mm picture projector.

Men Work Only Half the Time

By BILL SANTOS

"Business as Usual" is the first album from the group, Men at Work. Although it was released in Australia last year, it only appeared in this country a few months ago. Even though the album contains many different styles of music (soft rock, jazz, reggae and new wave), the two sides of the record are not unified. All the songs on side one are well established; harmonious chord changes and biting lyrics give the side strength. Side two is nothing more than experimental jazz that does not succeed.

Men at Work is one of those groups that has one well-known song heard throughout the radio stations, "Who Can It Be Now?" But there are other songs that should not be overlooked. "Down Under" has a reggae beat highlighted by Greg Ham's flute. Intricate guitars offset the beat, which adds to the general rhythm of the song. "Underground" has a faster tempo with a short sax solo that takes the place of a guitar usually used by other groups. Its abrupt ending leaves one hanging. "Helpless Automaton" is a more new wave styled song. It is fast and sounds like any other new wave song. "I Can See It In Your Eyes" is a harmonic song with a guitar solo for a change. It is a song about reminiscing, thinking about the old college days and lost loves. These songs compile the first side of the album. The second side with its annoying vocals and irritating tones leaves much to be desired. The continuous repetition of "be good" on "Be Good Johnny" is innocuous.

The album should have been released as an EP comprised of the first five, possibly six, songs. The rest of the album used to take up space and besides, by the second side, one gets tired of hearing Colin Hay's piercing voice. Repetition and dissonance, not to mention the nerve-wracking vocals, destroy side two.

Men at Work is not an original group, but is molded from other groups. They sound, or at least try to sound, like the Police and employ Quarterflash's intermittent use of the saxophone.

"Business as Usual" is a fair album and can be recommended. However, do not expect too much from the second side. The album is not unified, but rather is a collection of singles, with five of the ten songs being worthless. "Business as Usual" only works half the time, so why pay full price for a mediocre album? Save some money and buy the single, "Who Can It Be Now?" The rest sounds all the same.

Movie Review:

A Bad Gamble

By MIKE NOONE

Two amateur con men, bound by their enduring friendship, dig themselves into a hole and then try to climb their way out by outsmarting the system. Sound familiar? Just like "Atlantic City," "Looking to Get Out" deals with likeable characters who find themselves outside the law, pitted against a virtually unbeatable system. Yet, "Looking to Get Out" never takes a clear direction and fails to materialize into an exciting movie.

Alex, played by Jon Voight, is the "brains" of the duo. He is a stocky, stereotyped New Yorker, a bamboozer who has a great passion for gambling. However, it keeps him in constant debt. Jerry, portrayed by Burt Young, is an emotionally immature schmoe, lacking some of his faculties. Yet, he is firmly dedicated to Alex. The two can be compared to Steinbeck's George and Lenny (Of Mice and Men), but neither Alex or Jerry are such extremes. The two live one day at a time, laughing their way through life.

Their trouble starts when Alex gets them heavily into debt and they are forced to flee New York City. Driven by his love of gambling, Alex, along with Jerry, heads for Las Vegas where they test their luck once again. While there, they team up with Patti Warner (Ann-Margret), a reformed call girl, and an old blackjack master, Smitty (Bert Rensen).

The action in "Looking to Get Out" is jumbled and rambles on with no apparent direction. Director Hal Ashby loses all control of the movie. The screenplay contains potential; yet its excitement is never manifested. The acting abilities of Voight, Ann-Margret and others go untapped. The film is simply too haphazard and cannot visualize its potential.

Although the ending of "Looking to Get Out" ties up many loose ends, the movie never conveys a feeling of completeness. Nor does it seem to contain any profound statement. Alex, Jerry, Patti, and Smitty may be very likeable characters, just as Lou and Sally are in "Atlantic City," but the film makes one lose any interest one may have. The movie is, at times, entertaining, but one may be looking to get out, or one may wonder why one even came in to begin with.

Cats Are Big Five Champs

"Irish Trio" Tie to Win

En route to a 1-2-3 sweep: Marcus O'Sullivan, Brian O'Keeffe and Tony O'Reilly, the "Irish Trio," assault the Belmont Plateau race course in Villanova's first place finish in the Big Five Championships.
Chris Sigg Photo

By PAUL MACCHIA

The Villanova cross country team won the Big Five Cross Country Championship last Saturday at Belmont Plateau. The Wildcats scored 24 points to regain the title from St. Joseph's (45 points) who took the title last year. Pennsylvania (91 points), La Salle (96 points), and Temple (122 points) were the other teams competing.

The "Irish Trio" of Marcus Sullivan, Brian O'Keeffe and Anthony O'Reilly made a dramatic finish as all three crossed the finish line together in a time of 25:51.7. The nearest runner to them was 23 seconds behind.

O'Keeffe said the race was to be a tactical one, and the plan was to tire out St. Joseph's during the middle of the race. The "Irish Trio" worked together from the one-and-a-half mile mark, with each of them setting the pace while the others followed.

The Wildcat's win was enforced with strong performances from: Dermot Anderson, 7th (26:26.0); Ken Lucks, 14th (26:46.9); J.J. Clark, 15th (26:48.4); John Keyworth, 16th (26:51.3); Mike Deignan, 26th (27:22.5); Terry Delaney, 29th (27:30.3); Mike England, 38th (27:53.0); Mike Henneberry, 44th (28:13.9); and Pete Schuster (28:56.4).

Coach Pyrah was pleased with the Wildcat's efforts and stated, "Our whole group ran well. I especially thought that O'Sullivan, O'Reilly, and O'Keeffe ran very well, as did Anderson and Lucks. We just had a good all-around performance."

Tomorrow, the Wildcats are competing in the Fourth Annual Big East Conference Cross Country Championships in Boston, Mass. at Franklin Park. The main competition will be the cross country-oriented team of Providence College.

Women Sweep Top Three Spots

By BEVERLY REILLY

The Wildcat women harriers stole the crown from the University of Pennsylvania at the Big Five Championships last Saturday.

On the crisp, sunny morning at Belmont Plateau, the Wildcats placed five runners in the top eight, totaling a score of 21 points to outdistance the reigning champs from Penn, who had 36.

As soon as the gun went off, the Villanova Wildcats took control of the 5000-meter course and never allowed the other teams a chance at the title.

Newcomer Jan Yerkes and sophomore MaryEllen McGowan set the pace as their teammates followed close behind.

Yerkes went on to capture her first individual cross country title. Being new to the sport this year, the novice runner exhibited vast improvement as she glided through the course to break the tape in 16:44.7.

Yerkes comments, "It was a great feeling. But, I have to admit, it was the strength of my teammates that made me stronger. It's great to be part of a team that really works well together."

And it was the team effort that spurred the Wildcats to victory. Pacing herself with Yerkes most of the race, McGowan finished an honorable second; while freshman Vickie Brown ran a strong, competitive race to take third in the event.

Strong performances, however, did not end there, as key scorers EvaMarie Berardi and Joanne Kehs displayed tremendous effort by placing seventh and eighth respectively.

freshman Nancy Fleming and senior Beverly Reilly captured tenth and 11th places in order to displace U of Penn's fifth scoring runner.

"They went into the race thinking like winners and they finished the race looking like winners," comments Coach Shoudt. "We've come to a point in our training where we begin to see the results of our intense training. I was well pleased with what I saw," continued Shoudt.

Field Hockey Takes Two

By BOB HELLER

Villanova's field hockey squad returned to their home turf last Thursday, coming off a 3-2 double overtime victory against Hofstra two days earlier. The Cats were hoping to make it two in a row as they took on Glassboro State.

Glassboro opened the scoring, taking a 1-0 lead to the locker room at the end of the first half. Glassboro scored two more goals early in the second half, taking a 3-0 lead. The Cats finally got on the scoreboard, as sophomore Sue Lora scored her tenth goal in as many games. At the same time, senior Kathy Byrnes crashed into the net, knocking it down, and causing a stoppage in play. This was Nova's only goal and Glassboro was a 3-1 winner. The Wildcats record dropped to 3-7.

Lora's goal set a record for the most consecutive games scoring a goal (five), breaking the old record of four previously held by Debbie Smith, set back in 1979.

Nova then travelled to Philadelphia to take on the Explorers of LaSalle on Saturday.

The Cats played sluggishly during the first half. Their defense was not marking and LaSalle was beating them again and again. However, it was the Wildcats who scored first, as Danine DeBernardi took an Amy Hutchison pass, and put it past LaSalle's goalie. Helped by sloppy defense, LaSalle evened the score at 1-1 late in the first half. The score remained tied at 1-1 until the half ended.

Nova came out charging in the second half; however, it was LaSalle who scored first, taking a 2-1 lead. The Cats slowly wore LaSalle's defense down and finally evened the score at 2-2 with another DeBernardi goal. Villanova again went into overtime, when the score remained tied at the end of regulation time.

Neither team could score in overtime, and strokes had to be taken. Nova's best stroker, Hutchison shot first and scored. LaSalle missed its first two shots. Lora missed her shot, ending her consecutive game goal scoring streak at five. Gina Roman gave the Cats a 2-0 lead, putting pressure on LaSalle. LaSalle promptly converted their third shot and the score was 2-1. Sophomore Robin Garcznyski scored for the Cats, giving them a 3-1 lead. LaSalle now had to convert their last two shots or lose the game. Nova goalie Lisa Buschmann stopped their fourth shot and Villanova was victorious. The win upped Nova's record to 4-7.

The Cats returned home on Tuesday to take on Saint Joseph's University. Back and forth hockey was the name of the game throughout the first two halves, with neither team being able to score. However, Nova did dominate play most of the second half. Neither team could score in overtime, and coach Diane Moyer's "Cardiac Kids" faced strokes again.

Nova scored twice on shots by Lora and Roman. The Hawks of LaSalle were unable to convert a single shot and Villanova won its second straight game, 2-0. The Cats are now 5-7 and have a possibility of making regional playoffs.

KING OF BEERS.

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

By TOM REUSCHE

Suzanne Lora, Villanova field hockey's record setting forward, turned in a hat trick last week, scoring all three goals in the team's 3-2 victory over Hofstra. The offensive threat has scored in five straight games, a new school record. Her prolific scoring and great team play make her the Budweiser Athlete of the Week.

Lora's torrid scoring pace has netted her a team leading season total of 10 goals, six shy of Lisa Alderfer's school record set in 1978. With six games remaining, the sophomore marketing major is matching Alderfer's record pace.

Field hockey Head Coach Diane Moyer sees Lora as more than just a scorer. "Her position is such that her job is to put the ball in the cage," said the coach," but she really does help the other players.

"She really comes through. She moves the ball well and sets up plays. She is a real team player."

When thinking of the school's greatest athletes, a field hockey player may not come to mind. But this New Jersey native has credentials to rival anyone's.

At Northern Valley Regional High School, Lora earned 11 varsity letters, captained her field hockey, basketball and softball teams, and was named "Athlete of the Year."

While etching her name in Villanova's record book with her abundant skills, Lora credits her success to others.

"Our coach has been phenomenal," states Lora. "Her intense practices have helped us in games and turned our team around. She showed us how much room there is for improvement.

"Most of all, I would not be able to do this without the players behind me."

Lora takes no shortcuts on the road to athletic excellence. According to Coach Moyer, a former U.S. Olympian, "there are not many players I have worked with who work as hard as Sue, or are as determined to succeed."

The sophomore's journey through the record book amazes some, but not Lora. "There is always room for improvement," she said. "I hope it's all up from here."

Geisz Celebrates 30th Year

By JEANNIE GLENNON

Most of us come to Villanova for four years. Ed Geisz, coach of the men's swim team and head of the intramuraal department, has been a part of the Villanova community for 30 years. One might ask, what could possibly keep someone here for 30 years? When Coach Geisz was asked just that question he simply replied, "I just love Villanova."

Geisz began his coaching career at LaSalle College, then went to Malvern Prep. The Malvern swim team didn't have a pool so they came daily to practice at Villanova. Villanova had the pool but no team. With that in mind, Geisz suggested that he start up a team at Villanova. He was hired by Bud Dudley, former athletic director, to coach the swim team and head the intramural department. Since that time Geisz has established an amazing record. During the past 30 years he has had only four losing seasons.

He beams when describing a few of the outstanding swimmers who helped him achieve this outstanding record. Among his impressive list are three Olympians; Tom Aretz, Olaf Von Smilling and John Fitzgerald. Other favorites include: Dick McDonough, "my first All-American," Geisz recalls; Rick Girdler and Jack Goeghegan, all of whom once held world records.

Ed Geisz

He talks about his swimmers in a fatherly tone. "We have a family relationship, we're very close." Senior Co-Captain Bruce Baltera agrees, "You can go to him with any problem and he'll help you out as best he can."

Has he worked his family hard this season? "Hardest we've ever worked," says Baltera. But Coach Geisz doesn't feel that he asks too much of his swimmers, "they want to work hard and they want to win as much as me." Coach Geisz admits, "I've always wanted to win. I can't stand losing." He demands a lot because he gives a lot.

Geisz quotes former UCLA Coach John Wooden when he talks about losing, "There's nothing wrong with losing, unless you fail to do your very best."

Geisz is here on the average of ten hours a day. But those days consist of more than just swim practice. Being the head of intramurals takes up a lot of time, but he enjoys it. "I love working with young people because they love it and they make you love it." He is the person responsible for starting intramural flag football for girls, which has become very popular.

When he can he attends most of the sporting events. But preparing for the big season ahead is of the utmost importance. He and his new assistant coach, Darrell Linder must get the team bo physically and mentally prepare "Darrell takes care of the ment part, I stick to the physical side it." Already thinking ahead to th Big East, Geisz says he and h swimmers share the goal of wi ning that championship. "The know I won't settle for less tha their best." Those recruits ar some of the best. Geisz recruit from all over. One of his recruitin projects include the National C tholic Swimming and Divin Championships. That particula event requires a considerabl amount of preparation.

Coach Geisz takes pride in th number of people who turn out fo the swim meets, "We usuall have a packed house." His favorit fans are his wife and his Welsh terrier, Jay-Jay.

Nova Sports Report

Women's Soccer

By PETE CONTE

The Villanova women's soccer team prevailed over Franklin and Marshall 5-2 last Saturday. The Wildcats capitalized on a hat trick from freshman Cathy Ford, a native Philadelphian, and a two goal performance turned in by fellow freshman Mary Lou Curley. Lisa Morgan, Linda Padula and Paula Skinkis each added one assist to close out the scoring for the Cats.

Sue Onnembo turned in a fine game in goal for Villanova as she stopped six Franklin and Marshall shots.

Although the game was an overall success, the Wildcats did incur a loss that won't appear in their overall record. Denise Finn, a talented junior wing, suffered a broken wrist in the game that was played in the stadium on Saturday. Reports reveal that she will most likely miss the remainder of the season, which means the team must find a solid replacement if the Cats hope to continue to experience the success they have enjoyed so far.

Nova Field Hockey Coach, Diane Moyer, Doubles as U.S. Olympic Team Goal Tender

By JOE BAGLEY

Who receives a college basketball scholarship, letters in field hockey and softball while in college and ends up being a goalie on the U.S. Olympic Field Hockey team? Why, Villanova's field hockey coach, Diane Moyer.

Nothing seems to be out of Moyer's reach. Her sincerity, her subtle aggressiveness and her countenance of determination fused with her athletic prowess are the qualities which helped put her on the Olympic team. They also molded her into a college coach.

She was raised in Laureldale, Pa., and attended Muhlenberg High School near Reading before receiving a basketball scholarship to La Salle College. While a freshman at La Salle, Moyer played field hockey, softball, and basketball before dropping the latter for swimming and diving in her sophomore and junior years.

As a senior, her level of play as a goalie was so outstanding that she earned All-American field hockey honors and was later selected by the PAIAW as the "Outstanding Athlete of the Year" in the Delaware Valley. That year, 1980, was also the year of the Moscow Olympics.

"1980 was the first year that women's field hockey was included in Olympic competition," Moyer related. "I made the U.S. team in 1977, but we were unsure of whether we would be included in the 1980 Olympics because we were ranked eleventh. During the World Cup in 1979, we placed third out of all the international teams. That was when we knew we were guaranteed of a bid to the 1980 Olympic Games."

But Jimmy Carter and the Soviet Army had other plans. The Olympic boycott was declared and Diane Moyer read about the games while she remained in the States.

"All of those on the U.S. teams worked very hard and I felt that there was no reason to boycott the Games. Americans could have boycotted technology just as successfully," Moyer stated.

Well then, how about taking all the nationalism out of the Olympics, taking away the flags and the uniforms and letting the athletes compete solely against each other?

"I wouldn't agree to that and I wouldn't enjoy playing like that."

the Olympian responded. "It's all about playing for your country. I almost cry at international games when I hear the national anthem and see the flag raised. Just to play (without national identification) doesn't have the impact."

In addition to coaching Villanova's field hockey program, Moyer is presently a member of the 1982 United States Elite Field Hockey Team, which carries four goalies including Moyer. It is essentially the U.S. Olympic training team for the sport and after cutting 14 players this spring, the team will tour the world and play in the upcoming World Cup. After those games, 16 women will be chosen for the 1984 U.S. Olympic Team.

Some of the players, like Moyer, coach college teams. Players now hold coaching jobs at North Carolina, Old Dominion and Temple, among others. But those are the lucky ones. Others are scraping to get by as their time and effort is mostly put toward the team and training.

With the U.S. Field Hockey Association headquartering the Olympic development in Philadelphia (practices are held at Temple) for promotional, educational and economic reasons, Moyer seems to be in pretty good shape. Other team players are just scrambling for any type of job.

Time for Diane Moyer to sit back and breathe a little easier, right? Wrong. She is in the thick of the battle to be one of the two goalies to make the cut for the 1982 U.S. Olympic team. And barring any Red Army invasion of the University of Southern California's sports facilities, Moyer wishes to make it to Los Angeles in 1984 to start in goal for the United States.

Crew Competes in Head of Charles Race

By CHUCK WINDEKNECHT

This Sunday, following over seven weeks of rigorous preparation, the Villanova men's varsity eight will be competing in the prestigious Head of the Charles Regatta in Boston. This marks the first time since 1977 that Villanova will be competing in this event.

The Head of the Charles Regatta was witnessed by over 100,000 people last year and like numbers are expected again this year. The regatta consists of 20 different racing events, each event with 40 entries, ranging from single scull to eight oared sweep competition.

The eight-oared sweep race attracts the cream of U.S. collegiate and club rowing: Harvard, Yale, Penn and the defending champ, the U.S. Naval Academy. International teams are drawn as well, witnessed by the fact that the West German team competed two years ago, finishing a close second to Navy.

The Villanova varsity eight began practicing in early September, and have been rowing a minimum of five days a week. Under the direction of new Head Coach Dan Whitiker, eight to ten mile workouts have been common the past few weeks.

With 12 men going after eight seats, competition for the starters has been fierce, and it was not until last week that the crew was chosen. The members of the eight consist of Tom Kelly, Tom Smart, Ted Ritchie, Mike Henderson, Tom Wysocki, Bill Gennerro, Chuck Windeknecht and Steve Niemerski.

Survey Results

96% Would Pay for V.U. Football

By JEFFREY PAGE

Student Body President Paul Tufano announced late Tuesday evening that 96 percent of students surveyed voted to support the proposed $35 student fee to fund football at Villanova.

In what Tufano called a "record turnout," 4309 students voted over the five days the survey was conducted. "Never before have this many Villanova students come out to have their opinions heard," said Tufano. "I think it's fantastic."

The survey, conducted by the Student Government Committee to Reinstate Football, asked students, "Would you support a $35 mandatory fee which would reinstate football at Villanova, and provide home game tickets to all students?" While 4,140 said "yes," only 169 (3.9 percent) said "no." All Villanova students were eligible to vote, including graduate and law students.

According to Tufano, the survey took place in two parts. The first part was a door-to-door canvassing of the resident halls. There was one student in charge of each dorm, who got other students to help him." The second part was aimed at commuter students. "We had ballot boxes in the Connelly Center and the Student Government Office. On Friday, Monday and Tuesday students went to Bartley cafeteria, the Pie Shop and all around the Connelly Center asking people to fill out the survey."

To prevent students from voting twice, all the surveys were checked with a student list. "Very few students voted twice; only around ten or 20," Tufano said.

In a recent interview with the Villanovan (Oct. 22) before the survey began, Villanova President Rev. John Driscoll, O.S.A., warned that the survey had to be "properly constructed to provide a valid student opinion." He continued, "The survey will be useful if it is a valid expression of informed student opinion."

Tufano pointed out that there were information sheets given to students. "Students who were not aware of exactly what the proposal was usually read the fact sheet first, and then voted."

Tufano hopes to present the survey results, along with the complete proposal, to the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees.

Two weeks ago, the committee publicly announced its plans for the survey, and in the week that followed, inundated the campus with everything from posters and flyers to t-shirts and buttons. As a result, Tufano said, "The first day of the survey (last Friday), we had an incredible turnout."

In an interview before the survey was conducted, the Rev. Edward McCarthy, O.S.A., chairman of the Board of Trustees, said, "If some solution comes up that would take care of (the financial burden of football), the board would be willing to listen."

Law School, CHI to Host Nuclear Freeze Panel

By LEONARD J. LA BARTH

The Villanova Law School will host a convocation "Solutions to the Nuclear Arms Race," to be held on the second annual nationwide Veterans Day, Nov. 11.

The sponsoring organizations of the convocation include the Union of Concerned Scientists, the Lawyers Alliance for Nuclear Arms Control, Physicians for Social Responsibility and United Campuses to Prevent Nuclear War.

Also sponsoring events for the day will be Villanova's Common Heritage Institute (CHI).

The day's activities will feature a CHI information table at the Connelly Center, the film "No First Use: Preventing Nuclear War," and a panel discussion featuring several nuclear freeze authorities.

Speakers scheduled to participate include Charles Day, chairperson of the Committee on Universal Nuclear Disarmament of the Episcopal Diocese of Pennsylvania; Babette Josephs, activist in the Philadelphia referendum for a nuclear weapons freeze; Gordon McCormick, coordinator of military studies at the Foreign Policy Research Institute; Thomas O'Rourke, businessman and leader in the Catholic Peace Fellowship; and Walter Sullivan, former Deputy Attorney General of Pennsylvania and a member of the Congressional Task Force for a Bilateral Freeze.

"We felt that there should be some forum for the issues," said Jack Loughhead, one of the organizers of the program." Dean Gerald Abraham was first contacted but he did not have enough time so he asked some of the faculty to help organize events and a few have shown the interest."

According to Loughhead, none of the schools in the area are promoting any programs as extensive as the law school's.

Randall Rolfe, another organizer, emphasized that the forum will represent both sides of the nuclear arms debate.

"We hope to educate people and at least give students a basic idea of the issues at hand," said Rolfe. "All of the speakers are deeply involved in the issues and will probably present different approaches."

Dr. Charles Marvin, professor of international law, will moderate the discussion which will include audience questions.

The film, produced by the Union of Concerned Scientists, will feature interviews with noted authorities on nuclear arms, an historical perspective on the arms race and on-site footage of recent developments in the nuclear arms race.

"Luckily, the law school and CHI found each other," said Colleen Sullivan, assistant director of the Institute. "Nuclear concern has been growing, especially here on campus. It was the efforts of the Union of Concerned Scientists that began the nationwide awareness programs."

According to Sullivan, activities

Campus Scared by Rumor

By KIM RUSHTON and MARY STEPHENSON

A widely circulated rumor purporting a mass murder to be held at Villanova caused a number of students to leave the campus for the weekend, despite increased security.

According to the rumors, a psychic reportedly seen on the Merv Griffin show predicted that a mass murder was to be committed in a single-sex dormitory overlooking a graveyard at a eastern Catholic University on Halloween night.

St. Rita's Hall fits this description.

Dr. Richard Neville, vice-president of student life, investigated the rumor by calling WPVI-TV in Philadelphia, and was subsequently referred to a producer of the Merv Griffin Show. Neville received completely negative replies to his inquiries.

"We found that the rumor had no basis in fact," said Neville.

According to Sgt. Harrity, acting head of security, there were 15 extra security guards on campus Sunday night, with fewer additional guards on Friday and Saturday.

Harrity reported that the Radnor Police had been receiving calls from parents and that they were "standing by to help."

"We had two men at either end of St. Rita's. We had no incidents at all that evening. All we did was beef up our security," commented Harrity.

According to Neville, it was not the rumor itself that caused the alarm in the students, but the fact that some psychopath would take it into his mind to carry out the rumor.

Pentagon Funded Research Rising

By JACK McHUGH

The Pentagon "is buying its way back on to campus," according to a report released by the American Friends Service Committee, a Quaker organization involved in peace-keeping research.

The report reveals that for mid-1980 to mid-1981, U.S. colleges and universities received more than one billion dollars in military-related contracts, a 70 percent increase from 1977.

According to the report, Villanova received approximately $20,000 for defense research.

The National Action/Research on the Military Industrial Complex (NARMIC), a committee of the Friends group, said that the spending for military research is at an all-time high.

Thomas Conrad, a NARMIC staff researcher, said the position taken by the committee is that "the Pentagon has too much to say in deciding exactly why, when and how much research is being carried out due to its massive financial power.

"NARMIC considers the Department of Energy and NASA as military-related," said Conrad, "largely on the amount spent on military research of the whole budget. The Department of Energy, for example, spends about 30-to-40 percent on the development of nuclear weapons."

Conrad also said that the Friends Committee objects to certain types of research on America's campuses. "The question is 'do we want our universities involved in the military buildup?' Because in the end, all the research is used to kill."

Villanova Director of Research Dr. Bernard J. Downey, emphathizes with the NARMIC report but feels that the committee has overreacted. Downey believes that the area of research is too large for anyone to control, including the Pentagon.

"The Pentagon wants to control even unclassified research," said Conrad. "They call it 'voluntary review.' This is where someone doing reseach for the Pentagon submits his work to them before release, even if it is unclassified, so that the Pentagon can decide if it would constitute a security threat if released."

According to Downey, professors are attracted to military research opportunities through the Commercial Business Daily, a daily newspaper which lists all the needs of the federal government. The newspaper is circulated throughout Villanova's science and engineering departments. The professors decide if they would like to work on research and then submit an RFP (request for proposal). "Basically, it is up to the individual professor to decide if he would like to receive any grants from the government," said Downey.

"Villanova will only do research we consider morally defensible and reject the morally indefensible," emphasized Downey. Villanova refuses to accept contracts for classified, nuclear weapons and chemical weapons research.

Downey said that Villanova is committed to never becoming financially dependent on Defense Department contracts. "There is no publish or perish policy at Villanova and there never will be," said Downey. "Teaching is our first priority here."

At this time, there are three professors on Defense Department contracts at Villanova — two in mechanical engineering and one in chemical engineering. The contracts total $60,000, according to Downey.

The Friends report listed totals of military research in the area for the last available year: Penn, $10 million; Drexel, $1.64 million; Temple University, $766,000; Lehigh University, $2.19 million; Pennsylvania State University, $5.54 million; Rutgers University, $1.4 million.

"The growing militarization of campus research signals a dangerous trend," Conrad said. "As federal support for education and nonmilitary research dwindles, the Pentagon will increasingly be able to call the shots on U.S. campuses by bankrolling projects with military potential.

"The Pentagon has often said it does not fund projects in which there are no military applications," said Conrad. "Our position is that even if it is called fundamental or basic research, it is still applied to weapons development."

are scheduled on 400-500 campuses nationwide, up from the approximately 150 last year.

Eastern, Bryn Mawr and Haverford Colleges are other local schools with scheduled events.

Sullivan has been the major force behind the organization of several world peace-related projects sponsored at Villanova, concentrating on nuclear arms and weapons use.

The Peace Project, an outgrowth of the Institute, began with the Day of Concern at Villanova in Oct. 1981 and was augmented by Ground Zero Week 1982, held in April. Sullivan traveled to Brussels and Geneva to the European Nuclear Disarmament Convention in the summer and is serving on the International Task Force of the Freeze Campaign. "First, we want to attract as many students as possible," Sullivan said. "The terminology related to the issues can be confusing but it is an important part of their life."

Colleen Sullivan, assistant director of the Common Heritage Institute.

"A student spends four years studying in education but it won't do a bit of good if there is a nuclear war."

The CHI will have available information on the imminence of problems related to the "escalating rhetoric between the U.S. and the U.S.S.R." according to Sullivan, whose husband will be one of the convocation's speakers.

CHI is also planning future peace awareness events including peace cafes, a conference on "Peace, Justice and International Institutions" in March and Ground Zero Week 1983.

Correction

In an Oct. 22 article in the Villanovan, "Connelly Center Losses Mount," two errors were made.

Director of the Connelly Center Marc Tuchman said that "there has never been the expectation that the building would generate a profit."

Also, according to Tuchman, the cost to the student for maintaining the Connelly Center was $5.22.

The Villanovan regrets the errors.

Rumor

"You need to respond to the rumor whether it is true or not. We need to respond to the student's emotional state. The more publicity a thing like this gets, the more problems that arise," commented Neville.

"People will believe this type of thing — they do not question the source of a rumor if they heard it from a close friend. In addition, the more details rumor has, the more weight it carries," added Neville.

Providence College, as well as Holy Cross College, were affected by the rumor, according to Neville.

St. Rita's Resident Assistant, Margie Nardone, estimated that approximately 10 out of 52 girls remained in St. Rita's for the weekend.

Polish Symposium Held

By LAURA SIBERSKI

The Villanova political science department sponsored a symposium on "The Politics of Contemporary Poland," Oct. 27 in the Connelly Center Cinema.

The discussion was part of the two week study of Polish politics sponsored by the department.

Topics discussed included the international consequences, economic aspects, political alienation and the internal developments of Poland.

The moderator of the symposium, Dr. Jeffrey Hahn, opened the discussion, by introducing Prof. Marcin Sar of the University of Warsaw, visiting for the Rockefeller Foundation, who expressed optimism about Polish foreign policy. Athough U.S. sanctions have resulted in economic destabilization, Sar commented that, "Warsaw will have the ability to reverse the adverse trends in the economy."

Dr. Bronislaw Misztal, professor at Southern Illinois University, spoke on the economic aspects. Misztal said that the U.S. economic embargo was only to punish the military government imposed by martial law. "Because the initial impact of the sanction has already passed, the sanction failed," said Misztal.

Side effects of the sanction included the mortgaging of Polish enterprises to the U.S.S.R. and increasing difficulty in gaining access to the hard currency markets. "Poland will inevitably face an extreme economical crisis," said Mistzal.

Political alienation and impasse was discussed next by Maurice Simon of the University of North Carolina. Simon expanded on the Solidarity movement by saying that it was "a movement of the Polish society against the regime." He cited the accomplishments to be the "establishment of a free and independent trade union, the elimination of censorship, greater influence with the Catholic church and pluralism."

Dr. Jeffrey Hahn.

Dr. Miron Wolnicki of Villanova University, spoke on the international developments of Poland. Solidarity mobilized the masses but could not handle all of the expectations and pressures placed upon it, according to Wolnicki. As to the demise of Solidarity, Wolnicki stated that, "the mobilization is still high, which the military authorities are trying to break."

N-SPAC Promotes Student Awareness

By TIM HANLON

Promotion of college student's electoral interests is the primary function of the National Student Political Action Committee, a bipartisan organization formed in April.

The committee, known as N-SPAC, was formed under the premise that college students can make an enormous contribution to the electoral process if given the right training and participation opportunities. N-SPAC sees its purpose as acting as a catalyst for the action.

N-SPAC rates political candidates on how they voted on the federal budget and supports individual candidates by endorsements and communication to students and publicizing the candidates positions.

"Target races are also set up against their opponents," said Janice Fine, president of the United States Student Association (U.S.S.A.) a lobbying organization consulted by N-SPAC.

Fine emphasized that the committee does not fund chosen candidates and that no separate issues or views are held by N-SPAC.

The committee funds itself through a variety of activities that include fundraisers, seminars for college interns and solicitations from community and labor organizations.

N-SPAC also works with state and national student groups. A direct mail program will be initiated in the future that will be available to students to facilitate information about the various candidates.

Simpson Problem To Be Eliminated

By LISA FEDERICO

Several attempts by the residents of Simpson Hall to gain the attention of the administration have resulted in a response from the Office of Resident Life.

In a letter printed in the Oct. 22 issue of the Villanovan, the residents of Simpson Hall complained about both their living conditions and the lack of concern shown by Resident Life and Maintenance to the situation. The letter voiced several problems including the presence of rats, mice and bugs in the living quarters, along with numerous plumbing problems.

It is the feeling of several Simpson residents that because the hall is the smallest dormitory, housing only 29 girls, and is in a remote location, its needs are being ignored.

According to one Simpson resident, the letter was written at a dormitory meeting in response to "the emergency situation" which exists.

"OhmyGod! Gag me with a spoon! It's so grody living in Simpson Hall, for sure. My mother used to make me scrape the plates, but even she would gross out if she knew my new roommate was a rat. Seriously, folks, no one knows the trouble we've seen. The situation has reached epidemic proportions — we've even filed to have this place declared a disaster area . . . Please, someone help us. We don't know where else to turn. The Office of Resident Life and Maintenance don't seem to know or even care where Simpson Hall is," read the letter.

The letter drew a response from Christopher Janosik, director of resident life. In a letter addressed to the residents of Simpson, Janosik expressed "disappointment on reading your letter in the Villanovan, claiming that the situation ' is not you versus us. ' '

Janosik scheduled a question-and-answer session to meet with the Simpson residents about the problems.

According to Simpson residents, exterminators have been in the hall and continue to work on the rodent and insect problem. A maintenance crew, working on the water and sewage system outside Simpson estimated that the plumbing problems should have been fixed by Nov. 2.

V.U. Law School Evaluated

By LISA FEDERICO

"For a relatively young institution, the Villanova School of Law has achieved remarkable acceptance by the law profession," according to Dean of the Law School J. Willard O'Brien

In a 1974-75 American Bar Association Review of Legal Education, Villanova Law School ranked 29th among law schools in an assessment of law school resources and their effects on the educational programs.

"The dedication of the faculty to both the students and their profession is an outstanding aspect of the law school," stated O'Brien. Currently the Juris Doctorate degree program has 25 full-time and 13 part-time teaching faculty members for the 635 students; student-faculty ratio is approximately 25 to 1.

Acceptance to the Villanova Law School is based upon a combination of the LSAT score and the Law School Data Assembly Service (LSDAS) report analyzing six semesters of college work. The mean LSAT score was 665 and the mean grade point average was 3.36 for the 1982-83 first year Villanova Law students.

According to the law school Admissions office, 220 first year students are enrolled from the 669 acceptances sent out. Last year more than 2,000 students applied for admission to the 1982-83 first year law class.

In 1980 the School of Law and the College of Commerce and Finance offered an interdisciplinary Graduate Tax Program. The program is offered to those seeking a Law Master's degree in Taxation or a Master's in Taxation. Presently there are over 200 degree candidates in this program. For the 1982-83 academic year, 24 different courses are being offered. The entire law school program consists of more than 80 different courses.

Villanova has the largest representation in the first year class with 19 students. The University of Pennsylvania has the second largest with 16 students.

"Each application is looked at separately and is evaluated by an admissions committee on an individual student's qualifications. There are no quotas for acceptance from any institution," explained Mannix.

Villanova Law School tuition for the 1982-83 school year is $5,220. Financial aid is available through loans and interest free loans are available based on financial need. Special awards, such as the Harold Gill Reuschlein Scholarship for third year students, exist for financial aid applicants who file the GAPSFAS form.

"People have been misled to believe that Villanova Law School does not accept Villanova graduates. This is simply not true," stated Sandra Mannix, director of admissions and financial aid.

Rumor

Janeen Sokusky, a senior St. Rita's resident, commented that, "When we first heard about it we weren't scared because it was only a rumor. Then, when the media got a hold of the story, and with the article in the Daily News, we were afraid some sick person might get ideas, like the Tylenol incident . . . It got all blown out of proportion. My parents were concerned when they heard about it on the Channel 3 news . . . they thought it would be a good idea for me to go home . . I didn't want to take any chances."

Eva Marie Berardi, a junior St. Rita's resident, was one of the few that stayed. According to her, there was nothing to be really scared about. "There was a security van sitting by Alumni Hall, and extra security guards. Also, they posted a sign, warning everyone to lock their doors and make sure they were closed tight . . . I thought about leaving, but I had a track meet on Saturday . . . The R.A. convinced me that it was safe."

Actress Speaks on Asian Plight

By PEGGIE WARD

In addressing a group of students and faculty members Tuesday, Erica Hagen, the actress, photographer and educator, spoke of the "horrific plight" of the thousands of Southeast Asian refugees living in camps both in the United States and Thailand.

Hagen, sponsored by the United States Catholic Conference to acquaint Americans with the Hmong hill tribes and other refugees living in communities throughout the United States, is slated to visit 25 cities and give slide lecture presentations aimed at community organization, social service providers, health care workers, educators, churches and the media.

In her presentation, Hagen spoke at length on the large need to promote understanding among Americans about the Asian refugees.

"These people want nothing from us," Hagen said, " All they want is to be taught to be contributing members of our society."

During her year-and-one-half stay in a Northern Thailand refugee camp, Hagen became aware of the tremendous deprivation among the Asian people. The lack of food, education, and outside assistance are all primary factors in contributing to the high death rate among children under the age of five and the desire of the people to escape from their homelands, said Hagen.

According to Hagen, the adjustment of the Hmong people in the United States has been more difficult than other groups due to their "simple, untouched" lifestyle in the Laos mountains prior to their aiding the United States military during the Southeast Asian War. "This aid has resulted in their being the target of continuing reprisals by the North Vietnamese Communists who now control Laos as well as Cambodia and Viet Nam," said Hagen.

The difficulties these refugees have in the United States after fleeing their countries was a recurring theme in the presentation.

Hagen cited the seemingly uncaring attitude of the Reagan administration for the refugees in contrast to President Carter's strong policy of human rights.

Football Survey Incontrovertible

The results are overwhelming. Over 4,300 Villanova students were surveyed by the Student Government Committee to Reinstate Football this week on whether they would be willing to pay an annual $35 fee for a football program at Villanova. Even the most ardent supporters of reviving football have to be surprised — a full 96 percent of those responding said they would be willing to directly assume financial responsibility for fielding a competitive varsity program.

Purportedly, the reason football was dropped here was because it had become a tremendous financial burden to the University, costing hundreds of thousands of dollars a year. According to Villanova's president, it just wasn't a program to which enough people were willing to give more than verbal support

Well, now we know that things are different. The Student Government Committee to Reinstate Football has solid, incontrovertible evidence that Villanova students not only want a football program restored, but that they're willing to fund it as well, as that makes all the difference in the world.

The head of the committee, Student Body President Paul Tufano, says he hopes to meet shortly with the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees to present the findings of the survey. The chairman of the Board of Trustees, the Rev. Edward McCarthy, O.S.A., has said in the past that the trustees would be "willing to listen" to any proposal which could show the financial feasibility of varsity football. The results of the survey do just that.

Example of a Sad Trend in Society

"A mass murder will occur Halloween weekend at an Eastern private Catholic college which has a single sex dorm overlooking a graveyard." This was the gist of the rumor that was flying around campus for the two weeks prior to Halloween. Some said a psychic predicted the happening on the Merv Griffin show, others said a professor from another university started the rumor to observe situational habits, while others did not know where it originated; they only knew that they weren't going to be around that weekend.

Regardless of where the rumor started, which was reportedly running rampant at other Eastern colleges besides Villanova, the talk among students was serious. Most were afraid that some "psycho" would view this as his big chance and make the prediction come true. What better setting than a night where people are in costumes with many identities disguised by make-up or masks? The traditional holiday provided the perfect atmosphere for a mass murder, especially with the showings of the movie "Halloween" in mind.

Signs were posted in St. Rita's bathrooms asking residents who "planned to stay in the dorm" that weekend to inform the R.A. As it was, only ten women stayed in the dorm. How healthy can a situation be when it frightens people away from their own rooms?

Some people may look at the incident and laugh at how entirely stupid and baseless the whole thing was; after all the furor, no one was murdered over the weekend. It was all just a hoax, although one which was taken very seriously by a great many people, started by someone with an obviously warped outlook on life.

But what's worse is that this seems to be indicative of what's happening nationwide, with Tylenol laced with cyanide and razor blades hidden in Halloween candy and who knows what else. Things people never used to think about or take seriously have suddenly become things they have to fear.

In retrospect, the rumor of a possible mass murder sounds absurd. But given what's gone on recently in our society, it's a sad but true fact that even today the most bizarre rumors can't be taken lightly.

Letters to the Editor

Erdlen on V.U. Minority Students

To the Editor:

Judging from past issues of the Villanovan I have come to the conclusion that no matter what one says or how one says it, there is no way to prevent irate and hostile reader reaction and response. However, when one considers the inflamatory journalistic style that so often permeates the issues of same Villanovan, it is easy to understand the replies. That notwithstanding, I wish to try and set the record straight regarding the attitude and efforts of the Villanova undergraduate admissions office on the matter of minority students.

When the reporter from the Villanovan asked me why we do not have a larger number of minority students, my reply was that the matter is a complex one and that there are no simple solutions. Let us consider the facts of the situation (which I outlined also for the reporter).

Villanova's location makes it difficult to attract a large number of commuting students. This was recently confirmed by an independent study, the "Zemsky Report," which stated we have pretty much saturated our commuter market. This is true of all students, not just minorities. That is to say, the largest segment of the commuting population does not lie within our immediate proximity. Public transportation for our area is poor and is not regarded as desirable by most wishing to attend Villanova. Many of those who do reside in our immediate area prefer to go away to college and have the means to do so.

This is not to say we do not recruit extensively. Witness the fact that the Rev. John O'Rourke, O.S.A., for three years visited practically every city high school. Note also that the present admissions office staff has already visited such schools as West Catholic Boys and Girls, Little Flower and Camden High School. In the future we will be visiting Roman, Central, St. Hubert's and many others. We will also be present at the Philadelphia College Fair and the ASPIRA Program (this latter program is designed to assist Spanish-speaking minorities). These are but a few of the schools; there are an additional 50-60 schools in such places as Collingdale, Springfield, Norristown, Marple, Lower Merion, etc. Last year, because of the prolonged strike, it became difficult and even impossible to pay a visit to many of the city schools. I do not know where Dr. Theresa Nance got her information, but her statement about our recruiting efforts is erroneous.

Attracting minority students beyond our immediate area, and especially outside of Pennsylvania, is most difficult because, as I stated in the interview, these students often receive more lucrative offers from other colleges closer to them and in many instances more prestigious. In saying this I am in no way demeaning Villanova or the students who attend here. I have been affiliated with Villanova since 1950 (longer than the vast majority of readers of this newspaper), and am second to none in lauding its faculty, facilities and students. But I am not so naive as to think that Villanova is, or is perceived to be, as prestigious as Harvard, Brown, Princeton, University of Virginia, etc. It

Connelly Center 'Facts' Explained

Many things have been said in the Villanovan about the Connelly Center over the past three years — many of them complimentary — many of them critical. The bulk of these sentiments is supposedly based on factual information. Sometimes what passes for facts is not really so but someone's interpretation of what they believe to be factual. Hearing some information from a supposed credible witness does not make it factual. Even with good will, information can get distorted as it is passed along. Judgments made on supposedly valid information which is inaccurate will lead to poor conclusions.

In an effort to allow each reader to form his own unaided judgment about the Connelly Center budget, we bring the following facts to your attention.

The primary goal of the Connelly Center is to provide service to the entire Villanova University community. This is in part accomplished by making the services of the building available nearly 4,500 hours a year. Obviously, there is a cost involved in operating a facility the size of Connelly Center.

Like all other University departments, the Connelly Center receives a share of the University's budget in order to operate. In 1981-82 the net cost of operating the Connelly Center was $82,837 or .15 percent (fifteen one-hundredths of one percent) of the total University budget.

In 1981-82 the Connelly Center generated 91.5 percent of its expenses back in the form of income from building operations (food services, games' room, information desk, etc.). The University provided the remaining 8.5 percent or $82,837.

This past school year 1,105 meetings, seminars, films, conferences and banquets were scheduled in the Connelly Center. In almost all cases, students clubs and organizations, the Villanova Union, faculty and staff did not pay to use the Center. Most room set up and clean up costs were absorbed by the Center.

The Connelly Center spent $124,080 in 1981-82 on housekeeping and maintenance costs alone. These costs are paid for from the Connelly Center budget, as compared to most other departments that do not pay these same costs out of their budgets.

The cost per student for operating the Connelly Center in 1981-82 was $5.22. This is calculated by dividing the net operation cost ($82,837) by the total number of students paying tuition to Villanova University (15,866 — this is based on 10,769 students during the academic year, plus 5,097 students paying tuition during the summer).

Since September, activity in the Connelly Center has increased over previous years. Room reservations are up over 25 percent. Sales are up an average of 23 percent. Lounges, the art gallery, the cinema and games' room are busier than ever.

Finally, with activity up throughout the building, projections for the current fiscal year indicate that the Connelly Center will operate at a net cost significantly under previous projections.

On Campus

By ELISE VALADE and STEVE SKROBALA

On Tuesday, Nov. 2, nationwide elections were held. On this day, the Villanovan asked some students: "Do you plan to vote in the elections either here or in your home district? Why or why not?"

"I didn't vote because I have been too busy with my studies to give the candidates any serious consideration."

Tricia Brasco
Freshman, Liberal Arts

"I would have voted if I got my absentee ballot. How about this nice weather?"

Rich Hogan
Senior, Arts/Honors

"No, I didn't vote because I'm in class all day."

Diana Borek
Senior, Nursing

"Yes I do, because I think it is important for everyone to take advantage of their right to vote."

Jeff Quinn
Senior, Political Science

"No, because I'm not registered."

Lisa Strengari
Sophomore, Nursing

"I did by absentee ballot because Billy O'Neill needs my vote. He owns a great bar."

Russell Palmer
Senior, Philosophy/Physics

"I'm not only voting straight Democrat, I'm working at the polls for Bob Edgar."

Lisa Stofko

"I'm from out of state and I can't vote in Pennsylvania."

Mark Prescott

would make no sense to cast asperesions on the fine students who choose to attend Villanova since it is this office which recruits them and ultimately makes the decision to accept them.

In conclusion, may I reiterate what I said at the beginning of this letter. It is not easy attracting minority students to Villanova and there are no easy, glib answers to the problem — despite statements to the contrary. I would also like to point out that we will intensify our recruiting endeavors — endeavors which, by the way, are largely responsible for bringing an increased quantity and quality of students to this University at a time when the applicant market is in decline. We must be doing something right, albeit imperfectly in an imperfect world.

Wallet Abuse

To the Editor:

First, the Villanova football team failed to show profit and was dissolved. Then, the Connelly Center came up in the red both years of its operation and the administration is taking money out of student tuitions to cover the loss. And now, the administration is planning a multi-million dollar sports complex. What I want to know is, can I see the plans first? My wallet can't take any more abuse.

'Eye-opener'

To the Editor:

I found your recent article on the Connelly Center to be a real eye-opener about this University's ability to meet student social needs and properly manage its student facilities.

In the first place, the Connelly Center is named after the Connelly family for good reason; it would never have been without them. The Connelly Center was a gift because the University was unable to meet the initial building costs. Having received the gift, the University decided to permit a $200,000 loss in its first year and make it up by taking the money out of student tuitions, instead of guaranteeing before the groundwork of the building was begun that a profit (or at least not a loss) was achievable each year.

Of course, who worries about money when you can't even find the money to finish construction? Well, I do — a Villanova student who finds a student center with thousands of square feet of profitless, useless space which also comes short of meeting the social needs of students. Unlike the football team, though, the Connelly Center can't be dismantled because it can't show a profit, but I'd like to see some plans drawn up to put an end to this senseless waste of student tuitions due to mismanagement on top of bad planning.

'Mass Murder'

To the Editor:

This Halloween, marked by a full moon and a rampant rumor of a "mass murder," security was on the scene to alleviate the understandable fear. For all the abuse the security guards have taken in the past, we feel that they deserve a great deal of recognition for all the hours they put in this weekend.

The rumors about the "mass murder" could easily have been brushed aside, but thanks to security's efforts, a true feeling of security was generated among the students, especially in St. Rita's and Alumni. We greatly appreciate the long hours that these men put in and feel they deserve our sincere thanks.

Unfair Picking

To the Editor:

Every Friday my wife, a Villanova senior, picks up the famous Villanovan because she likes to keep up with what's happening in the school. On Oct. 22, as always, she brought the paper home, but this time I decided to scan through it, out of curiosity, of course. I could not help noticing the "On the Scene" article by the articulate, witty pizza expert Christopher Johnson. Being a pizza lover myself, I decided to read "Picking Apart Particular Pizzas" throughout, to perhaps get a worthwhile opinion.

What a disappointment! I never saw such a biased view from anybody on any subject. What propaganda!

Who does Johnson think he is writing to? College students or first graders? Surely pizzerias differ from each other, surely one makes it a little better than all the others according to somebody's taste, but his article clearly shows that he has been paid for the unfair criticism, for pizza or sex, we know what Villanova students hurt for!

Johnson cuts down Campus Corner because there is not enough sauce under the cheese? By who's standard? Perhaps he should learn that too much sauce might hurt his tummy. He also charges that Conestoga Style Pizza's cheese is burnt beyond recognition. Sure, after so many years Conestoga would still be in business with black cheese on their pizza! Perhaps they are still in business because of their fine delivery service which he admits but does not appreciate. He also does not appreciate the thick layer of cheese which Pizza Place puts on their pizza. Perhaps Johnson does not realize that cheese is the most expensive and tasty element on a good pizza. He also charges that Pizza Palace is "conveniently close." Incredible!

On the other hand, Johnson compliments the Rosemont pizza not for the ingredients but for the "luscious ladies who make it."

I would strongly recommend a more objective view on the pizzas of this area, for Johnson's reputation as well as the Villanovan's. I think pizza makers deserve a better treatment from a respectable college paper. If Johnson wants to make an honest comparison, he should organize a panel of students, order a pizza from each pizzeria, and go at it. I am sure the pizza owners wouldn't mind a little competition.

Dimitrios Hatzipapafotiou

Pizza Owner Challenge

To the Editor:

The article appearing in the Villanovan of Oct. 22, "Picking Apart Particular Pizzas," is a prime example of blunt criticism, indiscriminant ruthlessness and a show of ignorance, on the part of the author, on the art of the pizza. It seems that Christopher Johnson has a very biased view on certain pizzerias. I wonder what sort of criteria he used to base his comparisons. He charges that some pizzas have little sauce, others have burnt cheese, etc, etc. It is quite awkward that he criticizes good points of certain pizzerias, like prompt delivery service, and convenient locations. I am particularly concerned about his charges on Pizza Palace. He claims that the cheese layer is thick and the sauce not enough! I am terribly sorry, but we try to please the general taste of the people whom we have had the pleasure to serve for so many years, and not the taste of one fanatic who unfortunately writes for a newspaper.

In protest to Johnson's article, I, the owner of Pizza Palace, am in the position to challenge my pizza against anybody's in the area, provided a group of people is involved in the taste test. I would prefer a fair test. I would like to see the Villanovan, too, be a more objective paper for its sake and the sake of my employees who are mostly (90 percent) Villanova students.

Andreas Bouikidis

Editors' Note: Though the article "Picking Apart Particular Pizzas" was written by Christopher Johnson, contrary to the beliefs of Messrs. Hatzipapafotiou and Bouikidis, the opinions were gathered from a panel of tasters. The article clearly says this.

Also, all food reviews are by nature subjective; we know of no way to review pizza or any other food in an "objective" manner.

Alumnus Disillusion

To the Editor:

As one of the newest alumni of Villanova, I had my first taste of the disillusionment that I felt was growing among other alumni before my graduation, especially after the University's decision to drop the football program.

My disillusionment centered around my first return to my alma mater since graduation. Homecoming brings visions of meeting friends who have dispersed all over the country, of alumni activities planned for the weekend and of a Homecoming football game.

I was stung when other alumni and I received no invitation from the University to return for Homecoming and no information on Homecoming activities. In fact, I have received nothing from the school since graduation.

Although the University apparently has forgotten me, I am not soon to forget it. Besides the memories of four years in the engineering school, I will be paying off the financial debts incurred from loans for the next ten years.

So I ask Villanova University to keep the alumni informed. Give us a Homecoming with a football game. Make Homecoming more than standing around in the parking lot drinking beer. You owe it to us after all we have given to you. Don't make us ask the question, "Villanova, where are you now?"

Driving Fines?

To the Editor:

I was happy to see that something is going to happen about the execrable parking situation on campus; if only something could be done about the more dangerous moving vehicles.

Perhaps, with the income from the parking fines, we can install a few traffic bumps, such as one sees in apartment complexes, schools, shopping centers.

And perhaps a few salutary fines for speeding — or removal of campus driving privileges — might help?

This Job Requires No Interview

By CATHY PILIERO

Dirty streets covered with flying pieces of newspaper and trash, polluted air barely breathable because of carbon monoxide and bums lying in the gutter decorate the area between 10th and 12th on Arch Street. To some people, it's just a low-class section of Philadelphia to pass through on their way to home or work. But for others, this is a place to work.

While some people out of work will go to employment agencies to seek jobs as secretaries, waitresses, dish washers or salespeople, others will go to Arch Street to become prostitutes.

Why would some men and women choose prostitution as a career instead of a conventional job? Most people think money is the object, but there is more to it than that. Psychiatrist M.H. Hollender did a study that showed prostitutes have needs for relationships, but experience emotional difficulties when they try to maintain them. They also usually come from homes that lack warmth and love, so they have difficulty forming deep attachments. Although they have trouble with attachments, they still need them and satisfy those needs on superficial levels. Money confirms the relationship for the prostitute, while it eliminates the personal commitment they fear, according to Hollender.

For both sexes, promiscuity is a way to satisfy the subconscious need for love without personal involvement.

As she sat at her vanity in her bedroom, Margaret put her face on; she was getting ready for work. Green went on her eyelids, bright red on her cheekbones and lips. When she finished her face, she went to the closet and pondered which shoes to wear: the high-heeled silver sandals or the satiny black pumps. Since the color and material of the pumps matched her pants, she decided to wear them. "I gotta look good tonight," Margaret said. "There's gonna be a lot of competition by the time I get there."

Margaret was referring to Arch Street. She's a prostitute and has been one for six years. Unlike most others, she works for herself. This is one of the main reasons she likes it so much. She can choose her own hours and not have to worry about being late. "My last job was as a cocktail waitress," Margaret recalls, "and I really hated it. The work was too grinding and I didn't even get paid good.

"After paying bills and buying food, I never had enough money for the smallest luxuries. Now I have plenty left over for whatever I want."

Margaret quit waitressing when she was 26. She quit because she was pregnant. She considered having the baby, but realized it would be impossible to raise it decently because of her financial situation.

She decided to have an abortion, but when she realized she couldn't even gather enough money together for that, she dared to try streetwalking for the extra money. Once she discovered how easy it was to improve her pecuniary problems, she quit her job and became a self-employed, independent "business" woman.

"Right now, I can honestly say I've never been happier. I can afford to live in a nice apartment and buy whatever I want. If I see a pair of $60 shoes, I can buy them without feeling guilty. Before, I never would've dreamed of buying them. But the best part of my having money is that I proved my mother to be wrong. She always told me that I would never have anything. She thought I'd spend my whole life in a shabby, little apartment, struggling in a dirty bar to make ends meet — just like she did. When I was young, it upset me to hear that, but the more I heard it, the more determined I was to prove her wrong."

Margaret theorized that her mother, Helen, said those things because of the rough life she had. Helen and her husband were divorced soon after Margaret's birth and Helen worked very hard to support herself and her daughter. Helen told Margaret she wasn't good enough or pretty enough to find a decent man.

"I proved her wrong once again," Margaret excitedly blurted. "I'm going to be married in five months! I'll quit working once we get married. Between his salary and my savings, we'll have enough to live comfortably."

Margaret admits it's not the most moral job she's ever held and is looking forward to a career as a housewife, but she doesn't regret streetwalking at all. "This job has given me the strength to overcome the pain my mother has caused me. Without it, I don't think I'd have such a bright future to look forward to."

Lawyer vs. Engineer

By STEVE BOLT

FACTS: Anarchy, WW III and/or invasions by aliens.

ISSUES: Who would best serve the needs of the re-birth of Civilization; the engineer or the lawyer?

HOLDING: The engineer.

REASON: The following logical progression will assume that it is the function of the lawyer to generate contracts that dictate the way man relates to one another, to generate laws for governing the body of men and to generate a system (judicial, one might suppose) to ensure that all men act in a fair and just manner to one another and to provide punishment for those that choose to function outside the law.

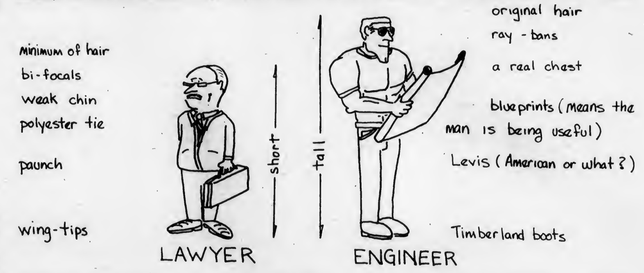
Further, we assume it is the function of the engineer to observe, analyze, understand and generate viable solutions to problems in our world. It is the engineer who is responsible for the formulation of ideas to benefit the body of man; the transposal of these ideas into practical technologies to serve humanity and whose quest it is to to continue to expand technology and the growth of the knowledge of man and his world.

If the challenge to build society is raised, will it be met by the lawyer, whose surrealistic, philosophical, pedagogic, detached incantations have brought the whole of humanity to the very brink of that terrifying oblivious void? Nay, say I!

That noble challenge will be met by the engineer, whose superior education and professional training have prepared him or her for the ultimate task of man's own Genesis II. It will be the engineer who will devise shelter for man, plan and execute a new Agrarian Age and begin again to educate the children of man (so well taught are they in sciences and arts).

Will the lawyer provide food, shelter or anything for this new man naked of the civilization of old? Lo, they will surely retort, "It is we who govern and legislate and mete out justice", "Justice?", bellows the engineer! "Is this your justice that has brought man to his knees, that has pitted him against himself, where now is your so-called justice?"

Thus, were that genetically disadvantaged band of humanoids, the lawyers, cast out from the main of the New Society and banished forever to the Isle of Crete a remote, sexually disoriented lump of rock somewhere in the Mediterranean).



Mathematics Approach Management

By SUSAN WILMARTH

If you're one of those people who read the flyers posted around Bartley Hall advertising meetings, you've probably noticed that there is a new business organization on campus — the Operations Management Society. Operations what?, you ask.

According to John Schmitt, one of the two presidents and co-founder of the organization, that response is typical. There aren't too many people at Villanova who have heard of operations management, let alone know what it is. Even most operations management majors would be hard pressed to come up with an explanation of what operations management is. However, Schmitt, with a little help from the other president and co-founder, Henry De Fina, managed to scrape together a definition which describes operations management as "a mathematical approach to management." Still confused? You're not alone.

When Schmitt and De Fina decided to start the organization, they were looking for a way, outside of the classroom, to give both operations management majors and non-majors an opportunity to find out what the field is and what it offers. They are hoping that the organization will given its members what De Fina called, "a sense of direction and general understanding." De Fina added, "No one knew what kinds of jobs were available." One of the goals of the organization is to make its members well informed about what is out there for them.

Getting the organization started hasn't been easy for Schmitt and De Fina. Their struggle began last January, when they applied to the American Institute of Decision Sciences, for a national charter. After waiting four months to receive the information, they decided that it would be more practical to keep the organization on the campus level. They contacted the Student Activities Office with a list of interested members, which at this time numbers 35, and took the steps necessary to form a campus organization.

The Operations Management Society held its first meeting a month ago and its members are in the process of planning for future activities. In the next few weeks, the organization is hoping to have a counselor from the Career Development Center speak to the members about employment opportunities. In addition, they are looking into having leaders from all areas of the business community speak at their meetings. The organization is not all work and no fun, however. Its members are planning a few fund raisers and social activities to bring its members together.

Membership in the Operations Management Society is open to all Villanova students and they welcome business majors as well as non-business majors.

An Austere Air Pervades

By MARYLU HILL

The name Three Mile Island (TMI) still makes people nervous. It brings to mind visions of "The China Syndrome," and nuclear meltdowns. But for almost four years now, TMI has been quiet, silently brooding in the hills of Harrisburg, Pa. In September, the Villanova Geographical Society toured the nucler plant, accompanied by Dr. Elaine Bosowski and Dr. Hal Leaman of the geography department.

The first glimpse of TMI was that of tall, white cooling towers; a truly awesome sight for those who appreciate technological wonders. At the main gate, a public relations man first cleared us through security, and then showed us a film on the workings of a nuclear reactor.

In talking about the "accident" of March 1979, he maintained that the danger was never that great, nor was there any real chance of much radioactivity being released into the air. He stressed the fact that much of the accident was caused by human error, as well as technological failure (a stuck valve), and insisted that greater precautions would be taken when the plant re-opened.

Finally, armed with hard hats and safety glasses, we went onto the island itself, in the middle of the Susquehanna River, where the plant is located. The reactor buildings, contain huge silent turbine engines which seem awesome. There is something spooky about standing next to a reactor containing about 100,000 gallons of radioactive water.

Despite our nuclear jokes, a serious air pervaded the plant. Signs telling workers to leave the area immediately if an alarm sounds, hung carefully on doors.

After visiting both units, our tour ended. We still joked about returning home glowing, but the tour also raised a lot of serious questions, both pro and con, about the issues of nuclear power and its radioactive waste. This was one point that our tour guide was a little vague about. It seemed that he somewhat slanted his presentation towards a pro-nuclear position, which made us wonder how much he was leaving out. But our visit made us realize the impact of nuclear power and how important it is to consider the re-opening of TMI.

Would you ever consider making your fears a friend?

I believe that our fears are meant to be not enemies but friends. But you have to know your fear if you are ever going to make a friend of it.

Take the St. Rita's "Halloween Massacre" as a case in point. Perhaps you noticed how many Villanovans became immediate co-conspirators in the imaginative exploits of the inventor who gave us this curiosity.

I say that we have made our fears unnecessry enemies with whom no dialogue, no first hand knowledge, is ever achieved. Like frozen and frightened human objects, we stand side by side with no faith-filled recognition, no real personal growth, like statues oblivious and ignorant to both healing sun and wakening shadow.

We become isolated in part because we have not really been converted by Gospel values which call us into intimacy and community and deeply sensitive personal faith. Individuals instead run in the face of fear — these nuclear nightmares, the military shadows of uniformed wars, the Tylenol terrors, the razor-bladed candies! Each of us protects our self, our very own private self. But very few in the community gather to celebrate the victory of Christ over death, and no one gathers to create in faith the healthy ways of living with fear.

But how do you, and I, deal with our fears? There is, of course, always the drug, the cheap association, the darker clusters of clique and cult which leave us feeling very protected but completely impersonal. But do we deal with fear through faith? For I believe faith and fear are good friends to one another, and that reconciliation between the two leads to fuller life for us all.

Talk to your fears. Ask them questions about their origins, their roots, and their constellation of relatives. Own up to them. Share them with your friends in ways that are playful and expressive. Give them a chance to see the light of day, and the damage that they have caused to human community (lest you bear the burden of guilt all alone!)

Above all, let your faith deal with these dark powers. You will find that faith, your own God-given faith, is indeed a great power, the source of loving and deep reconciliation, the source of full life.

Focusing On Women's Issues

By KERRY LYNCH
CAROL QUINN
and KAREN HAFFNER

What is certain is that hitherto woman's possibilities have been suppressed and lost to humanity, and that it is high time she be permitted to take her chances in her own interest and in the interest of all.

Simone de Beauvoir
The Second Sex

Women's issues are the focus of a new and dynamic organization on the Villanova campus. Highlighting the social standards of today, Villanova's Organization for Women actively explores the entire spectrum of conflicting traditional and unconventional attitudes involving women in today's society. The group presents, discusses and provides valuable information to the college community about a wide variety of women's issues.

Villanova's Organization for Women is a direct outgrowth of the Honors Program Seminar; The Female in Society, offered in the fall of 1981. Susan Amsterdam, a doctoral candidate at Bryn Mawr College, taught the psychological and social history of women in America. Because the subject matter, although controversial, gained the continued interest of many students, the organization was formed to further promote and discuss the issues of concern. As a result of its academic popularity, the course has been offered again this semester as a team-taught seminar adding the discipline of women in literature which is taught by English Professor June W. Lytel. The group is co-advised by Lytel and Amsterdam.

In the spring of 1982 the group met regularly to actively present and discuss a wide variety of women's issues. Often, guest speakers were included to facilitate a wider range of subject matters. During the final months of intense political commitment by NOW in getting the Equal Rights Amendment ratified, a speaker from Delaware County NOW came to explain the concept of the amendment and its impact on all people. A representative from the Elizabeth Blackwell Women's Health Center spoke to the group on women's health care issues and explained the philosophy behind specialized health care for women, by women.

This school year, however, the group is ready to play a more active role in airing their concerns and relating those to campus life. Considering itself pro-active, the group has begun organizing for a large scale forum in which to bring these issues to the Villanova community. The first project happened this past Wednesday when the group sponsored a rape prevention and support workshop. The presentation by the Montgomery County Rape Crisis Center was designed to make students aware of all the issues surrounding the violent crime of rape which statistically threatens everyone's life, either personally or by close association.

One of the concerns of this organization, which is feminist in its desire to create change in order that all people can fully participate in society, is in presenting its ideas and issues as concerns for both men and women.

Villanova's Organization for Women, through seminars, presentations and workshops revolving around such issues as the political and economic powerlessness of women, career choices and opportunities, awareness of women's role in society and the women's peace movement, hopes to involve anyone on campus who is interested in any of these topics.

You Bet Your Life

By ANNE McRAE

You and your friend are eating in the Pit and suddenly your friend begins coughing and clutching his throat with a frantic look on his face. Would you know what to do? Hopefully you will, after reading this.

Your friend could die within minutes unless you act rapidly. First, ask him if he can speak or cough. If he is able to speak of cough effectively then encourage him to continue coughing — don't interfere. However, if he can't speak or is making crowing noises, you're going to have to help expel the foreign object that may be lodged in his throat.

Stand slightly behind the victim with one hand on his chest letting him lean over (his head ideally should be lower than his chest). With the heel of your other hand, give four sharp, strong blows over his spine between his shoulder blades.

Check to see if he can breathe. If he can't, you're going to have to perform abominal thrusts (if the victim is very obese or pregnant then use a chest thrust).

Abdominal thrusts — Stand behind the victim and wrap your arms around his waist, grasping your left hand with your right hand. (Your hands should be placed midway between his waist and rib cage). Sharply thrust your fist into the victim's abdomen pulling upward and inward being careful not the squeeze the victim's rib cage. Thrust a total of four times, using enough strength each time to expel the obstructing object.

Chest Thrusts — Stand behind the victim and encircle his chest with your arms. Grasp your hands like before, only insure that your thumb is tucked inside your hand since a protruding thumb would injure the victim. Your hands should be placed directly over the center of his breast bone not over the delicate tip which extends into the abdomen nor over the ribs themselves, since thrusting may cause fractures which could injure an internal organ. Angling straight back toward you, deliver four strong chest thrusts as if each will expel the obstruction. Take care not to tighten your arms around the person's chest while doing this.

Assess the victim again and see if he's breathing. If the person becomes unconscious, you'll have to perform artifical respiration which won't be covered in this article (but maybe in the future).

Hey . . . what's going on? . . . we spend mid-term week in St. Croix . . . and when we get back, what do we find? . . . it's %$#*@¢ eighty degrees in the shade . . . and not a cloud in the sky . . . boy, mummy and daddy are gonna be teed off when they find they blew all that money for nothing . . . ho hum . . . speaking of spending all that money for nothing . . . we noticed that security collected a bit of overtime last weekend . . . what did they do . . . start the "mass murder" rumor themselves? . . . and furthermore . . . how can the security guards possibly be "beefed up" more than they already are? . . . while we're on the subject of insecurity . . . WKWC wants to know what really has happened to Captain Cocain . . . where did he "retire"to? . . . Bogota? . . . Studio 54? . . . we'll never tell . . . but some people who will tell you the "facts," put out a neat little sheet last week about the C-Center . . . among the more interesting gems was the one saying the school has 15,866 students . . . why does the Registrar's office say there are only 11,603? . . . another grain of truth presented was that the C-Center operated at a "net cost" of $82,837 last year . . . does net cost really mean "loss?" . . . WKWC doesn't know for sure, but that's what Webster's Third New International Dictionary (unabridged) says on page 515 . . . oh well, guess you can't always trust an "informed source" . . . and about one last fact . . . . . moving right along . . . hey dawgs, how many of you voted in that football survey? . . . 4,309 of you? . . . boy, WKWC sure has the facts this week . . . anyway, WKWC wonders why only half that number vote in the student government elections . . . maybe they should bring back football and drop student government . . . speaking of being brought back . . . WKWC hears Kenny Loggins will be echoing over in the Field House on Tuesday . . . we just love the acoustics there . . . sort of like sitting in the Holland Tunnel at rush hour . . . ah yes, another fine Union event . . . but there will be one little groupie in the audience clawing her way to the front of the stage . . . who says June Lytel's finger nails serve no purpose? . . . who knows, who cares . . .

'Dreamcoat' Shows Its True Colors

By JAYNE M. STUART

"Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat," is a musical based on the Biblical story of Joseph, and his 11 brothers. The adventures Joseph experiences, after being sold into slavery, creates a cheerful and entertaining show written by Andrew Lloyd Webber and Tim Rice, the creators of the Broadway hits "Jesus Christ Superstar" and "Evita."

A very commendable performance is given by Sharon Brown who is featured as the narrator. She has a wonderfully distinct and powerful voice that keeps the attention of the audience captive. Her smiling face and expressions set the tone for each scene. She exhibits an endless supply of energy and treats the audience to several enjoyable solos.

The star attraction is supposed to be Andy Gibb, the well-known pop singer from the '70s. Unfortunately, he is one of the drawbacks to the show. His voice still has a much too "top ten" quality and he lacks the volume and articulation necessary for the theater, much less a musical. Gibb also displays an obvious deficiency in dancing and acting abilities. The star of the show is definitely Brown, the narrator.

The music in the show is upbeat and the lyrics are creative. "There's One More Angel in Heaven" is the song the brothers sing to Jacob when they tell him Joseph is "dead." Jacob is played by Harold Shepard, whose gestures and facial expressions are funny and revealing. Although his part is a small one, Shepard adds a nice touch to the show.

Andy Gibb receives his special coat from his father Jacob in the musical.

The entire performance is an interesting fusion of old and new, ancient and modern. Pyramids and pocket watches, cameras and urns are all combined to create a comfortable balance. The mood and tone of the actors and actresses are expressed concisely in all the pieces through simple lyrics and catchy tunes. It is unique in the manner in which the brothers, acting as a sort of chorus, continually change the mode of music throughout the show. From cowboys to Frenchmen, they keep one wondering.

One of the most inventive scenes is the one which features an imitation of Elvis Presley. Michael Speero displays an incredible talent of song and dance that is amazingly accurate. This scene is a pleasure. Here the creativity of Lloyd Webber and Rice can be fully appreciated.

Many stereotypes are employed to interpret different characters and scenes, but are not used in a harmful or negative manner. The message of the play is to aspire to one's dreams and never to lose hope. It is a positive message which is reflected in all aspects of the performance. The show is very short, approximately an hour. The number of songs are limited and several are repeated. This show is definitely geared toward a younger crowd but at the same time proves enjoyable to the adult audience. "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat" is not the typical Broadway show with complex dancing and intricate songs, but it is an enjoyable, funny and entertaining musical.

"H2O," the latest LP from Daryl Hall and John Oates picks up where "Private Eyes" left off. The Philadelphia based duo have now made back-to-back albums that are similar in style. This is important because down through the years the band has felt their problem was not having a consistent, identifiable sound.

Throughout their career though, Hall and Oates have been successful in any area of music they have delved into. The duo has proven itself to be one of much versatility.
